This was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeal (Lord Esher, M.R., and A. L. Smith and Rigby, L.JJ.) affirming that of Bruce, J. Formal judgment was given in favour of the respondent, the case being in fact an appeal against a decision of the Court of Appeal in The North Britain, 42 W. R. 243, [1894] P. 77 (Lindley, A. L. Smith, and Davey, L.JJ.). The agreed statement of facts was as follows:

(1) On the 14th of June, 1895, the plaintiffs (appellants), as owners of the steamship Engineer, effected with the defendant (the respondent) (inter alios) a policy of insurance subscribed by the defendant in the sum of £100 on the hull and machinery of the steamship Engineer, valued at £8,500, for twelve months from noon on the 14th of June, 1895, to noon on the 15th of June, 1896.

(2) Attached to the said policy were certain clauses known as institute clauses, the material one, with proviso attached, being as follows: "And it is further agreed that if the ship hereby insured shall come into collision with any other ship or vessel, and the assured shall in consequence thereof become liable to pay, and shall pay, by way of damages, to any other person or persons any sum or sums not exceeding, in respect of any such collision, the value of the ship hereby insured, we, the assurers, will severally pay the assured such proportion of three-fourths of such sum or sums so paid as our respective subscriptions hereto bear to the value of the ship hereby insured, and in cases in which the liability of the ship has been contested or proceedings have been taken to limit liability with the consent in writing of two-thirds of the subscribers to this policy in amount, we will also pay a like proportion of three-fourths of the costs which the assured shall thereby incur or be compelled to pay; but when both vessels are to blame, then, unless the liability of the owners of one or both of such vessels shall become limited by law, claims under this clause shall be settled on the principle of cross liabilities as if the owners of each vessel had been compelled to pay to the owners of the other of such vessels such one-half or other proportion of latter's damages as may have been properly allowed in ascertaining the balance or sum payable by or to the assured in consequence of such collision. Provided always that this clause shall in no case extend to any sum which the assured may become liable to pay, or shall pay, for removal of obstructions under statutory powers for injury to harbours, wharves, piers, stages, and similar structures consequent on such collision or in respect of the cargo or engagements of the insured vessel or for loss of life or personal injury."

(3) On the 19th of April, 1896, whilst the said policy was in full force and effect, the steamship Engineer came into collision with the steamship Harraton near the entrance to the River Tees, and by reason of the said collision The Engineer was considerably damaged, and The Harraton sank and became a constructive total loss.

(4) The place at which The Harraton sank was within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Tees Conservancy Commissioners, who thereupon, under their statutory powers in that behalf, took the necessary steps to remove the obstruction caused by the wreck of The Harraton—in the first place by lighting and watching such wreck, and subsequently by dispersing and removing it so as to put the approaches to the river into a safe and proper condition. The total of the charges and expenses incurred by the said commissioners amounted to the sum of £1,346.

(5) An action was begun in the Admiralty Division by the owners of the steamship Harraton against the plaintiffs in the present action the owners of the steamship Engineer, and a counterclaim was entered on behalf of the owners of The Engineer; but by agreement between the parties in the said collision action both ships were deemed to have been in fault, and the damages suffered by both parties to the suit respectively, as assessed by the Registrar of the Admiralty Division, assisted by merchants, were duly paid by each to the other.

(6) The plaintiffs, as owners of the steamship Engineer, properly paid to the owners of the steamship Harraton under the said agreement £673, being a moiety of the said £1,346, for removing the obstruction caused by the wreck as being a loss or damage sustained by the owners of the steamship Harraton incidental to and arising out of the said collision; and thereafter the plaintiffs sought to recover the moiety aforesaid from their underwriters (including the defendant), but the underwriters declined to pay any part thereof, alleging that they were expressly excepted from liability in respect of the said sum by the terms of the proviso set out in paragraph 2 of the statement of facts.

The question for the determination of the court was whether the defendant was liable under the said policy to pay to the plaintiffs such proportion of three-fourths of the sum of £673 in paragraph 6 hereof mentioned as the defendant's subscription bore to the value of the ship.

The Court of Appeal held that the defendant was not liable.

EARL OF HALSBURY, L.C.—I certainly am not desirous of hearing this discussion prolonged, because for some time I have arrived at a very clear conclusion in my own mind, and I confess I adopt the paraphrase of this contract which Davey, L.J., in the case of The North Britain, put upon it. He says the clause means something of this kind: "I will reimburse you, the injuring vessel, the bill which you have to pay the injured vessel for damages; but, mind, I am not to be called upon to pay, directly or indirectly, for the removal of obstructions under statutory powers." That I believe to be a very proper reading of the language which was actually used by the parties. I agree with what Davey, L.J., appears to have said in respect to the mode in which the contract should be construed. In looking at a document between business men, I do not think it is well to look at technical rules of construction. I think it is well to look at the whole document, to look at the subject-matter with which the parties are dealing; and then to take the words in their natural and ordinary meaning and construe the document in that way. I have come to the conclusion that what the underwriters did mean to exclude in their contract of liability, was any payment of money for the removal of obstructions to navigation. These damages or this money payable, whichever it is to be called, comes practically within the description. It was a payment actually made by reason of the removal of an obstruction. Therefore, applying the test I have suggested to the contract, I cannot doubt that that was what the underwriters intended to exempt from the contract into which they entered.

Under those circumstances I think that the case (The North Britain) which is supposed to have governed the case now before your lordships does govern it. It think that case was rightly decided, and I therefore move your lordships that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

Lord MACNAGHTEN, Lord MORRIS, and Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD concurred.

Bill of sale—Goods seized to protect security—Relief against seizure—Order as to giving up bill of sale—Jurisdiction—Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), s. 7.

The grantee of a bill of sale seized the goods upon default in payment of one of the instalments of interest. The warrant authorizing the bailiff to seize directed him to take and hold possession for the amount of interest in arrear. Upon a summons by the grantor for relief under section 7 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, the judge at chambers ordered that the grantee should give up the bill of sale upon the grantor paying the principal sum with the interest then in arrear.

Held, that, as the grantee had seized merely for the purpose of protecting his security, and not for the purpose of realizing it, the judge had no jurisdiction to order him to give up the bill of sale.

Ex parte Wickens, ante, p. 385, [1898] 1 Q. B. 543, distinguished.

Appeal from an order of a judge at chambers.

On the 8th of October, 1897, Ellis gave a bill of sale over his furniture to one Shuckburgh, to secure the repayment of an advance of £30, and interest thereon at the rate of 60 per cent. per annum; and the grantor covenanted to pay the grantor the principal sum of £30 on the 8th of October, 1899, and in the meantime the sum of £1 10s. on the 8th of each month for interest. One of the monthly payments of interest having fallen into arrear the grantee by his bailiff seized the furniture, the warrant which authorized the seizure directing the bailiff to take and hold possession for £1 10s. Upon a summons taken out by the grantor under section 7 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, Darling, J., ordered the grantee to release the goods, and that the bill of sale should be handed over to the grantor, he paying to the grantee the sum of £31 10s., and the costs of the application.

The grantee appealed.

Crump, Q.C., and W. de B. Herbert (Lewis Thomas with them), for the grantee.—The learned judge had no jurisdiction to order the bill of sale to be given up. The grantee did not take possession for the purpose of realizing his security, but for the sole purpose of maintaining and protecting it. In Ex parte Wickens, ante, p. 385, [1898] 1 Q. B. 543, the grantee seized for the purpose of realizing the security, and the court held that that gave the grantor the right to redeem. That is not the case here.

Herbert Chitty, for the grantor.—The grantee seized for the purpose of realizing his security. If a grantee of a bill of sale seizes and sells, he cannot sell for the interest alone; he must sell to realize the whole debt and interest. The power of sale must be exercised once for all. The grantee cannot seize and sell for one month's interest and then seize and sell again upon a further default. If he takes steps to realize part of his security he is attempting to realize his security within the decision in Ex parte Wickens. The grantee here seized for the purpose of selling the goods for the interest in arrear, and therefore was attempting to realize the security; and the judge had jurisdiction to make the order he did.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—This appeal must be allowed. Reading the bill of sale and the Act together there is power given to the grantee to seize whenever any of the payments contracted to be made fall into arrear. In this case a month's interest, £1 10s., fell into arrear. Thereupon, in order to maintain his security so as to get payment of the £1 10s. the grantee put a man in possession. He did not put the man in to sell or realize anything under the bill of sale. In these circumstances the question is whether the judge at chambers had jurisdiction under section 7 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, to order the bill of sale to be given up. It is clear that he had jurisdiction to order the grantee to withdraw, upon payment by the grantor of the sum due for interest and costs, and the bill of sale would then continue running. but the judge ordered the bill of sale to be given up. In my opinion he had no jurisdiction to do so. In Ex parte Wickens this court decided that when a bill of sale holder takes possession, not for the purpose of maintaining his security, but for the purpose of realizing it, the judge at chambers can order the bill of sale to be given up. But that is only so where the grantee enters for the purpose of selling and realizing his security. It does not apply where the grantee enters merely for the purpose of maintaining his security. If the law were otherwise a great hardship would be inflicted upon the grantee. He would have taken a contract for the payment of interest at the rate of 60 per cent. per annum for a fixed period, and yet he would not be able during that period to take possession for the purpose of maintaining his security for the interest without at the same time vacating his security. On the other hand, if the grantee enters for the purpose of realizing the security, there is no hardship in giving the grantor the right to redeem, and so vacating the security. The appeal must therefore be allowed.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I am not so familiar with the decision in Ex parte Wickens as my brother is, for he was a party to that decision. I find that the question of fact which was raised and disposed of in that case was whether or not the bill of sale holder had entered for the purpose of realizing his security, and the court came to the conclusion as a matter of fact that he had entered for that purpose. The court then decided that, as the mortgagee had entered for the purpose of realizing his security, the mortgagor was entitled to redeem upon payment of the principal sum, with interest to date and costs, and on payment of that sum to have the security vacated. Whether or not the mortgagor would have had that right if the mortgagee had entered merely for the purpose of protecting his security it was not necessary to decide in that case. I see that Chitty, L.J., said that "it may be a question whether, upon a demand for the production of the last receipt for rent, and upon failure without reasonable excuse to comply with that demand, and an entry into possession in consequence, the grantee may not maintain that he entered for the purpose of protecting his security. But I have no hesitation in saying that the seizure in this case was for the purpose of realizing the security—in other words, for the purpose of enforcing payment." I gather from that language that, according to that learned judge's view, if the entry had been merely for the purpose of protecting the security the equitable doctrine as to the right to redeem would not have applied. I draw the same inference from the judgments of the other Lords Justices. In these circumstances it seems to me that, the entry here having been made merely for the purpose of protecting the security, and not for the purpose of realizing it, this order should not have been made.

Appeal allowed.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 19.—LINDLEY, M.R., read the judgment of the court as follows: This is an appeal from the decision of Kekewich, J. The question raised by this appeal turns upon whether the decision of the House of Lords in the case of Lashley v. Hog applies to it or not. Kekewich, J., has treated that decision as not applicable to the present case, and he has decided that a change of domicil has not affected the rights acquired by two French people in each other's unsettled movable property by their marriage in France. In order to appreciate Lashley v. Hog, and its true bearing on the case before us, it is necessary to understand how at the date of that decision the law of Scotland stood as regards the effect of marriage on the movable property of the wife. By the Scotch law, on the marriage of two persons domiciled in Scotland the existing and after-acquired movable property of both husband and wife was regarded as a common fund (communio bonorum) divisible in certain shares on the death of either of them. But the whole of this so-called common fund was at the disposal of the husband during the marriage, and was liable to the payment of his debts. During the marriage neither his wife nor his children had any right to any part of it. But the law applicable to this so-called communio bonorum did not depend in any way on whether any of the movable property which constituted it came from the wife or not. The proportion, if any, in which she contributed to it was of no importance. The whole was the husband's property, and his inability to dispose of the whole of it by will, and the rights to it which arose on the death of himself or his wife, in no way depended on the amount of her contribution, if any, to the common stock. Assuming a communio bonorum to exist, the right of the wife and children to it on his death, or, in other words, the distribution of the communio bonorum on the death of the husband, would on general principles of law be determined by the Scotch Law of Succession to the movable property of married men or widowers. So the persons to take the wife's share, if any, of the communio on her death would be decided by the Law of Succession as applied to her share. But when the question is, as it was in Lashley v. Hog, whether on the wife's death in her husband's lifetime any part of his property became hers, or became payable to persons claiming through her as if it were her property, it is very difficult to understand upon what principle recourse is had to the Law of Succession. Apart from authority we should have thought that the matrimonial law of the place where the parties were domiciled when they married, and not the law of the domicil of the husband on the wife's death, would have been the law to apply to such a question as that.

We pass now to Lashley v. Hog, which is reported also in the appendix to Robertson's Law of Succession (No. III.), p. 414. Many questions were raised and decided on that appeal, but the only one which concerns us on the present occasion is the effect of the change of domicil on the rights of married persons to their respective unsettled movable properties. Mr. and Mrs. Hog, both of whom were English, married in England. Her unsettled movable property, existing and after-acquired, became his, and she had no right to his movable property except what she might acquire under the Statute of Distributions if he died intestate. Mr. and Mrs. Hog had several children, and went to Scotland and became domiciled there, and they both died there. His wife predeceased him. One of their daughters married a Mr. Lashley. Mr. Hog had amassed a large fortune, and he left a will making provisions for his children. Mrs. Lashley, however, refused to take anything under her father's will, and insisted on her rights under the Scotch law. Those rights were, as she insisted: (1). A share of what her mother became entitled to in the communio bonorum when she died; (2) A share of her father's property at the time of his death. She succeeded in establishing her right to a share of her father's estate in a previous litigation (4 Pat. 583). Owing to circumstances not mentioned here she got the whole legitim (see p. 609). Her claim to her share of what her mother became entitled to when she died remained to be decided, and that was one of the questions before the House of Lords in Lashley v. Hog. The House of Lords decided in her favour, reversing the decision of the Scotch Court on this point. The judgment of Lord Eldon is extremely long, dealing with various matters which do not bear on the question we have to consider. We have all studied that judgment with great care in order to ascertain the real grounds on which his decision on this point was based. The case was argued for the appellant, Mrs. Lashley, on the ground that, her father being a domiciled Scotchman when his wife died, the distribution of property on the dissolution of the marriage must be regulated by the law of the place of the domicil of the married pair at that time. The previous decision in favour of Mrs. Lashley's claim to legitim—i.e., her share of her father's estate on his death—was relied upon, and it was urged that no distinction could be made between a wife's share and a child's share. The argument for the respondent was to the effect that the destination of the movable property of married persons on the dissolution of the marriage depended on the law of the place where they were domiciled when they married; and that the death of the wife in the lifetime of her husband did not deprive him of what became his on his marriage. These were shortly the two views presented to the House of Lords for decision. The House adopted the view presented by the appellant, and held that on the dissolution of the marriage by the death of the wife a portion of the husband's property became divisible amongst those persons who would have become entitled to it by the law of Scotland if the husband and wife had been domiciled in Scotland when they married. The claim of the daughter to her share of her father's movable property on his death is intelligible enough. It is a mere illustration of the well-settled rule that the law of a person's domicil regulates the succession to his movable property. But the claim of the daughter to what became divisible on her mother's death cannot be explained on any such principle; for, although when that share became divisible the mother was dead, yet the father was not; and it was a part of his property which the daughter claimed and was held entitled to. The decision in her favour necessarily involves the view that the change of domicil affected the matrimonial rights of the husband and wife, and this was plainly what both Lord Eldon and Lord Rosslyn meant to decide, and what the House of Lords did decide (see 4 Paton 611-619). Lord Eldon said distinctly (p. 617) that it was best to hold that the wife's rights shifted with the domicil of her husband, and that was the basis of the judgment. It is plain that he was much influenced by the difficulty of making any distinction between the rights of a wife who survived her husband and the rights of those who claimed her share if she died in his lifetime (p. 615). Lord Rosslyn concurred in Lord Eldon's judgment, and repudiated the idea that marriage imported any implied contract which a subsequent change of domicil could not affect.

It is impossible to escape from the conclusion that the change of domicil was held to have altered the respective rights of both husband and wife with respect to their unsettled movable properties. She acquired and he lost rights by the change even during his life. This decision is binding on us. It is true that there are several material differences between the Scotch and French matrimonial laws of property, the wife having more extensive rights under the law of France than she has under the law of Scotland. But these differences do not warrant us in holding that the law of the matrimonial domicil can prevail after such domicil has been changed. It is not altogether satisfactory to hold that a change of domicil cannot affect an express contract embodying the law of the matrimonial domicil; but that a change of domicil does affect the application of that law if not embodied in an express contract. But after all there is some practical convenience in holding that a change of domicil changes the rights of husband and wife as regards their respective unsettled movable properties, just as it changes their rights to obtain judicial decrees for separation and divorce, and their testamentary powers. In America and in Scotland this view has prevailed; although on the continent it has been repudiated as opposed to sound legal principle. After Lashley v. Hog we do not consider the question open to judicial review in this country. We cannot regard the decision as based only on the law of Scotland. It decided a most important principle of private international law. If anything turns on it, there is no doubt that in this case the lady acquiesced in the change of domicil. The appeal, therefore, must be allowed, and the declaration made by Kekewich must be altered accordingly. The costs of the appeal will be costs in the summons.

Appeal allowed.

A municipal corporation is not entitled to oppose a Bill promoted by a gas company in Parliament without first complying with the requirements of section 4 of the Municipal Corporations (Borough Funds) Act, 1872, when the Bill leaves untouched the power of the corporation to have fixed by arbitration under section 24 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871, the price of the gas used by the corporation.

Attorney-General v. Mayor of Brecon, 10 Ch. D. 204, 27 W. R. Dig. 137, discussed.

Motion.

This was an application by the Swansea Gas Co. as relators to restrain the Corporation of Swansea from applying the borough funds and rates in payment of the costs or expenses of opposing in Parliament a Bill promoted by the gas company without having first complied with the provisions of the Municipal Corporations (Borough Funds) Act, 1872.

The gas company was incorporated in 1861, and by a provisional order obtained by the company in 1888 a maximum charge of 3s. 6d. per 1,000 cubic feet was fixed as being chargeable by the company to private consumers, and the dividend payable by the company was limited to a fixed per cent.

By virtue of section 24 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871, the gas company were under obligation to supply the corporation as the local authority with gas for the public lamps in their district at a price to be settled by agreement, "and in case of difference by arbitration, regard being had to the circumstances of the case and the prices charged to private consumers in the district" (section 24).

The Bill as promoted by the company did away with the maximum charge payable by a private consumer and the fixed dividend, and substituted a sliding scale, by which as the dividends of the company increased the price of gas was to decrease, and as the price of gas above the standard charge increased, the dividend should decrease.

Since this motion had been opened the Bill had come before a Committee of the House of Lords, and the corporation were represented by counsel, but in the result only some minor alterations were made in the Bill, and the bulk of the corporation's contentions were rejected.

Swinfen Eady, Q.C., Macmorran, Q.C., and E. Knowles Corrie, for the motion.—As the corporation have not complied with the provisions of the Borough Funds Act, 1872, s. 4, they are not entitled to spend the rates on opposing this Bill: Reg. v. Mayor of Sheffield, 19 W. R. 1159, L. R. 6 Q. B. 652; Attorney-General v. Mayor of Brecon, 10 Ch. D. 204.

Vernon Smith, Q.C., and R. J. Parker, for the defendants.—The Bill affects the price of the gas used by the corporation, and as such affects the ratepayers, and the corporation are entitled to oppose the Bill so as to protect the latter. The case falls within the principle of Attorney-General v. Mayor of Brecon and Reg. v. Mayor of Sheffield.

Swinfen Eady, Q.C., in reply.

NORTH, J.—In this case the relators who have put the Attorney-General in motion are the Swansea Gas Co. and the defendants are the corporation.

The gas company brought a Bill into Parliament for the purpose of making certain alterations in the law, and the corporation presented a petition against that Bill raising ten or a dozen grounds of objection to it. A good many of the grounds of objection have been disposed of. They have all been dealt with, in fact, because since the matter was before me last week it has been before the committee, and all these various points have been disposed of, mostly against the corporation. I do not think the decision of the committee is conclusive against the corporation in every sense, because taking one clause as an instance, the corporation desired to have a saving clause inserted. The promoters objected to it because they said there was nothing to save; the Act as it stood did not interfere with the powers or privileges of the corporation. The committee heard the arguments and decided against the insertion of any such clause. Of course that might have been because they decided there was nothing to call for it, or that on the merits of the matter it was better left out. But though it would have been open to counsel to raise the point before me that the opposition was well-founded, although the committee had decided against the claim—although I agree that such argument, if there had been any foundation for it, might very properly have been introduced here, no such point has been made on any of these various matters except one.

The one objection made now is this—that the corporation had a right to oppose because there was a provision in the Bill that interfered with, or might interfere with, the sum they would have to pay in respect of the supply of gas by the plaintiff company, the relators, to them and to the other inhabitants of the town. The rights of a corporation to oppose a Bill in Parliament out of the borough funds under the Municipal Corporations Act was the subject of considerable discussion in the case of Reg. v. The Mayor of Sheffield, which has been referred to. In that case the learned judges of the Court of Queen's Bench came to the conclusion that certain steps which were taken by the corporation, however meritorious and proper in themselves, were not of such a character that the corporation were justified in paying the expenses of those proceedings out of the borough fund, and the following year, no doubt in consequence of that decision, an enabling Act was passed —viz., the Borough Funds Act of 1872. [The learned judge then read sections 2 and 4 of that Act, and continued:] Now these necessary preliminaries or formalities provided for by that section have not been complied with in any way. If they had been, no doubt the corporation might have stood in a very different position in opposing this Bill in Parliament. But none of these have been had recourse to, and the corporation do not get any benefit from that Act. [The learned judge then read section 8, and continued:] Nothing turns on the Act itself. There is a saving clause preserving any rights the corporation had in fact, but it does not give them any new right.

Now, when we come to consider the various grounds which were put forward as justifying the opposition by the corporation to this Bill, the only one that has been urged before me is that the effect of the Bill was to alter certainly or possibly the amount which the corporation might have to pay in respect of their gas. Is that a matter with respect to which the words of the saving clause of section 8 have any application? I do not think they have. I think that the case of Reg. v. Mayor of Sheffield is a very strong authority. It is a case which led to a change in the law, but a change which, as I said, has not been utilized on this occasion. But I wish to refer more particularly to the decision of the late Master of the Rolls in Attorney-General v. Mayor of Brecon. I should say before doing so that the question of payment is merely this: According to the law as it now stands the corporation have to pay for all gas supplied to them for the lighting of the streets and their own buildings and so on, and a mode of payment is fixed by section 24 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871. [The learned jndge referred to that section, and continued:] Now, it was proposed by the Bill as brought forward that there should be an alteration in the mode of charging for gas. It was proposed to introduce what is called a sliding scale, by which instead of there being a fixed maximum amount payable by way of dividend it might be increased in a certain ratio having regard to a diminution in the price to be charged to customers. That did not affect the corporation at all under the section I have just referred to except, of course, that in any arbitration to fix the amount to be paid the price which private consumers were charged was to be taken into consideration. Then is the right of the corporation to have the gas at the old rate one which is interfered with or taken away by the Act? I think it clearly is not. That right to have the price fixed by arbitration is not touched in any way; in my opinion there was no right attacked which has operation given to it by either the old law existing prior to the passing of the 1872 Act or saved by section 8 of that Act.

That matter was gone into very fully before the Master of the Rolls in Attorney-General v. Mayor of Brecon. The view he took was that independently of section 92 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, a corporation that was attacked had a right to defend itself, and he went into various points dealing with their position and saying in what way such right of defence existed. First of all he refers to the possibility of some attempt being made actually to destroy the corporation itself. He pointed out that this was a thing they would be perfectly justified in resisting. Then there was another way in which it might have been attacked. There might be an attempt to revoke its charter. That, again, he points out, is a matter, of course, they must have a right to resist. Then he says, "What is the principle upon which corporations should be allowed to defend themselves? There are decisions which go expressly to defending their property from attack and defending their existence from attack; Does not the principle go further? The existence of a municipal corporation is not merely for the purpose of affixing a seal, but for the purpose of the government of the town, and therefore if their duties and rights of government are interfered with their existence is to that extent interfered with, though it is not the actual existence of the corporation. It is the existence of their corporate powers which in fact goes to make up the entire existence of a corporation, and it appears to me that a corporation has the right to defend its powers when attacked upon the same principle that it has the right to defend its actual existence from attack." Then, after some remarks upon the particular topics which were the subject of decision in that case, he says: "Is it to be supposed that an individual or a company can present a Bill to Parliament for taking away those privileges and duties of the corporation and that the corporation shall have no power of defending itself, shall have no right to expend the money necessary for defending its privileges and duties as a corporation? It appears to me that the mere statement of the question shows that there is no valid distinction between the right of property, which, after all, is only held by the corporation as trustee for public purposes, and the powers and privileges forming a larger and possibly a smaller share of the government of the town which are conferred on the corporation, and with which it is sought to interfere. As I said before, it seems to me that on principle you must imply a right in the corporation to defend itself from such an attack." A little further on he says: "The right of the corporation to defend itself from attack of this kind extends not merely to property, not merely to the existence of the corporation in the smallest sense—that is, to the continued existence of the corporation as such, but to its existence also in the larger sense—that is, to the existence of the corporation with all its rights and privileges; and that an attack on a substantial portion of its privileges, rights, and duties is as much within the purview of the authorities as an attack on its property or its mere existence." Then again he says some pages further on: "It seems to me, therefore, looking at the authorities, that whether we take the one view or the other, whether we consider that under the words expenses necessarily incurred, or similar words used in the Act, this incidental expenditure is included, or whether we consider that the general law as to the rights of trustees defending their property and privileges remain unaffected; in either way, if there is an attack by proposed private legislation on the rights, privileges, and duties of a corporation, that corporation is entitled to defend itself before Parliament." Then he referred to the Borough Funds Act, but said very little about it, because it was entirely outside the case he had to deal with. Then he says: "I now come to the circumstances of the case, and I must say I think it a very strong case, and quite distinguishable from all the cases to which I have been referred, because in this case the corporation had a special series of powers and duties which were much interfered with by the Bill in question." Then he devoted some pages to dealing with those specific and special matters and details which I need not read, and I will only refer to a passage near the end of the judgment, in which he says: "I think I have said enough to show that this is the kind of active interference with the corporation itself, and with its rights, duties, and property, which entirely puts the case out of the class of cases which I have been considering. It really comes much closer to the other class of cases—namely, where an action is brought against the corporation to recover from it a part of its property or to deprive it of a part of its privileges."

Now, do the powers of the corporation, as fully as they are set out and defined there, include the power to oppose a Bill because it contemplates an alteration in the rate to be charged for gas—the existing law which is not proposed even to be interfered with by the Bill being that the price to be paid by the corporation is a subject-matter for arbitration. It seems to me that it would be ridiculous to say that a Bill proposing to alter the scale, but leaving the right to settlement by arbitration untouched, would be an attack on a substantial portion of the privileges, rights, or duties of the Corporation of Swansea. Under the circumstances I am of opinion that the expenditure of the borough fund in opposition to the Bill is not justified.

ASTBURY v. ASTBURY. (a.)

Limitations, Statute of—Mortgage of land—Arrears of interest—Acknowledgment by one of the two executors and devisees in trust of the mortgagor—3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42.

The defendants A. and N. were the executors and devisees in trust of S., who died in 1887 having in 1885 mortgaged certain land belonging to her to the plaintiff. On the 19*th of May,* 1897, the defendant A., without the consent of the defendant N., executed an acknowledgment admitting that the whole of the principal moneys and interest secured by the mortgage were then due and owing to the plaintiff.

Held, that such acknowledgment could not be treated as the valid act of both trustees with reference to the land vested in them; that it did not prevent the operation of the statute; and that six years' arrears of interest only could be recovered.

This was a foreclosure action in which the question arose as to what arrears of interest the plaintiff, as equitable mortgagee, was entitled to recover.

The plaintiff was the equitable mortgagee by deposit of title-deeds relating to certain land which belonged to a certain Martha Shenton, now deceased, and the deposit was made by way of mortgage to secure £500 and interest at 5 per cent. Martha Shenton died on the 26th of November, 1887, having made her will by which she appointed the defendants her executors, and devised to them her real estate upon certain trusts under which infants were now interested.

A question arose after her death as to the validity of this deposit, but it was established in proceedings brought in this court, and by an order dated the 13th of May, 1897, it was declared that the said title-deeds were, on the 16th of March, 1885, deposited by her with the present plaintiff to secure the repayment of £500 and interest, and that such sum and interest thereon to the 16th of March, 1897, was still due and owing to the plaintiff on her security. Then on the 26th of July, 1897, this summons was taken out by the plaintiff asking for foreclosure.

On the 19th of May, 1897, Samuel Astbury, the brother of the plaintiff, one of the defendants, and an executor and trustee of the said will, executed a document in writing by which, describing himself as executor of Martha Shenton, and also devisee of the real estate, he acknowledged that on the 16th of March, 1885, the said deeds were deposited, and he further admitted that the whole sum, and also interest thereon to the 16th of March, 1897, were then due and owing from the estate of Martha Shenton to Sarah Astbury, the plaintiff, in respect of the principal sum and interest secured by the deposit of deeds.

The order for foreclosure which was made was in common form, not directed against the executors by way of seeking recovery of the debt due by the testatrix out of her personal estate, but to have an account taken and for equitable relief by way of foreclosure.

The question was raised in chambers, upon a summons by the defendant Newry, whether the above acknowledgment was effectual, the second defendant, Mr. Newry, claiming the benefit of the Statutes of Limitation, and the summons was adjourned into court.

Austen-Cartmell, for the summons.—Primâ facie only six years' interest are recoverable in a foreclosure suit: Hunter v. Nockolds, 1 Mac. & G. 640; Sinclair v. Jackson, 1 W. R. 400, 17 Beav. 405. Assuming that one trustee can give an acknowledgment so as to bind the land, he cannot do so with the express dissent of his co-trustee: Midgley v. Midgley, 41 W. R. 659, [1893] 3 Ch. 282. S. Astbury cannot say he was agent of himself and his co-trustee: Bolding v. Lane, 11 W. R. 386, 1 De G. J. & S. 122; Chinnery v. Evans, 13 W. R. 20, 11 H. L. Cas. 115. Both trustees must concur: In re Fitzmaurice, 15 Ir. Ch. Rep. 445; Lord St. John v. Boughton, 9 Sim. 219. The case of In re Macdonald, 45 W. R. 628, [1897] 2 Ch. 181, was decided on Lord Tenterden's Act, and does not affect the question.

Micklem, for the mortgagee.—The mortgagee is entitled to the arrears in full: In re Rownson, 33 W. R. 604, 29 Ch. D. 358. In re Macdonald covers this case. This acknowledgment binds the estate, even if it does not bind the co-executor: Midgley v. Midgley; Smith v. Evans, 28 Beav. 59, 8 W. R. Ch. Dig. 43; In re Hollingshead, 36 W. R. 660, 37 Ch. D. 651. [STIRLING, J., referred to Lepard v. Vernon, 2 Ves. & B. 51.] In re Ingham, 41 W. R. 235, [1893] 1 Ch. 352. S. Astbury and Newry are distinct persons within the meaning of the section. Lord St. John v. Boughton is an express authority, and was followed in Toft v. Stephenson, 1 De G. M. & G. 28. Roddam v. Morley, 4 W. R. 347, 5 W. R. 510, 2 K. & J. 336, 1 De G. & J. 1, shows that an acknowledgment by one party liable binds all: Pears v. Laing, 19 W. R. 653, L. R. 12 Eq. 41.

STIRLING, J. (after stating the facts), said: Now, the statute with which I have to deal is 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42, which provides, reading it with reference to this particular matter, that "no arrears of interest in respect of any sum of money charged upon any land, or any damages in respect of any such arrears of interest shall be recovered by any distress, action or suit, but within six years next after the same respectively shall have become due, or next after an acknowledgment of the same in writing shall have been given to the person entitled thereto or his agent, signed by the person by whom the same was payable or his agent."

I may observe here that this enactment, differing in this respect from section 40, deals with principal, and that no mention is made of part payment, so that it would seem that part payment or an instalment of interest would not prevent the operation of the statute as to the balance. For the purposes of the present judgment I assume, but without deciding it, that one executor may pay a statute-barred debt notwithstanding the dissent of the other, and also that one executor can give a valid acknowlegment notwithstanding the like dissent. These powers, if they exist, must depend upon the legal right which one executor has to dispose of his testator's estate so as to bind the others. No such right exists in the case of trustees. All trustees must concur in the exercise of the powers conferred on them with reference to the trust estate.

Although, therefore, the acknowledgement of the 19th of May, 1897, may have been effectual on the part of Samuel Astbury in his capacity of executor with reference to the personal estate of the deceased, I think it cannot be regarded as a valid act on the part of both trustees with reference to the estate. I ought to mention that not only did Mr. Newry not concur in the acknowledgment, but that his concurrence was not asked, and from what took place at the conclusion of the trial leading to the order of the 10th of May, 1897, it may well be that Samuel Astbury, the co-executor, was perfectly aware that he was not likely to concur in any such acknowledgment. In these circumstances the question is whether the acknowledgment, being assumed to be effectual as to personality, is also effectual so as to prevent the operation of the statute as to the land? On this particular point the only decision referred to in argument was that of Lord Westbury in Bolding v. Lane, in which he decided that an acknowledgment by a mortgagor of more than six years' arrears of interest due on first mortgage does not prevent a subsequent mortgagee from relying on the Statute of Limitations. In giving judgment the Lord Chancellor said: "In his reasons for this decision the Vice-Chancellor apparently holds that the words in the 42nd section—viz., 'the person by whom the same was payable,' mean the person who was liable at law to pay the interest under the contract—that is, the mortgagor or his representative, and accordingly he considers the second mortgagee as not included within those words." After some discussion he continues: "In truth these words of the statute, far from having the limited construction of the Vice-Chancellor, appear to have been selected as a description capable of including not only every person liable to be sued at law, but every person who, having an interest in the land, ought to be charged, or might be properly sued as a defendant in a suit in equity brought to enforce payment of the principal and interest out of such land. If this be so, it follows as a necessary consequence that it was not the intention, nor is it the effect, of the section to give to the mortgagor or other person who is 'by law compellable to pay the interest' a statutory power to deprive by his acknowledgment given to a prior incumbrancer the subsequent incumbrancers of the benefit of the statute, which would be monstrously unjust, but to make a plain and simple rule that no person having a charge on lands shall recover more than six years' interest on such charge against any other person having an interest in the lands without an acknowledgment in writing signed by such person or by some former owner from whom the interest is derived."

Now, if that be taken literally as an interpretation of the statute, then an acknowledgment by an executor does not fall within it. But it may be that, having regard to some decisions which I am about to mention, the words of the Lord Chancellor are to be taken with some qualification.

However that may be the decision which has never been reversed is binding on me, and it seems to me to support the view that an acknowledgment made by an executor is not effectual to keep alive a debt against a devisee of real estate, for if an acknowledgment by a mortgagor who has an interest in land does not prevent the mortgagor claiming the benefit of the statute why should an acknowledgment by an executor who has no such interest be more effectual. This seems to me to be in accordance with the decisions with reference to payment on various Statutes of Limitation. For example, in Chinnery v. Evans it was held in the House of Lords that payment of interest on a mortgage comprising several estates by a receiver appointed in a mortgagees action for the rents of one of those estates operates under section 40 of the statute I have now to consider, to keep alive the mortgage debt against the others.

It was held in Roddam v. Morley that payment by a tenant for life of interest on a specialty of his testator in which the heirs were bound was sufficient under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42 to keep alive the debt as against the remaindermen.

A similar decision is In re Hollingshead in respect of payment of interest on a simple contract debt, the statute applicable being 21 Jac. 1, c. 16.

It will be observed, however, that in all these cases the position or interest of the person who made the payment was such that he might fairly be held to represent the other persons interested in the land.

On the other hand it was held by Turner, L.J., in Fordham v. Wallis, 1 W. R. 118, 10 Hare 217, that payment of interest on a debt of a testator by executors who were also devisees in trust of the real estate, though it kept the debt alive against the personal estate had not the same effect against the real estate, the relative statute being that of James 1. The Vice-Chancellor, however, followed the case of Putnam v. Bates, 3 Russ. 188, and on p. 228 he says: "The case rests upon the decisions in Atkins v. Tredgold, 2 B. & C. 23, and Slater v. Lawson, 1 B. & Ad. 396, and the principle of these cases was this—that one party was not to be bound by the admissions of another, except in cases of continuing joint contract. This principle is surely founded in justice. Apart from purely legal considerations, it cannot, I think, be doubted that it ought not to be in the power of any person by his admission to revive a right against another which, but for that admission, would have been wholly extinguished, as was the case in Channell v. Ditchburn, 5 M. & W. 494. But then it is said that this principle ought not to have been applied to cases such as Putnam v. Bates and the present case, and that the liability of the real estate was so connected with the liability of the personal estate as to preclude the application of the principle; but I think that what we have to consider in these cases is, the act of the person and not the position of the estate; for the existence or non-existence of the demand depends upon the act of the person and not upon the relative liability of the property. I adopt, therefore, the principle of Putnam v. Bates."

Then he went on to consider the various grounds of distinction, and deals (at p. 230) with the fact that the executors were also trustees of the real estate: "It is then said that as to the fee of these estates, or, at all events, the life interest in them, the plaintiff's debt has been kept alive by the payments of interest made by the executors, these executors being also trustees of the life estate. But although the executors and trustees are the same persons, they fill wholly different characters, and it is, therefore, I think, necessary upon this point to examine the character in which the payments were made. Looking at the evidence with that view, I feel no doubt that these payments were made by the executors in their character of executors and in that character only, and I am of opinion, therefore, that the real estate is not affected by those payments."

It was also held by the late Lord Chelmsford, L.C., in Coope v. Cresswell, 15 W. R. 242, L. R. 2 Ch. App. 112, reversing the decision of Kindersley, V.C., that payment of interest on a specialty debt by executors of the debtor was insufficient under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c.

42, s. 5, to keep the debt alive against devisees of the real estate.

Being of opinion that the acknowledgment of the 19th of May, 1897, cannot be treated as the valid act of both trustees with reference to the land vested in them in trust, I also think that even if it is effectual so as to give rise to rights against the personal estate, it cannot prevent the operation of the statute against the real estate. Consequently, only six years' arrears of interest are recoverable in the present action.

Q. B. Div.
(Wright and Channell, JJ.) April 28, 29.

In re THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF SURGEONS. (a.)

Inland revenue—Income tax—Bodies corporate or unincorporate—Exemption—Property appropriated for promotion of science—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 51), s. 11 (3).

By section 11 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885, a duty of 5 per cent. is imposed upon the annual value, income, or profits of all property, real and personal, belonging to or vested in any body corporate or unincorporate during the year of assessment, after deducting the costs and expenses of the management of such property, subject to the exemption from duty in sub-section 3 in the case of "property which, or the income or profits whereof, shall be legally appropriated and applied for any purpose connected with any religious persuasion, or for any charitable purpose, or for the promotion of education, literature, science, or the fine arts."

The Royal College of Surgeons was established by Royal Charter in the year 1800 as a body corporate for the promotion of the art and science of surgery and the encouragement of the study thereof. It is also the custodian, at its own expense, of the Hunterian Collection, which is national property. The college consists of general offices, an examination hall, a library, a museum which contains the above collection, and the conservator's official residence.

For some time past the purposes of the college had been mainly the examination of persons for certificates of proficiency in surgery, and the largest source of income and the surplus of expenditure had arisen from such examinations.

Held, that the general offices, the examination hall, and the library were liable to be assessed under the above section; but that the museum and the conservator's official residence came within the exception provided by sub-section 3.

In this case the Royal College of Surgeons petitioned to be discharged from an assessment made under the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885, on the ground that the college is an institution the income whereof is legally appropriated and applied for the promotion of education and science.

The petition showed as follows:

1. That by the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885, it is enacted that there shall be levied and paid to her Majesty, in respect of all real and personal property which shall have belonged to or been vested in any body corporate or unincorporate during the yearly period ending on the 5th day of April, 1885, or during any subsequent yearly period ending on the same day in any year, a duty at the rate of £5 per centum upon the annual value, income, or profits of such property accrued to such body corporate, or unincorporate in the same yearly period, after deducting therefrom all necessary outgoings, including the receiver's remuneration and costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred in the management of such property, subject to exemption from such duty in favour of property of the description following, that is to say—

Property which, or the income or profits whereof, shall be legally appropriated and applied for the benefit of the public at large;

Property which, or the income or profits whereof, shall be legally appropriated and applied for the promotion of education, literature, science, or the fine arts.

2. That the petitioners are a body corporate established by Royal Charter in the year 1800.

3. That the objects of the petitioner's incorporation as specified in the said Royal Charter are the benefit of the commonweal of this kingdom by the promotion of the art and science of surgery, and the due promotion and encouragement of the study and practice of the said art and science of surgery.

4. That further powers and privileges have from time to time been conferred upon the petitioners by subsequent Royal Charters, the object with which such further powers and privileges were granted being in the said Royal Charters expressed to be more effectually to promote and encourage the study and practice of the said art and science of surgery.

5. That by the said charter divers obligations and duties are imposed upon the petitioners' corporation for the benefit of the public at large and the promotion and encouragement of the said art and science of surgery.

6. That the petitioners are, under terms imposed by Government, the custodians at their own expense of the "Hunterian Collection," which is national property.

7. That on the 24th day of June, 1894, the annual value or income which had accrued to the petitioners during the yearly period ending on that date from real property belonging to or vested in them during such yearly period was £7,200. The total value of the petitioners' invested personal estate at the same date was £187,195 17s. 11d., and the income or profits thereof accrued to the petitioners during the said yearly period was £5,833 5s. 7d.

8. The whole of such property, real and personal, or the income or profits thereof was legally appropriated and applied for the benefit of the public at large or for the promotion of science, literature, or education.

9. That the petitioners were called upon by the Commissioners of the Inland Revenue to deliver an account in accordance with section 17 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1883, and did deliver such account, thereby claiming that all their property real and personal was entitled to exemption from assessment or duty, and alternately that divers portions thereof were entitled to such exemption as by the said account more particularly appears.

10. The petitioners were notwithstanding assessed by the said commissioners at £3,161, and required to pay as duty thereon the sum of £158 1s.

11. That the petitioners were compelled to pay the said sum of £158 1s., and have paid the same.

12. The sum of £3,161 includes the following which the petitioners had alternately claimed to be entitled to exemption. The sum of £300, being the annual value of that part of the library of the petitioners, situate within the premises Nos. 40, 41, and 42, Lincoln's-inn-fields. The sum of £250, being the annual value of the official residence of the conservator of the petitioner's museum, which contains among other things the said Hunterian Collection. Such residence has, through other portions of the college premises, internal access to the said museum. The sum of £200, being the annual value of premises No. 39, Lincoln's-inn-fields, being another portion of the petitioners' said library.

13. Apart from their claim to total exemption the petitioners submit that in any event the above property is entitled to exemption from duty being property which, or the income or profits whereof, is legally appropriated and applied for the benefit of the public at large or for the promotion of science, literature, or education.

The petitioners therefore prayed that the said assessment should be discharged by reason of the same being assessed upon property entitled to exemption from duty, or that the amount of the assessment any duty be reduced to such sum as the court may order, and that the respondents should be ordered to repay them the said sum of £158 1s., or the sum by which such duty should be reduced.

Sir Edward Clarke, Q.C. (J. R. Paget with him), for the petitioners.

Sir Richard Webster, A.G. (Danckwerts with him), for the Crown.

During the course of the arguments the following cases were cited: Society of Writers to the Signet v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 2 Tax. Cas. 257; Tailors of Glasgow v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 24 Sc. L. Rep. 516; In re Bootham Ward Strays, 40 W. R. 632, [1892] 2 Q. B. 152; Linen and Woollen Drapers Case, 58 L. T. Rep. 949, 36 W. R. Dig. 9; Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Forrest, 39 W. R. 33, 15 App. Cas. 334.

WRIGHT, J.—In this case the section of the Act of 1885 provides for an exemption from taxation on "Property which, or the income or profits whereof, shall be legally appropriated and applied for the promotion of science." Those are the material words in this case.

Now, two classes of cases may occur in relation to this matter; first of all, it is possible that there may be an institution or foundation of all the property and income of which it may be said that it is within the exemption on the ground that as a whole the property is held solely or mainly for the purposes of science. I introduce that word "mainly" from the language of Lord Watson in the case of the Institution of Civil Engineers, 39 W. R. 33, 15 App. Cas. 334. Where the property as a whole is held solely or mainly on trust for the purpose of science it seems to me to be established by that case that it is not essential that there should be any specific conveyance of property as a whole or any declaration of trust, affecting it as a whole, for any particular purpose if in substance it can be gathered that the objects are mainly the promotion of science. I think that is not this case. It seems to me that on the cases which have been cited to us, and on a consideration of the original and subsequent charters which have been granted to the Royal College of Surgeons, and having regard to other matters to which I will advert presently, it cannot be said that at the present time the property of the college is property the income whereof is legally appropriated and applied for the purposes of science. No doubt in the original charter the Crown recognizes and intends that the objects of the corporation shall be scientific, and, I should say, mainly scientific at that time. The actual objects are to be gathered, however, not only from the original charter, but also from the subsequent charters and from the bye-laws which have been made under the authority of those charters, and which show that at the present day, at any rate, and for a long time past, the purposes of the college have been, to my mind, mainly the examination of persons for certificates of proficiency in surgery. If we look at the balance-sheet it appears that by far the largest source of income and surplus of expenditure arises from the examinations. It seems to me that the evidence fails to show that the substantial or main object of the existence of the college as a whole is now the promotion of science as distinguished from this business of examinations.

I think we are bound by the cases which have been cited to us to hold that, in so far as its real purpose of existence is the examination of candidates of this kind, we ought not to regard it as existing for a scientific purpose. Therefore, on the whole I think it cannot be held that the college is exempt. That was the kind of case that was presented to the House of Lords in the case of the Institution of Civil Engineers. There it was held that, as a whole, the objects of the society were scientific. In that case it was not necessary to go into the question with regard to the particular parts of its property. So much for one class of cases. Another class of cases is where you get something short of science being the main object of the institution, and where you find that the purposes of the foundation are, as a whole, either non-scientific or of a mixed character, as it seems to me is the case in this instance. Then, apparently, it follows that each parcel of property must be considered, and the inquiry must be whether that parcel of property is appropriated to science as its main purpose or not. When I say "appropriated," I mean appropriated in the same sense in which I spoke before—not by conveyance expressed to be particularly for that purpose, or by a declaration of trust specifically for that purpose; but appropriated in the way indicated by the language of Lord Watson in the House of Lords, where, after referring to the decision upon another Act of Parliament, he says: "The provisions of sub-section 3 dispense with the necessity for any of the enumerated purposes being exclusive, it being sufficient that the property of the institution is in the main devoted to one or other of them; and the exemption is made to depend upon the appropriation and application of such property or its income, without reference to the sources from which it is acquired." Then he goes on to cite the Lord President in the Scotch case of the Writers to the Signet, in which the Lord President said: "I apprehend that the meaning of this clause of exemption is that the property or income shall be, if not exclusively, yet certainly in the main and as its chief object, devoted to the promotion of education, literature, science," and so forth. Then he observes: "The principle thus enunciated was re-referred to, and appears to have been unanimously accepted both in the Divisional Court and in the Court of Appeal." Then later on, at p. 350, he says the enactments appear to him to "indicate the intention of the Legislature to exempt every society whose corporate endeavours are mainly directed, whether successfully or no, to the extension of the bounds of science." It seems to me that the same doctrine which he there applies to the consideration of the case of the Institution of Civil Engineers as a whole must be applied, so far as it can be applied, to the consideration of the particular classes with which we have to deal in this case.

Now, here the matters in dispute are these. The museum, although not conceded in theory, is for the purposes of to-day conceded to be a property which is legally appropriated and applied for the purposes of science, and, although it is not conceded for the future, it seems to me quite clear that it ought to be held that this Hunterian Museum is property legally appropriated and applied for the purposes of science. It was built to a very large extent on its present site out of moneys specifically voted by Parliament for that purpose, and I apprehend it would be quite incompetent for the college to deal with the Hunterian Museum in any other way than as a museum of that kind.

The other matters which are in question are, first of all, the general offices, representing, I think, an annual value of about £700. Now, it seems to me, as regards those offices, they are not now legally appropriated or applied for the purposes of science as their main object. I think they are appropriated and applied mainly for the purpose of the examination business of the college.

As regards the examination hall, and the property connected with that, it seems to me even more clearly that those have not impressed upon them in any way the marks of being applied for the purposes of science in such a way as to be within the section. They are used for the purpose of examination, and for other purposes.

I ought to have said, as regards the general offices, that it might have been, to my mind, argued with a possibility of success that some portion of the offices ought to be regarded as applied to such scientific purposes as the original charter contemplated, and as may still be carried out by the college, but I cannot see that it is possible for us to hold that any portion of them is at the present moment applied to that purpose, and therefore I cannot make any exception on that ground.

Then the third piece of property which we have to consider is the library. That, it seems to me, is very difficult to form any opinion about. It is very much on the line distinguishing the two things, but upon the whole I have come to the conclusion that it is not shown that the library is applied for the purposes of science as its main object. In the Scotch case of the Writers to the Signet, which is hardly distinguishable upon that point, it seems to me the same view was taken, and I am not able to distinguish it.

As regards the conservator's house I have very great doubt again. I think that that ought to be treated as exempt. It seems to me that the words "legally appropriated and applied" are not to be confined to a case where one particular part is marked out by one particular deed as devoted to the purposes of science. Here it seems to me that the purpose of the conservator's house is quite within the purposes of the college, and if that is the case then the house ought to be regarded as legally appropriated for that purpose if, in fact, it is so appropriated, even although some other portion of their premises might just as well have been appropriated for that purpose. I cannot see that the words of the section require that there should be an unchangeable appropriation of a particular parcel of land. It seems to me to be enough if there is an appropriation for any specific purpose of any particular portion for the time being, although it might be competent to the college to assign a different portion for that purpose.

I think that disposes of all the points we have to consider.

CHANNELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. We have to remember in this case the particular Act that the case arises under because, although with regard to the cases that have been quoted to us some of them are on this Act, still others are on Acts which are similar, but for some purposes different; in particular, both in the Act relating to the income tax and the Act relating to exemption from rating, the exemption depends upon the character of the society. In this Act the exemption depends upon the particular property. The property of corporations generally is charged, and then there is an exemption, not in favour of particular corporations, but in favour of particular property of any corporation. Consequently in this case it is only necessary for us to consider the constitution and objects of the corporation for the purposes of seeing whether or not all or any of the property of that corporation is legally appropriated to purposes coming within these exemptions. Now, that has rather an important bearing upon some portions of the case. It seems to me that for that purpose what we have got to look at is to see what the society at the time when the question arises in fact lawfully does according to its charters or statutes which govern it. I do not think that the objects, and certainly not the motives, which people have in joining it have much to do with the matter, and I do not think that the object of the Crown in constituting the body, as declared by the preamble of the charter, is at all necessarily conclusive. It appears by the preamble of both charters that the object of the Crown as recited was not to found a body for the promotion of science only, but a body which was authorized by its constitution partly directly to promote science and partly to give benefit to individuals who become members of it. Such a society as that would come within the preamble because it would promote science, and in fact, speaking generally, it is the best way to carry out a particular object to give individuals a special interest in having it carried out. Consequently, a society which had the double object, a society which gave benefit to its members and a society which also directly promoted science, would come within the object as declared by the preamble, and it could not be said that the preamble made the giving benefits to the members ultra vires. Further, this society has been, to a certain extent, altered from time to time, because not only have there been various supplementary charters, but there have been Acts of Parliament affecting it and imposing duties upon it. The result appears to me to be that it has become a society which both benefits individuals and promotes science. I am bound to take it, I think, that the admission of members for the purpose of practising their profession is a matter which must be treated as a benefit to individuals.

I think that seems to follow from what is said in the House of Lords in the case of the Institution of Civil Engineers, as to the body being a portal through which the profession may be entered. Therefore I think one must take it that this is a society having a double object; that it cannot be said of it that all its property is necessarily legally appropriated for the purposes of science; but you have to consider the property it has got, and whether any particular property is within the exemption.

That being my view of the case, I do not want to repeat at any length what my learned brother has said, because I entirely agree with him as to the portions of the property which may be considered to come within the exemption and those which do not. Assuming that the part relating to examinations may be considered to be for the individual benefit of the persons, with a view to enabling persons to get benefit by the future practice of their profession, it follows that the examination halls cannot be exempt; and I think it follows that the general offices, as to which it is obvious that the larger portion of the business done would relate to these examinations, would not be exempt either.

Speaking generally, all one could say about the first items is that there is nothing at all to show that the society are entitled to any exemption in respect of their general property other than has been allowed in this assessment.

The only other two items which it is necessary to deal with separately are the library and the conservator's house. As to the library, I agree with what is said in the case of the Writers to the Signet, which is rather strong on the subject. Further, I consider that the members of the society undoubtedly have special privileges in the library. It is quite true that either by the liberality of the society, or by the obligation, if there is one, the general public can get into it pretty easily, and get a certain use of the library, but the members have the use of it. That being so, I do not think that that can be considered to be appropriated to the purposes of science. To a considerable extent, at all events, it is kept up for the benefit of the members of the society.

Then comes the conservator's house. Speaking for myself, I think that ought to be treated as part of the museum. So far as the house is concerned, it is true there would be no breach of trust in letting that house to somebody else and putting the conservator somewhere else, or giving the conservator an additional salary in consequence; but it seems to me that, just as it would be a breach of trust for the society to give up their museum, or that part of it, at any rate, so it seems to me they might remove it to another position. That, it seems to me, does not prevent the place where the museum is now being considered to be legally appropriated to the purposes of science; therefore I think the place where the conservator lives, who is kept simply and solely for the purpose of the museum, may be considered as legally appropriated to the purposes of science, just as the site of the museum is.

Upon that ground, and upon that ground only, it seems to me that we should allow that exemption, which is the only one that can be allowed.

CUCKFIELD DISTRICT COUNCIL v. GORING. (a.)

Local government—Highway—Bridge repairable ratione tenuræ—Recovery of expenses incurred by district council in effecting repairs—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 25, sub-section 2.

By section 25, sub-section 2, of the Local Government Act, 1894, it is provided that, where a highway repairable ratione tenuræ is not repaired by the person liable to repair when requested to do so by the district council, that body may place the highway in proper repair and recover from the person liable to repair such highway the necessary expenses of so doing.

Held, that the remedy provided by this sub-section is confined to the occupier of the land so chargeable, and does not impose any liability on the owner of the land who is not the occupier thereof to refund to the district council the expenses incurred by the latter in effecting such repair.

This was an appeal by the defendant from the judgment of his Honour Judge Martineau, sitting at the county court of Worthing, in Sussex.

The action was brought under section 25, sub-section 2, of the Local Government Act, 1894, to recover the sum of £7, the amount of expenses incurred by the Cuckfield District Council in repairing two foot-bridges.

The defendant was the owner, but not the occupier, of two farms through which a stream flowed. Public footpaths passed through the lands forming these farms, and the said footpaths were carried over the stream by two foot-bridges, which had fallen into disrepair.

The defendant was served with notice to repair these bridges, and failing to do so the plaintiffs effected the necessary repairs, and sought to recover from the defendant the necessary expenses incurred by them in so doing.

The learned county court judge held that there was an obligation ratione tenuræ to repair these bridges, and that the Local Government Act, 1894, applied, and that the defendant was the person liable to repair, and that the plaintiffs were entitled, under sub-section 2 of section 25 of that Act, to recover from him the necessary expenses incurred by them in repairing the said bridges.

From this decision the defendant now appealed, on the ground that no action lay against him under the Local Government Act, 1894, as he was the owner of the said lands but not the occupier thereof.

By section 25, sub-section 2, of that Act, it is provided that "Where a highway repairable ratione tenuræ appears on the report of a competent surveyor not to be in proper repair, and the person liable to repair the same fails when requested to do so by the district council to place it in proper repair, the district council may place the highway in proper repair and recover from the person liable to repair the highway the necessary expenses of so doing."

R. E. Moore appeared for the appellant.—The person liable to repair under the provision in the Local Government Act, 1894, is the occupier and not the owner: Reg. v. Barker, 25 Q. B. D. 213, 38 W. R. Dig. 85. If there is a liability to repair ratione tenuræ the obligation rests upon the occupier: Baker v. Greenhill, 3 Q. B. 148.

Dickens, Q.C. (Boxall with him), appeared for the respondents.—Although proceedings under the Act can only be taken against the occupier of the lands liable ratione tenuræ, nevertheless the owner is the person who is ultimately liable, because if the occupier is fined he is entitled to be reimbursed by the owner, who, according to the dictum of Lord Denman, C.J., in Baker v. Greenhill, is the person who ought to have repaired. The owner cannot escape that liability: Reg. v. Bucknell, 7 Mod. 55.

WILLS, J.—I fail to understand the argument for the respondents in this case, and I feel no doubt whatever on the question that is before us.

At the passing of the Local Government Act, 1894, and for a long time before, it was well-established law that the occupier of lands, liable ratione tenuræ for the repair of the highways, was the only person who was liable to fulfil that obligation, and that the owner of such lands, not being the occupier, was not so liable. For, as in the case of Reg. v. Barker, Lord Coleridge, C.J., said that this proposition had long been established "from the date of Rolle's Abridgment to the present time, the placitum (B. 2) which lays down the law, both in the affirmative and the negative, that you must indict the occupier and cannot indict the owner has been unquestioned" (Tit.

(a) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Chimin. B. 2, p. 390). There no mention was made of highways repairable ratione tenuræ, but it has been recognized in later decisions that it was intended to apply. Therefore it is clear that this obligation attaches only to the occupier of such lands, and that the owner cannot be called upon to fulfil the obligation.

As to the question whether the occupier has a right of action to be reimbursed by the owner in respect of the sums expended by him in performing such obligation, that is a question merely between those two persons and is a matter with which the public has no concern.

It was argued on behalf of the respondents, upon the strength of the mere expression in Baker v. Greenhill, that the owner was the person who ought to have repaired, that there was a liability on the part of the owner to repair as distinguished from his liability to reimburse the occupier. All the authorities, however, have repudiated such a liability and I am quite unable to accept such a suggestion.

Sub-section 2, of section 25, appears to me merely to provide a new and less cumbersome method of getting repairs effected and paid for than that which had been hitherto available. It is impossible to suppose from the mere casual expression, "the owner who ought to have repaired," in Baker v. Greenhill, and to which I have already referred, that in face of the long chain of decisions to the contrary, it was ever intended that, when the Act speaks of "the person liable to repair," a new liability should be created and a new remedy afforded against the owner instead of the occupier. In my opinion that would be a most forced and strained construction. I think there was no intention to create a new liability but only to provide a simpler remedy against the occupier. In my opinion, therefore, these proceedings have been misconceived, and the judgment of learned judge below must be reversed and the appeal allowed.

KENNEDY, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion.

BLENKINSOP v. OGDEN & CO. (a.)

Factory—Fencing machinery—Liability of occupier—Person injured by his own negligence—Factory and Workshop Act, 1878 (41 Vict. c. 16), s. 82.

Section 82 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, provides: "If any person is killed or suffers any bodily injury in consequence of the occupier of a factory having neglected to fence any machinery required by or in pursuance of this Act to be securely fenced, . . . the occupier of such factory . . . shall be liable to a fine."

Held, that the fact that the death or injury is due to the negligence of the person so killed or injured does not exempt the occupier from liability.

Case stated under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, s. 81, provides: "If a factory or workshop is not kept in conformity with this Act, the occupier thereof shall be liable to a fine not exceeding ten pounds." Section 82 provides as stated in the head-note, and proceeds: "The whole or any part of which may be applied for the benefit of the injured person or his family, or otherwise as a Secretary of State determines."

An information and complaint was laid against the respondents under section 82 for having neglected to fence certain dangerous parts of their machinery, in consequence of which a boy in their employment suffered bodily injury.

The machinery at the point where the accident happened was not fenced, and it was a part of the machinery which, under the terms of the Act, ought to have been fenced. But the accident was due to the boy's own negligence, in standing, for the purpose of doing his work, at a part of the machinery where he had been forbidden to stand. The magistrate before whom the information was heard, found that the accident was caused by the wilful misconduct of the boy, and dismissed the information.

Sutton, for the appellant.—The magistrate ought to have convicted the respondents under section 82, because it was proved that the boy was killed in consequence of the respondents having neglected to fence machinery which ought to have been fenced. The boy's negligence is immaterial. The object of the Legislature being to protect negligent people, it was no answer to the information to say that the machinery was safe if used by prudent people. Section 13 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, extends the provisions of section 82 of the principal Act to death or bodily injury or injury to health in consequence of the occupier having neglected to observe any of the provisions of the Factory Acts—"Provided that, in the case of injury to health, the occupier shall not be liable under the section unless the injury was caused directly by such neglect." It is clear from this provision that the Legislature, in 1895, took the view now contended for.

Ruegg, Q.C. (Foreman with him), for the respondents.—In order to substantiate the offence under section 82 it is necessary to show that the neglect to fence the machinery was the proximate cause of the injury or death. Here the magistrate expressly found that the proximate cause was the boy's own wilful misconduct.

GRANTHAM, J.—We have no doubt that the learned magistrate was wrong, and ought to have inflicted a fine under section 82. It was argued by counsel for the respondent that the section can only refer to cases where the injury was not caused by the negligence of the person injured, as he says it was caused here. But I cannot accept his construction of the statute at all.

Assuming that some boys are playing in the road if somebody, properly or improperly, has dug a hole in that road and some of the boys tumble into the hole and are killed, what is it that causes the death? Why, the falling into the hole. Or to take another illustration, a man is out of his mind and puts his head upon the rails of a railway; his head is cut off by a passing train. What is it that kills him? Not his being out of his mind, but the wheels of the train going over his head. That is the direct cause of his death.

Therefore, where the injury results from the machinery not being fenced, although the boy may have been negligent too, yet that does not prevent the cause of the injury being the non-fencing of the machinery; and under these circumstances the per occupying the factory ought to be fined. It is for the Home Secretary to determine what is to be done with the fine. The persons injured in these cases cannot recover anything themselves if they have been negligent, but it is in the power of the Home Secretary to make such compensation as he thinks fit. The object of the section is to fine a person where serious injury has resulted from the non-fencing of machinery.

KENNEDY, J.—I am of the same opinion. It appears to me to be clear that, it being admitted that without this absence of proper fencing this injury would not have been suffered by the boy, it would be wrong, looking at the purpose of the section and its natural language, to read "in consequence of" as if we were looking at "consequence" in an action for damages in which one person is seeking to recover money from another and fails, according to the old and well-established principle, because it is shown against him that the immediate and direct cause of the mischief was his own misconduct.

Here we are dealing with a section the object of which is to provide safe machinery in factories, and if the machinery is such that, should it not be safely fenced, bodily injury or death may ensue, it seems most reasonable that the State should say to the occupier of the factory "We must inflict a fine for your machinery being unfenced, although it may be that the person injured could not himself sue and get damages from you because he has been to some extent negligent himself." It is to the interest of the State that the machinery should be safe for negligent as well as for careful people, and the State say to the occupier, "If you do not take the precaution to make your machinery safe as you are required by the terms of the Act, you are liable to a penalty which we may use as we like and to such extent as we like by way of compensating an injured person."

So far as one may look at one section as throwing light upon the true intention of another, section 13 of the Act of 1895, to which our attention has been called, extending the provisions of this section to all breaches of duty under Factory and Workshop Acts, does, I think, to some extent, give additional force to that which I hold by itself to be sufficiently clear in the construction of this section.

I am not alarmed by the suggestion made by counsel for the respondents with regard to suicide or intentional injury. I should have thought it would have been very difficult to persuade the Secretary of State that a man who looked about for a machine to jump into in order to be killed, or put his hand into a machine in order to be injured, could be said to be a person who "is killed or suffers any bodily injury" by reason of the non-fencing of the machinery. The question, however, does not arise.

Case remitted.

REG. v. HUMPHREY. (a.)

Criminal law—Betting—Using place for betting—Archway forming private thoroughfare—Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), ss. 1, 3.

The defendant habitually made use of an archway which formed a thoroughfare from a public street to a private yard and dwelling-houses for the purpose of betting on horse-races with persons who resorted to the archway.

Held, that the archway was a "place" within the meaning of the Betting Act, 1853, and that the defendant was rightly convicted of an offence under that Act.

Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co., ante, p. 8, [1897] 2 Q. B. 242, commented on.

Case stated by the Recorder of Leeds as follows:

"John Humphrey was tried before me at the Epiphany quarter sessions for the city of Leeds on the 6th of January, 1898, upon an indictment charging him (under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119) with having on the 3rd, 4th, 5th, 9th, and 24th of November, 1897, opened, kept, and used a certain place—to wit, an archway in Princes-street in the said city—for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto upon certain events and contingencies of and relating to certain horse-races.

"The following facts were proved by the witnesses for the prosecution:

"(a) That on each of the days named in the indictment the said John Humphrey had been present in the said archway for divers periods between 12.30 and 2 p.m., and had on each of these occasions there made bets upon horse-races, receiving money, giving tickets, and making entries in a book with several persons resorting thereto on the said occasions, varying in number from thirteen to forty.

"(b) That when the said bets were made the said John Humphrey was standing sometimes on one side and sometimes on the other of the said archway, and that he had on the first of such occasions also made several bets in Princes-street, outside the archway.

"(c) That the said archway was a private thoroughfare, the property of Messrs. Gaunt & Hudson, millowners, and was the only means of access from Princes-street into a yard at the back of their said mills, containing four dwelling-houses, three stables, and five workshops, which were also their property.

"(d) That neither the said John Humphrey nor any other person had any right in the said archway at any time except for the purpose of passing through the same into the said yard and to the houses, stables, and workshops therein.

"(e) That the said archway was 29ft. 9in. long by 10ft. 11in. wide and 12ft. high.

"At the conclusion of the case for the prosecution counsel for the defence submitted that there was no evidence upon which it could properly be found that the said John Humphrey had used for the purpose of betting any place akin or equivalent to a house, office, or room, and that there was therefore no evidence of any offence within the meaning of the statute aforesaid, and that I ought to direct an acquittal.

"I declined to withdraw the case from the jury, and directed them that the evidence showed that the archway was a 'place' within the meaning of the said statute, and that if they believed that the said John Humphrey had on the days specified in the indictment used it for the purpose of betting, they ought to find him guilty.

"The jury found the said John Humphrey guilty, and I sentenced him to pay a fine of £20.

"On the application of counsel for the defence I reserved the following question of law for the consideration of the court—viz.: Whether I was right in leaving the case to the jury and in so directing them as aforesaid."

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Joseph Walton, Q.C. (George Banks with him), for the defendant.—This archway is not a place within the meaning of the Betting Act, 1853; it is not analogous in character to a betting-house or office: Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co., ante p. 8, [1897] 2 Q. B. 242, in which the Court of Appeal disapproved of Hawke v. Dunn, 45 W. R. 359, [1897] 1 Q. B. 579. Here the archway was a thoroughfare, and though it was physically capable of being used as a "place" for betting, the defendant had no exclusive right to use or occupy it as against other persons; it is therefore outside the Act: see per Lord Esher, M.R., [1897] 2 Q. B., at p. 257.

Asquith, Q.C., and Felix Palmer in support of the conviction were not called upon to argue.

LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J.—The real question which we are asked to decide is whether the verdict of the jury is supported by adequate evidence. A question might have arisen as to whether the learned recorder was right in directing the jury that this archway was a place within the meaning of the Act or whether he ought not to have given the jury his views on what was a place within the Act, and then to have asked them to say whether on the evidence the archway was a place used by the defendant for the purpose of betting on the particular occasion. But no such question is before us to-day.

The main ground upon which the defendant contends that the conviction is wrong, is that it is contrary to the judgments of the Court of Appeal in Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co. I express no opinion on the question whether that case is an authority which this court is bound to follow; but it is clear that the opinions expressed by the judges in that case must be treated by us with deference and respect. Here, however, the question is whether in view of that decision we ought to say that no offence has been committed by the defendant. It would be a matter for regret, and in my opinion most injurious to the public interest if it were so; but I think that that decision has no such effect.

There the charge was of betting on a racecourse, to which multitudes were in the habit of resorting for purposes of sport. There was an enclosure on the racecourse to which people might go who desired to see the races, and to be in shelter from the weather. It was capable of containing some two thousand people, and everyone who chose to pay the charge for admission had access to it. Some persons, known as bookmakers, went there for the avowed purpose of making bets; others went there who were not bookmakers, but who nevertheless wished to make bets on certain horses—to back their fancy, as it is called; others again went there merely for the purpose of watching the races. No particular part of the enclosure was appropriated or specially used for the purpose of betting. These facts are very different from those found in the present case. I do not wish to express any unnecessary opinion upon Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co.; but when one considers the number of enclosed racecourses in this country, that case (if it be good law) certainly makes it difficult to say that betting on any part of such enclosed racecourse would not constitute an offence within the meaning of the Act. But in the present case the place in question is a gateway open at one end to the street, and leading at the other end to a courtyard. The defendant habitually resorted there, and offered himself to persons desirous of betting with him—holding the bank, as it were, against all comers. This is betting of the worst possible description, into which no consideration of sport enters at all. The betting takes place away from any racecourse, and without any palliating circumstances. It was admitted that structurally this archway was capable of being a "place" within the Act, and it is plain from the cases that this is so. Thus the only question is whether the defendant used it for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto. Unquestionably he did; he was there for no other purpose. I am therefore of opinion that he has committed an offence against the Act, and that the conviction must be affirmed.

I desire to add that it seems to me to be a serious public evil that the ambiguity which surrounds this subject should exist. It is impossible to reconcile the various decisions, and the results of judicial disagreements and the consequent ambiguity are most deplorable. In my opinion there is urgent need for legislation on the subject—legislation which ought, perhaps, to be preceded by a commission of enquiry.

HAWKINS, J.—I entirely agree as to the decision of this case. It is in accordance with the considered judgment in Hawke v. Dunn, which affirmed the opinion expressed by myself in Reg. v. Preedy, 17 Cox 433. I absolutely adhere to the judgments I delivered in those cases. The decision of the Court of Appeal in Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co. must be treated with the greatest deference; but I must say that that decision was given under very peculiar circumstances, and that I do not wish to be understood as expressing approval of it. I agree with my lord as to the pressing necessity for legislation on the subject.

WILLS, J.—I am of the same opinion. It appears to me that the result of the decision in Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co. is that the test whether an offence has been committed depends on several circumstances: the spot in question must be capable of being described as a "place," and it must be used for the purpose of betting. In that broad view I agree, and I think that in the present case we have exactly those circumstances. The archway is clearly within the description of a "place" given by Lord Esher, M.R., in the case referred to, and its user by the defendant is clearly within the mischief of the Act.

The decision in Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co. is undoubtedly entitled to be treated with the greatest respect, if indeed it is not actually binding on us, but I regret the manner in which it was brought before the Court of Appeal. It was brought by agreement between the parties to get rid of the decision in Hawke v. Dunn, and it was practically a collusive action. The parties agreed on a statement of facts as to the antiquity of the kind of betting involved in that case and in Hawke v. Dunn. That statement may be true, but there is no means of testing it. It was unquestionably calculated to influence the construction to be put by the court on the statute, and it was unfortunately accepted, and in some measure relied upon in the Court of Appeal. In so far as that collusive statement influenced the decision, the value of the judgment must be impaired.

KENNEDY, J.—I agree that this conviction must be affirmed; the facts are practically undistinguishable from those in Liddell v. Lofthouse, 44 W. R. 349, [1896] 1 Q. B. 295, a decision of Lindley and Kay, L.JJ., sitting as a Divisional Court, which was approved in Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co. In so deciding I do not think that we are differing from the decision of the Court of Appeal in the latter case.

RIDLEY, J.—I entirely agree in the judgment of my lord.

Conviction affirmed.

SOUTH AFRICAN TERRITORIES v. WALLINGTON. (a.)

Company — Debentures — Payment by instalments — Specific performance of agreement — Agreement to lend money — Damages.

Specific performance of a contract to lend money will not be granted, and this is equally so where the agreement on the one side is to lend money for a term of years, and on the other to give the lender certain specified security for his loan.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (45 W. R. 467, [1897] 1 Q. B. 692) affirmed.

This was an appeal by the plaintiff company from a judgment of the Court of Appeal (Lord Esher, M.R., Lopes and Chitty, L.JJ.), 45 W. R. 467, [1897] 1 Q. B. 692, which reversed an order of Wright, J.

The facts are given at length in Lord Herschell's judgment.

Sir R. T. Reid, Q.C., and C. Herbert-Smith (H. D. Woodcock with them), for the appellants.

Bray, Q.C., and Gore Browne, for respondent.

March 18.—Lord HALSBURY, L.C.—The forms which have been contrived for the business of joint-stock companies, and which, when applied to their proper purposes, are convenient, are nevertheless somewhat calculated to mislead when their mere language is regarded. The applicant for debentures on the face of the instrument contracts to pay something, but the real nature of the whole transaction is an agreement by the applicant to lend money at certain interest, and the action in this case was in truth mainly, if not altogether, directed to compel the intending lender to perform his contract to lend, which undoubtedly he had refused and neglected to do.

With respect to the claim for specific performance, a long and uniform course of decision has prevented the application of any such remedy, and I do not understand that any court or any member of any court has entertained a doubt but that the refusal of the learned judge below to grant a decree for specific performance was perfectly right. But, of course, in this, like any other contract, one party to the contract has a right to complain that the other party has broken it; and if he establishes that proposition he is entitled to such damages as are appropriate to the nature of the contract.

In this case, as I have said, the contract was to lend money. Referring to the question of damages, the amount of interest to be paid for the loan, and the fact that £80 was under the contract itself forfeited to the company for the non-performance of the contract in its entirety, render it difficult to see what substantial damages could have been recovered, and I regret that under the circumstances it should have been thought advisable to appeal to your lordships in a case which, upon a review of the facts, does not appear in any view of it to have been worth the expense necessarily involved in such an appeal. Your lordships were informed that the action took seven minutes to try, with the result that it has now gone to two courts of appeal, and, but for what I am about to say, might have resulted in a new trial. Upon a careful review, however, of the facts, I have come to the conclusion that it would be impossible to suggest any serious damages in this case, and the tacit admission of the parties, by their declining to consider the question of a new trial upon payment of costs, renders it unnecessary for me to do more than to say that in this case justice has been done by the Court of Appeal reversing the decision of the learned judge below.

I think it right, however, to add that if any serious right were involved, or if it was reasonably possible that injustice had been done, I should have felt myself at liberty to give my opinion in favour of a new trial.

I agree that in this case the parties had in a great measure themselves to blame, but I think the blame was not entirely theirs, and where a miscarriage has taken place by errors in procedure, I think the proper remedy is to make the party in default pay for his error in the shape of costs, and not to deprive him of important rights, if any such exist. Of course, where error in procedure leads to altering the position of the other litigant party, it may well be that mere payment of costs will not do justice, and in such cases the party in default must suffer. But, speaking generally, a blunder in procedure, if it can be set right, and if important rights are involved, receives its most appropriate penalty in being made the subject of an order for costs.

I think, therefore, in this case that the appeal ought to be dismissed, and dismissed with costs; and I move your lordships accordingly.

Lord WATSON.—The appellant company, in September, 1895, invited tenders for a loan of £75,000, to be secured by the issue of first mortgage debentures for £50, and bearing interest at 6 per cent. repayable with a bonus of £5 10s. upon each debenture on the 30th of September, 1900. The whole floating assets of the company were to be conveyed to trustees for behoof and for security of the bondholders. Ten per cent. of his advance to the company was to be paid by the subscriber upon application for an allotment and the balance in four subsequent instalments.

The respondent applied for an allotment of sixteen debentures, representing an advance of £800, and with his application remitted the sum of £80. His offer was duly accepted and the remittance retained by the company. The respondent having declined to make any further advance, the present action was brought against him by the company for payment of a capital sum which they claimed (1) as in specific performance of his obligation, (2) as the balance of the price which he had undertaken to pay for the debentures, and (3) as damages which they had sustained by his breach of contract

The only engagement made by the respondent with the company consisted in a promise to advance money to them in loan; and it is settled in the law of England that such a promise cannot sustain a suit for specific performance. It is equally clear, in my opinion, that the obligation of the company to issue mortgage bonds against the loan did not in any way alter or affect the character of the transaction or give the company any right to sue as for the price of an article sold by them which they were ready to deliver. The only remedy open to the company was by action against the respondent for any loss or damage which they might sustain through his breach of promise.

The case was tried before Wright, J., who gave the company a decree as for the price of the debentures which the respondent had agreed to take up. I cannot say that the trial was satisfactory. The proceedings were chiefly occupied by a discussion between the learned judge and the respondent's counsel, in the course of which the former indicated the terms of the order which he meant to pronounce. No evidence of damage was tendered by the appellant company.

An appeal was taken by the respondent, upon a notice of motion that the decree of Wright, J., should be reversed or varied, and that judgment should be entered for him or a new trial allowed. At the hearing of the appeal, counsel for the company urged the first and second of the claims made by them and did not refer to their claim of damages. After the judgment of the Appeal Court was delivered reversing the order appealed from and entering judgment for the respondent, counsel, in the absence of the head of the court, moved two Lords Justices to remit the case for trial of the question of damages. Their lordships declined to entertain the application.

On the hearing of this appeal, counsel for the company again pressed upon your lordships the desperate arguments which they had addressed to the Court of Appeal, and moved your lordships to send back the case in order that the company might have an opportunity of proving damage. I do not doubt that it is within the discretion of the House to grant or refuse that motion, but I am very clearly of opinion that, in the circumstances of this case, that discretion ought not to be exercised in favour of the appellants, and that the order appealed from ought to be affirmed with costs.

Lord HERSCHELL.—This action was brought by the appellant company to obtain specific performance by the defendant of a contract to take certain mortgage debentures, or in the alternative to obtain payment of the balance of the price of the debentures or damages.

The appellant company issued a prospectus offering to the public an issue of £75,000 6 per cent. first mortgage debentures of £50 each repayable on the 31st of December, 1900. It was stated that the allottees of this issue would have the right to exchange them at par for an equal amount of shares at any time within two years after the 31st of December, 1896. The debentures were to be payable —10 per cent. on application; 15 per cent. on allotment; 25 per cent. two months after allotment; 25 per cent. four months after allotment; and 25 per cent. six months after allotment.

The defendant in September, 1895, applied for the allotment to him of sixteen of the debentures, and agreed to take such debentures, or any less number that might be allotted to him, on the terms of the prospectus. The appellant company accordingly on the 15th of October, 1895, allotted to the defendant sixteen debentures in the company, and the defendant paid the sum of £80, being the 10 per cent. required by the contract. In his letter of application the defendant in terms agreed to pay the further instalments due thereon, in accordance with the terms of the prospectus.

The defendant having refused to make any further payments the present action was brought on 6th of March, 1896, when all the instalments except the last, had become due.

The action came on for trial before Wright, J., and the learned judge held that the claim for specific performance could not be sustained, but gave judgment for the plaintiffs on the ground that a debt had been created by the defendant's promise to pay contained in his letter of application. Judgment was accordingly entered for the plaintiffs for £520 and costs. From this judgment the defendant appealed, giving notice that he should move that the judgment be reversed, and that in lieu thereof judgment should be entered for the defendant, or a new trial had. The Court of Appeal reversed the judgment of the court below, and ordered that judgment should be entered for the defendant with the costs of the appeal and the costs of the action incurred subsequent to the date of the payment into court by the defendant of the sum of 5s.

I do not think it is open to any doubt that a person with whom a contract to lend money has been entered into cannot obtain specific performance of that contract. All the learned judges who have considered this case have been of that opinion, and none of the authorities cited afford any real support to the contrary view.

But for the fact that Wright, J., arrived at another conclusion, I should have though it equally clear that the sums of money constituting the instalments which the defendant agreed to pay did not constitute a debt. It was argued that the defendant had agreed to purchase certain debentures of the company, and that the moneys sought to be recovered were the price of the debentures so agreed to be purchased. I think this is a fallacy. The transaction was not in its nature a contract of purchase, it was an agreement on the one side to lend money for a term of years, and on the other side to give the lender the specified security for his loan. I am at a loss to see how an agreement of this description can create a debt from the lender to the borrower.

So far the case is free from any difficulty, but the alternative claim of damages for breach of the contract remains to be considered. At the trial no evidence was given to show that the plaintiffs had, in fact, sustained any damage by the breach of contract, and that the 5s. paid into court over and above the £80 paid on application was not sufficient to compensate the plaintiffs for any damage they had sustained. By the terms of the prospectus the failure to pay the subsequent instalments rendered the £80 payable on application liable to forfeiture. Wright, J., in the course of a discussion initiated by the learned judge during the opening address of the plaintiffs' counsel, said: "In order that an end may be made of the matter, if I am wrong on one point and right on the other, can you suggest that the damages, if it is damages, should be less than the amount which he agreed to pay?" In answer to this the learned counsel for the defendant pointed out that though the plaintiffs were deprived of the use of the money for four years, they would have had, according to the prospectus, to pay about 8 per cent. for its use, and that they had got the £80 deposit. The learned counsel for the plaintiffs made no observation upon this, and the learned judge then gave judgment.

I think that in strictness the counsel of the plaintiffs should have called attention to the fact that he was prepared to tender evidence in proof of actual damage sustained by the plaintiffs, if he wished to reserve the benefit of it supposing the learned judge were wrong in his view as to the measure of damages. I can quite understand that he was embarrassed by the course taken by the learned judge in bringing the trial at so early a stage to a summary conclusion. I think it is to be regretted that, no doubt with a view to save the public time, the learned judge interposed at so early a period and did not let the trial take its natural course. At the same time, where a learned judge has intimated, as Wright, J., did, a desire that an end might be made of the matter, in case he should be wrong, I think the proper course is, if counsel has any evidence which in that view might be material, to mention the matter to the judge. Nevertheless, the learned counsel for the plaintiffs had, in the Court of Appeal, called the attention of that court to the fact that, supposing the learned judge in the court below to be wrong, the amount of damages to which they were entitled had been left undetermined, think, considering the course which the case took at the trial, the Court of Appeal might quite properly have granted a new trial if they thought a substantial point had been left untried. Their attention, however, it is admitted, was never called to the fact that the plaintiffs were prepared to offer evidence as to the amount of damage sustained, and it was not urged on their behalf that if the judgment in their favour was not allowed to stand, judgment should not be entered for the defendant, but only a new trial be ordered. It was indeed stated at the bar that the learned counsel for the plaintiffs had expressly abandoned any such point, but I do not insist on this. On the materials before them I do not see how the Court of Appeal could have given any other judgment than the one they gave. How could they order a new trial when it was not brought to their notice that there was anything to try, or that there was any further evidence forthcoming?

After judgment had been delivered, the learned counsel for the plaintiffs for the first time asked that the order should be for a new trial, and stated that they wished to give evidence as to damages. I do not doubt that the court might even then, on such terms, if any, as they thought fit, have made an order for a new trial instead of entering judgment for the defendant. But in my opinion a party is not entitled to wait until judgment has been delivered against him, and then for the first time raise such a point.

If he has obtained judgment in the court below, and the opposite party moves to substitute a judgment in his favour, the respondent, if he intends to maintain that even though he cannot maintain his judgment, the other party is at most entitled to something less than a judgment in his favour, ought, I think, to make the point in the course of his argument. I cannot see that his contention that the court below rightly decided would be in the slighest degree weakened by his contending, as an alternative, that the appellant was entitled at the most to something less than the full relief he claimed.

I have thought it right to say so much because I am unwilling to afford any countenance to the view that a party is entitled to wait until judgment has been delivered before presenting such a contention. It would tend to lax procedure, and frequently to great inconvenience.

For the reasons I have expressed I do not think the plaintiffs are entitled, as of right, to demand that your lordships should vary the order of the court below, and grant a new trial. At the same time, I do not doubt the power of this House to make such an order on suitable terms, where, in its opinion, the ends of justice so require. The learned counsel who appeared for the plaintiffs at the bar, stated, in answer to a question put to them, that they did not desire a new trial if it were to be granted only on payment of costs. I do not feel it necessary therefore to inquire whether the course which the case took at the trial would have rendered this a proper order in the present case.

It may be well that I should add that I do not believe the plaintiffs suffer any prejudice by not obtaining a new trial. In view of the nature of the contract broken, and the measure of damages applicable to it, I am satisfied that they could not have established a right to anything beyond what they have already received.

Lord MACNAGHTEN, after stating the facts: The appellants claimed by their writ (1) specific performance, (2) payment of the remaining instalments described in the writ as "the price of the debentures," or (3) damages. The first two claims have been rejected by the Court of Appeal. The third has not been considered as yet.

It is quite plain that the contract made by the offer of these debentures, and the acceptance of that offer, is nothing more or less than a contract to borrow and a contract to lend so much money payable by instalments. The essential character of the transaction is not altered either by the circumstance that the creditor in a certain event is to have the option of exchanging his position for that of a shareholder or by the complicated nature of the arrangements made for the lender's security.

That specific performance of a contract to lend money cannot be enforced is well established, and is obviously so wholesome a rule, that it would be idle to say a word about it.

As regards the second head of claim it is enough to observe that there is no contract at all to pay except as incidental to the contract of loan. The term "price" applied to such a transaction as this is quite out of place. To order payment, as a debt or by way of damages or otherwise of an amount equal to the sum of the remaining instalments, is to enforce the agreement against one of the parties to the contract and to set the other free—free from any obligation to pay interest, and free, too, from any obligation to repay the principal. That would be a very one-sided sort of specific performance, contrary to all precedent, and in the result plainly unfair.

So far there is no difficulty and there can be no room for doubt. But the learned counsel for the appellants raised a point in connection with the third head of claim which requires rather more consideration. That claim, as they said, and said truly, had not been dealt with at all. It was not disputed that the contract has been broken. There was therefore, primâ facie, a case for damages. That there were no materials before the court for assessing the amount of compensation was not, they said, wholly their fault, and so they asked this House, under the circumstances, to allow a new trial on that one point.

If I thought there had been any miscarriage of justice—if I thought that, owing to some accident or to anything but the neglect or the prudence of the appellants themselves, they had been shut out from the trial of a question which they seriously desired to try, I should for my part have thought that the indulgence ought to be granted assuming that it could be granted on terms not unfair to the other side. But I think there is no substance in this claim; and I much doubt whether the appellants ever really meant to put it forward, except as a sort of cover in case of disaster, or as a justification or excuse for embarking on litigation of an experimental character.

Thinking, as I do, that there is nothing substantial in the claim for damages, and that the appellants, if they keep the deposit, will be more than compensated for any loss which they could possibly prove, and thinking too, that this claim for damages may have been advisedly not pressed before the Court of Appeal, and seeing that it was not put forward until after judgment was given, I am of opinion that the application for a new trial ought to be rejected. To admit such a claim would, I think, be a very dangerous precedent.

I think the appeal should be dismissed altogether, and with costs.

Lord MORRIS, after stating the facts, continued: I cannot add anything to the reasons given in the judgments in the Appeal Court and by your lordships as to why the company cannot recover either by way of specific performance or by the payment of the balance of the price of the debentures. I am equally clear that the company was entitled to recover on the third head of claim for damages to such amount as they gave evidence in support of. The defendant had clearly broken his contract contained in his letter of application, and necessarily was bound to indemnify the company in respect of such damage. The real question between the parties was never tried, because the learned judge at the trial summarily ruled that the company was entitled to recover £520, the balance of the price of the debentures, and gave judgment accordingly. What damage, if any, the company really sustained has never been investigated.

The respondent by his notice of appeal sought either that judgment should be entered for him or for a new trial. In the judgments of the Lords Justices in the Court of Appeal there is no trace of any argument having been urged as to a right to recover some damages; but after judgment had been pronounced, counsel for the company applied to the Court of Appeal that the order should be for a new trial as the plaintiff had witnesses at the trial to prove damages. In my opinion that should have been the order made, but on the terms of the plaintiff paying the costs of the first trial, as the plaintiff had accepted the ruling of the learned judge on the second ground of action for the price of the debentures, leaving the third claim for damages untried; and, in my opinion, that is the order your lordships should now make, but that the plaintiff's counsel stated they could not take an order for a new trial on the terms of paying such costs.

I therefore concur in the judgment that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Order appealed from affirmed, and appeal dismissed with costs.

MARKS v. FROGLEY AND OTHERS. (a.)

Army—Volunteer—"Persons subject to military law"—"Being trained or exercised with" regular forces—Breaking up of camp—Subsequent detention—"Military custody"—Army Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58), ss. 43, 45, 158, 176, sub-section 8 (a).

The plaintiff, a member of a volunteer corps, was, with other members of the corps, in military training with a portion of the regular forces at a camp under a War Office order, which provided for the formation of a volunteer brigade at the camp from the 1st to the 8th of August. Upon the morning of the 8th of August, while the corps was still in camp, the plaintiff was, by order of the adjutant, placed under arrest on a charge of larceny in the camp, and taken to the railway station, where a special military train was waiting to convey the corps to their home destination, and he was then given into the custody of the defendants, three members of the volunteer corps, who, acting under orders, upon the arrival of the train at the home destination, took the plaintiff to the police-station and handed him over to the police. The defendants were then formally dismissed. The plaintiff was subsequently tried at quarter sessions and acquitted. In an action against the defendants for assault and false imprisonment.

Held, that the training or exercise of the volunteer corps with the regular forces, within section 176, sub-section 8 (a), of the Army Act, 1881, did not cease, as regards the plaintiff and the three defendants, until they were dismissed after the plaintiff had been handed over to the police, and that until that time they were subject to military law; and that, therefore, the defendants were not liable to the action.

Held, also, that the defendants could justify taking and keeping the plaintiff in military custody under section 158 of the Army Act, 1881, as that section applied to an offence alleged to have been committed by a person subject to military law.

Held, further, that, under section 43 of the Army Act, 1881, the plaintiff's only mode of redress was by complaint to his superior officer as therein provided, and that no action would lie.

Application for judgment or a new trial in an action tried before Kennedy, J., and a special jury. The learned judge upon further consideration gave judgment for the plaintiff as against three of the defendants: reported ante, p. 249, [1898] 1 Q. B. 396.

The facts and arguments are fully stated in the judgment of A. L. Smith, L.J.

J. Lawson Walton, Q.C., and R. D. Muir, for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 7.—A. L. SMITH, L.J., read the following judgment: This is an action for false imprisonment brought by the plaintiff, who was a private in the Bedfordshire Regiment of Volunteers, against three of his comrades in the same regiment (a lance-corporal and two privates), and also against a police superintendent of the Herts County Constabulary. The superintendent has succeeded in the action, for he showed to the satisfaction of the jury that he had reasonable cause for suspecting that a felony had been committed by the plaintiff; but as the other three defendants were unable to show that a felony had in fact been committed—for the plaintiff had been acquitted at quarter sessions—it was held by the learned judge who tried this case that, as the three defendants were mere civilians when they did what is complained of, they were consequently undefended, and they have had damages assessed against them by the jury to the amount of £300. The three defendants, with the aid of the War Office, appeal, and the questions are whether they have a good defence to this action upon the ground that they were not civilians but were soldiers under military law when they did the act which is charged against them, and if not, whether the damages are so excessive that a new trial should be ordered as regards them. The material facts are these: Upon Saturday, the 8th of August, 1896, the plaintiff and the three defendants were quartered with their regiment, the 2nd Bedfordshire Volunteers, in camp at Shorncliffe, training and exercising there with a portion of her Majesty's regular forces. The volunteer regiment had gone into camp on the previous Saturday under an order of the War Office dated the 22nd of April, 1896, "for the formation of the Home Counties Volunteer Brigade at Shorncliffe, August 1 to August 8, 1896." It will be noticed that by the order this camp, as it has been called, began on Saturday, the 1st, and ended on Saturday, the 8th of August, 1896. Upon the morning of Saturday, the 8th of August, 1896, whilst the regiment was still in camp, the plaintiff was accused by some of his comrades of having stolen certain articles belonging to them. Captain Foote, of the Royal Inniskillings, who was adjutant of the regiment and in charge of the volunteer battalion, was called up to the tent where the felony was supposed to have been committed, and, having investigated the matter, ordered the plaintiff under arrest and into the custody of one of the volunteers present, to be taken to the Shorncliffe Railway Station with the baggage guard of the regiment; and he ordered that the plaintiff should be taken under escort and arrest in the special military train which on that day was about to take the regiment to Boxmoor Station; and he also ordered that upon arrival there the plaintiff should be taken under arrest and handed over to the police authority at Hemel Hempstead, which is about two miles from the Boxmoor Station and is the plaintiff's home. Under the order of Captain Foote the plaintiff was placed under arrest and into the custody of one of the volunteers of the regiment, and was so taken to the Shorncliffe Station with the baggage guard of the regiment, the plaintiff as well as the volunteer who had him under arrest being in uniform and under arms. Shortly after the plaintiff reached the Shorncliffe Station the regiment under arms and under command arrived there with the three defendants in the ranks. They were then told off and ordered by their superior officer, pursuant to the order of Captain Foote, to escort the plaintiff under arrest in the special military train about to start for Boxmoor, and upon arrival there to take him under arrest to Hemel Hempstead and hand him over to the police authorities there. This order the three defendants obeyed, both they and the plaintiff being all the time in uniform and under arms. The regiment, which had formed up in marching order in camp at Shorncliffe, was not dismissed until after its arrival at the Boxmoor Station, and the three defendants were not dismissed until the orders of Captain Foote had been carried out and the plaintiff handed over to the police authority at Hemel Hempstead, to which place they had marched the plaintiff from Boxmoor Station in uniform and under arms by a side road from the station.

The learned judge, against whose judgment, as also against the verdict of the jury as to damages, the three defendants appeal, has entered judgment for the plaintiff for £300, having first amended the statement of claim, which claimed £200, by altering the claim into one for £300, the result being that these three defendants, who are working-men and of the same rank of life as the plaintiff (he being a working tailor and the others journeyman painters and a carpenter), have been mulcted in the sum of £300 for simply obeying the orders of their superior officer. If they had disobeyed those orders they would, I apprehend, have found themselves in a perilous position by reason of section 21 of the Volunteer Act, 1863, and of section 20 of the Army Act, 1881.

I now proceed to inquire whether the law is such as to sanction a judgment for false imprisonment at all, no matter for what damages, against the three defendants in the above circumstances. There can be no possible doubt that upon the morning of the 8th of August, 1896, Captain Foote, in the camp at Shorncliffe, gave a lawful order concerning "a soldier" engaged in military service for a military offence. The offence for which the plaintiff was placed under arrest was cognizable by either military or civil authority. That the plaintiff when the order was given was a soldier subject to military law is beyond dispute. Section 176 of the Army Act, 1881, and article 374 of the Regulations for the Volunteer Forces are conclusive as to this. But it is argued for the plaintiff that, although this might be so, the order to the three defendants given at the Shorncliffe Station by their superior officer pursuant to the order of Captain Foote to escort the plaintiff under arrest with his regiment from Shorncliffe Station to Hemel Hempstead was illegal, because the plaintiff and the three defendants had then ceased to be subject to military law and had become civilians, which, it is said, they became immediately they left the camp, and that, therefore, the three defendants could only justify the imprisoning —that is, escorting the plaintiff under arrest pursuant to orders from Shorncliffe Station to Hemel Hempstead—by proving that a felony had in fact been committed, and that they had reasonable cause for suspecting that the plaintiff had been guilty of it, and this fact the three defendants had failed to establish. Now, first of all, did these four men—that is, the plaintiff and the three defendants—become civilians either when they left the camp in the circumstances in which they left it or when they left the Shorncliffe Station with the regiment, all being in uniform under arms, and under command in the military train? It has been held by the learned judge that upon the true construction of the statutes they became civilians when they left the Shorncliffe camp, and it is argued that, as Captain Foote had only a jurisdiction limited to such time as military law existed, the three defendants cannot justify under an order which, though good so far as the primary arrest was concerned, was bad so far as it ordered the keeping of the plaintiff under arrest, for, as to this, it was in excess of jurisdiction. In my opinion the War Office order of the 22nd of April, 1896, above referred to, covered and included the whole of Saturday, the 8th of August, 1896. It was argued that it did not. Inasmuch as it must be conceded that the order covered some part of the day, What part of it did it cover if it did not cover the whole day? No answer was given to this. In my opinion the order covered and included the whole of Saturday, the 8th of August, in the same way as it covered the whole of Saturday, the 1st of August, 1896. So soon as the Bedfordshire volunteers fell in under arms and under command on that day as a regiment to proceed to the camp at Shorncliffe to take part in military training there with regulars, in my opinion from that time they became subject to military law, and remained so subject until they were dismissed upon Saturday, the 8th of August, 1896. I can find in the War Office order no fraction or part of a day as distinct from the whole day as being only covered by the order, but, on the contrary, I find that, by section 573 of the Regulations for the Volunteer Force, an additional allowance of 4s. per day is granted to a volunteer private to cover time occupied in joining and quitting camp, which points to the day being entire. If the Bedfordshire regiment of volunteers had remained in camp at Shorncliffe the whole of the 8th, during the whole of that day it would have formed part of the Home Counties Volunteer Brigade at training and exercise with regulars, even though during that day the regular forces might have been leaving the camp, and the camp itself was being dismantled. If all the regulars had left the camp on the morning of the 8th, leaving the Bedfordshire Regiment still in camp, can it be said that the regiment did not continue under military law whilst it remained in camp? I heard no suggestion in argument that the regiment became a regiment of civilians whilst in camp; then what becomes of the argument of the learned counsel for the plaintiff that the regiment became a regiment of civilians, though under arms and under command, the moment it became a unit by itself. If the regiment had been dismissed in camp and each volunteer had had to find his own way to his home as best he could, this would have been another matter, but is not the present case. By section 176, sub-section

8 (a), of the Army Act, 1881, it is enacted that "persons subject to military law as soldiers" are "all non-commissioned officers and men belonging to the volunteer forces of the United Kingdom when they are being trained or exercised with any portion of the regular forces," and by article 374 of the Regulations for the Volunteer Force it is provided that "volunteers become subject to military law when they join a camp with regular forces or are assembled for training or exercise with any portion of the regular forces." The question arises, When did this volunteer regiment begin to and cease to be trained or exercised with a portion of the regular forces? In my judgment each member of this regiment became subject to military law when he fell in and formed up at Boxmoor with his comrades as a regiment under arms and under command upon Saturday, the 1st of August, 1896, in order to train and exercise with regular forces at Shorncliffe, and that the subjection did not cease so long as it continued to be a regiment under arms and under command—that is, until it, and its component parts were dismissed from being any longer under arms upon the 8th of August. In my judgment the training or exercise of a regiment under arms and command to carry out efficiently what is called "entraining" and "detraining" is a military exercise, and constitutes part and parcel of the forming as well as the unforming of a camp, and is as much a military training or exercise as the formation of a regiment into square or of a company in fours, or the bringing about of any other military manœuvre. I cannot agree with the learned judge that the plaintiff and the three defendants became mere civilians upon leaving Shorncliffe Station as a regiment under arms in the special military train, but I should add that it does not appear that the War Office order of the 22nd of April, 1896, was called to his attention as it has been to our's in this court.

But there is another section of the Army Act, 1881, which, in my judgment, is fatal to the plaintiff's case. It is section 158. By it it is enacted in sub-section 1 that "where an offence under this Act has been committed by any person while subject to military law such person may be taken into and kept in military custody and tried and punished for such offence, although he or the corps or battalion to which he belongs has ceased to be subject to military law, in like manner as he might have been taken into and kept in military custody, tried, or punished if he or such corps or battalion had continued so subject." This section, to my mind, obviously means where an offence is alleged to have been committed, and indeed the learned counsel for the plaintiff had to admit that it would be absurd to construe the section in any other way, for otherwise the jurisdiction under it to try could only arise if, after trial, the prisoner be convicted, which, with all respect to the draftsman of the section, is ridiculous. It is clear that the plaintiff whilst subject to military law was taken into and placed in custody for an offence under the Act.

But it is said that this only applies to and justifies the keeping in military custody, and not the keeping in civilian custody, which the defendants are charged with having done in the present case after leaving Shorncliffe Station. I have already said what I have to say about the continuance of military law in this case. But it is argued that military custody means the custody of a regular soldier only, which custody is defined by section 45, sub-section 2, of the Army Act, 1881, thus: "Military custody means, according to the usages of the service, the putting the offender under arrest or the putting him into confinement"; and by article 29 of the Queen's Regulations, "military custody in the case of a private soldier means confinement under charge of a guard, picket, patrol, or sentry, or of a provost marshal"; and it is said that military custody therefore means the custody by a regular soldier. In considering what is military custody when dealing with a volunteer, section 21 of the Volunteer Act must be looked to as well as the Army Act, 1881. This section, in addition to empowering the commanding officer of a volunteer corps to discharge from the corps any volunteer for disobedience of orders while doing any military duty with his corps, enacts that "if any volunteer while under arms or on march or duty with the corps . . . or while wearing the clothing or accoutrements of such corps . . . and going to or returning from any place of exercise or assembly of such corps . . . disobeys any lawful order of any officer . . . or is guilty of misconduct, the officer then in command . . . may order the offender, if an officer, into arrest, and if not an officer, into the custody of any volunteer belonging to the corps . . . but so that the offender be not kept in such arrest or custody longer than during the time" prescribed by the section. Now, is this civil or military custody? There can be but one answer. It is not civil; it is therefore military. I can see no sense or reason for holding that the custody in which the plaintiff was from Shorncliffe Camp to Hemel Hempstead police-station was not military custody, which in my judgment it was, and consequently section 158 of the Army Act, 1881, also avails the three defendants.

There is also another ground upon which it appears to me, if it were necessary to resort to it, that this case ought to be decided adversely to the plaintiff, and it is this. By section 43 of the Army Act, 1881, it is enacted under the heading of "Redress of Wrongs" as follows: "If any soldier thinks himself wronged in any matter . . . by any soldier he may complain thereof to his captain, and if he thinks himself wronged by his captain, either in respect of his complaint not being redressed or in respect of any other matter, he may complain thereof to his commanding officer, and if he thinks himself wronged by his commanding officer, either in respect of his complaint not being redressed or in respect of any other matter, he may complain thereof to the general or other officer commanding the district or station where the soldier is serving; and every officer to whom a complaint is made in pursuance of this section shall cause such complaint to be inquired into, and shall, if on inquiry he is satisfied of the justice of the complaint so made, take such steps as may be necessary for giving full redress to the complainant in respect of the matter complained of." For the reasons above given, in my opinion, the plaintiff and the three defendants were soldiers under military law between Shorncliffe Camp and Hemel Hempstead, and this section therefore applies to the plaintiff. I find in the judgment of Lush, J., in Dawkins v. Lord Paulet, 18 W. R. 336, p. 343, L. R. 5 Q. B. 94, p. 121, some remarks in connection with the Articles of War, of which this section is the equivalent, which appear to me to be such sound sense and good law that I will repeat them. He says: "Can it be reasonably inferred that any other mode or measure of redress was intended by the Act than that which is specified in this article? It is no argument to say that the remedy is imperfect because no pecuniary compensation is given to the injured party. That defect, if it be one, is a defect in the code itself which we cannot remedy. The plaintiff has no reason to complain, for he has all which the law military, to which he engaged to submit when he entered the service, entitles him to have. The same code creates both the right and the remedy, and this court cannot add to the one or to the other." This statement of Lush, J., applies to the present plaintiff, and if there were no other ground adverse to him I think it suffices to put an end to this unseemly action against the three defendants, and I entirely agree with what that learned judge said. I need not refer to passages which may also be found in the judgment of Willes, J., in the case of Keighly v. Bell, 4 F. & F. 763, and in Dawkins v. Lord Rokeby, 4 Ibid. 806, showing that the civil courts cannot be invoked to redress grievances arising between persons both subject to military law. For the reasons I have given I think that the plaintiff's action fails.

In regard to the damages being excessive, I need say nothing except that in my judgment as against these three defendants they were so excessive that I think a new trial should have been ordered upon this ground, if it were necessary to have done so. I do not doubt that the jury have heaped upon the shoulders of the three defendants damages which Frogley, the police superintendent, might possibly have had to bear, and for which the three defendants were not liable, had Frogley not succeeded, as he did, under his plea of justification. But what I might have to say as to this, in the view I take of this case, is now immaterial.

For these reasons above, in my opinion, the appeal should be allowed and judgment entered for the three defendants with costs here and below.

CHITTY, L.J., read the following judgment: The original arrest of the plaintiff within the actual boundaries of the camp at Shorncliffe by order of the adjutant then acting in command of the volunteer battalion in which the plaintiff was then serving as a private was unquestionably valid and justifiable in law. This proposition was not and could not be denied by the plaintiff's counsel. In the language of section 176 of the Army Act, 1881, the plaintiff was then "subject to military law as a soldier." His battalion was then being trained or exercised with a portion of the regular forces of the Crown, and was attached to or otherwise acting as part of or with such regular forces. The man into whose charge he was committed when first placed under arrest was a member of his corps and was himself also subject to military law as a soldier. The offence with which the plaintiff was charged was a military offence as well also as a crime for which he might have been indicted under the ordinary law. All that was done subsequently, down the marching of the plaintiff under escort to the police-station at Hemel Hempstead was done in execution of the order given by the adjutant in the camp. The plaintiffs' three comrades, members of the same corps, against whom the judgment under appeal was given, were acting throughout in obedience to the original order transmitted to them at Shorncliffe Station in the usual military manner through subordinate officers who were their superiors and whom they were bound to obey.

The question is at what point of time and space the military status of the plaintiff and his three comrades ceased. The learned judge has held that it ceased upon their departure from the camp at Shorncliffe, and that thereupon their status became that of civilians subject only as to discipline to the provisions of the Volunteer Act, 1863, and subsequent statutes relating to volunteers. He held that the training and exercise mentioned in section 176 of the Army Act, 1881, then came to an end, and that such training and exercise did not include the proceeding to or from the camp itself.

In the argument on the appeal the plaintiff's counsel supported these propositions. He further argued that if the status of the plaintiff and his three comrades was not changed on their departure from the camp, it became changed when they reached Shorncliffe Station; and if not then, when they reached Boxmoor Station; and if not then, at all events before they reached the police-station.

Now, in my opinion there are upon the admitted facts two points only at which it can be reasonably argued that the change of status took place—viz., the departure from the camp and the arrival at the police-station. In my judgment the change did not take place until the plaintiff and his three comrades reached the police-station, and the plaintiff was given in charge of the police. It was not contested that the plaintiff was and remained under lawful military arrest until he came to the boundary of the camp, but it is said that the transition took place immediately the boundary was passed. The argument, if well founded, presents a curious result. As the volunteer battalion was marching out of camp, so much of it as had passed the boundary would be civilians subject to volunteer discipline only; so much as had not crossed the line would remain subject to military law as soldiers. According to the argument each individual man as he steps over the line changes his status, though he forms part of a battalion under arms and in marching order. However curious and anomalous this result may seem, still it must be submitted to if it is the true result of the Acts of Parliament as applied to the facts.

An important factor in this case is the order of the 22nd of April, 1896, which seems to have been lost sight of in the court below, and to which it would appear the attention of the learned judge was not called. It is headed, "Home District Orders—Horse Guards, Whitehall." It runs thus: "Referring to paragraph 275 of the Volunteer Regulations, 1895, sanction is hereby given under authority dated War Office, 16 September, 1896, No. V., Camps, 3578, to the formation of the Home Counties Volunteer Brigade at Shorncliffe 1st to 8th August, 1896. The commanding officers have been informed accordingly. By order." It was signed by the proper authority. The order is for the formation of a brigade, and not merely of a camp. In point of time it extended from the 1st to the 8th day of August, both inclusive. It covered the whole of the 8th of August, the day on which the plaintiff was taken to the police-station. Under the 573rd of the Regulations for the Volunteer Force an additional allowance of 8s. for every officer and 4s. for every man of other rank is made to cover the time occupied in joining and quitting a camp when the volunteer's attendance at the camp reckons towards qualifying him for the efficiency capitation grant. This regulation is also of importance. It provides a payment in respect of joining and quitting the camp. The brigade was formed and constituted by the War Office order already stated.

Now, I take it that the military authority of the officer appointed to command the brigade covered the whole period of the eight days. It would be within the scope of his authority to direct the commanding officers of the various volunteer battalions, who had signified their intention of forming part of the brigade, by what route they should march into and from camp. In practice, probably, in small bridades he leaves the arrangements as to the route to the discretion of the officers commanding the battalions. But section 176 applies equally to the assembling of a larger body than a mere brigade consisting of from two to four battalions. It applies to a division or an army corps. The greater the number of the battalions and troops of all arms, including artillery, cavalry, and artillery volunteers, and regulars, the greater would be the necessity for prescribing the routes by which the various bodies should march to and from the place where they are ultimately to be assembled, and the times of their marching, and other like details; and I consider that all such details would constitute an essential part of the training.

I come now to the critical point of the case. When did the training or exercise of the corps or company to which the plaintiff belonged, with a portion of the regular forces, begin and end? In my opinion it began at the time when the corps or company fell in under arms in military formation for the purpose of marching to, and being conveyed by the special military train to Shorncliffe; and it ended as to the corps or company, other than the plaintiff and his three comrades, when, having reached their homeward destination, they were finally dismissed; and it ended as to the plaintiff and his three comrades when they had reached the police-station and the plaintiff was taken in charge by the inspector and his three comrades were dismissed. In my opinion it makes no difference whether the march to and from the place where the different battalions forming part of the brigade or larger body is long or short, or whether it is performed wholly or partly on foot or by railway train or any other mode of conveyance. In this case the homeward march was performed partly by conveyance in the railway train. The getting into and out of the train in military order and formation, technically called "entraining" and "detraining," is an important part of military duty and exercise. The training and exercise mentioned in section 176 cannot be reasonably restricted to what is actually done in the presence of the regular force. If at any time during the eight days the plaintiff's battalion had been marched out of the camp, and had been drilled or put through evolutions, they would still be training with the regular troops, although all the regular troops had remained in camp or had been marched out in some other direction for temporary separate exercise. I can find no sufficient reason for confining the training or exercise to training or exercise in or at or near the camp itself. The object and the effect of the section is to place the whole force, composed of regulars and volunteers, under one and the same military law during the period to which the training extends. The Act ought, in my opinion, to be so construed as to afford a safe, practical, and working rule for the officers and men under arms.

I think it unnecessary to go over again all the other sections of the Acts and the various regulations which A. L. Smith, L.J., has fully dealt with. But section 158 of the Army Act, 1881, requires special notice. The section opens with the words "Where an offence under this Act has been committed by any person while subject to military law." These words constitute a condition precedent to all that follows. The section continues: "Such person may be taken into and kept in military custody and tried and punished for such offence, although he or the corps or battalion to which he belongs has ceased to be subject to military law in like manner as he might have been taken into and kept in military custody, tried, or punished if he or such corps or battalion had continued so subject." The learned judge has taken the words of the condition literally, and has held that the offence must have been actually committed. I am unable so to read the condition. So to read it, in my opinion, not only reduces the section to a palpable absurdity, but renders it meaningless. In some impossible manner it must be shown that the offence has been committed by the person before he can be put upon his trial for the offence. It is manifest that the words "alleged to have been committed" must be read into the condition in order to give it any meaning at all.

The result, in my opinion, is that the defence has been established and the acts of the defendants are justified in law. The grievances of which the plaintiff complains are grievances suffered by him when subject to military law at the hands of persons also subject to military law in execution of their military duty. To these grievances section 43 of the Army Act, 1881, applies, and for them the plaintiff must seek redress in accordance with the section. The court cannot add to the remedy which is thus provided. It is the plaintiff's only means of seeking redress.

As the action fails there is no question in reference to the damages. But in my opinion they were monstrous in amount, and would have justified us in directing a new trial on the ground of their being excessive. The plaintiff's three comrades put no indignity upon him; they did not even deprive him of his rifle. His only complaint against them, apart from the question of law, seems to be that they did not speak to him when in the train. The only probable explanation of the amount of damages is that the jury, in mistaken sympathy with the plaintiff, who was acquitted on his trial, heaped upon the three defendants all the consequences that followed after his being given into custody at the police-station. I may add that had the case been otherwise than as above stated, it would, in my opinion, have proved detrimental to the true interests of the volunteer force.

NORTH v. PERCIVAL. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Specific performance—Mistake—Condition precedent to complete contract—Repudiation by vendor—Wilful default—Interest—Form of order.

By certain heads of agreement it was agreed that thirty-six acres of land—to be measured, as the boundary on one side was unmarked—should be sold for £3,600, the purchase-money to bear interest at 4 per cent. from a fixed day until completion. A proviso was also inserted—"subject to approval of conditions and form of agreement by purchaser's solicitor." The vendors, by a mistake on their part, required the purchaser to take forty-two acres at £100 per acre. The purchaser refused, and brought an action to enforce specific performance of the contract for the sale of thirty-six acres, which contract the vendors repudiated.

Held, that the mistake did not go to the root of the contract; that the proviso was not a condition precedent to a complete contract; and that the purchaser was therefore entitled to the specific performance he asked.

(a.) Reported by C. C. HENSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, also, that the repudiation of the contract by the vendors did not amount to "wilful default" on their part so as to deprive them of interest on the purchase-money.

On the 10th of April, 1897, John Andrew Percival and two others, as vendors, entered into an agreement with Frederick William North, as purchaser, whereby it was agreed as follows: "Heads of agreement. Land purchased, 36 acres of land; bounded on south by the parish of Yaxley, west by Great Northern Railway, and on other sides by the land of the vendors. A strip of land on the north side of the width of 30 feet, with sufficient land on the north-west corner to have access to the railway, estimated altogether at one acre, is reserved to the vendors, and the 36 acres to be measured leaving such strip and access. Purchase-money, £3,600. Settlement July 6th, 1897. Purchaser may take possession forthwith on arranging with tenant, and paying interest at 3 per cent. from time of taking possession. If purchase not completed on the 6th of July, purchase-money to bear interest at 4 per cent. from that day until actual completion. Where no fence exists between the land sold and the land retained, the vendors to make and maintain a fence for the southern half of the distance, and the purchaser for the northern half. Subject to approval of conditions and forms of agreement by purchaser's solicitor."

The boundaries of the land agreed to be sold were, it was admitted, defined upon three sides, but there was no division on the eastern side between the land agreed to be sold and land intended to be retained by the vendors. Before completion the vendors discovered that the whole amount of their land in the locality was fifty-two acres, and was not, as they had supposed when making the agreement, forty-six acres. They alleged that what they had intended to sell was the whole amount of their land minus ten acres, and said that what they had intended to sell was therefore forty-two acres and not thirty-six acres. They accordingly required the purchaser to take forty-two acres at £100 per acre. They had marked out no boundary on the eastern side.

The purchaser refused to take forty-two acres, and brought this action for specific performance of the contract for the sale of thirty-six acres. By their defence the vendors alleged there was no complete and binding contract for the purchase or sale of any land; that, if there was, it was subject to approval of conditions and form of agreement by the purchaser's solicitor, which had not been given; that there was no sufficiently defined land, and that it had not been marked off; that there had been a common mistake, the land agreed to be sold amounting to forty-two acres at £100 per acre. They then counter-claimed that if the agreement were held to be binding it might be rescinded on the ground of mistake.

Warrington, Q.C., and R. Rowlands, for the purchaser.—The contract was for the sale of thirty-six acres only. If there is uncertainty the defendants can and should mark out the eastern boundary.

They referred to Plant v. Bourne, 45 W. R. 498, ante, p. 59, [1897] 2 Ch. 281; and Wylson v. Dunn, 35 W. R. 405, 34 Ch. D. 569.

The purchaser can waive the proviso as to approval. We ask for an order similar to that in Wilkins v. Green, 27 Beav. 437.

Benshaw, Q.C., and Christopher James, for the vendors.—There was no binding contract at all. There was a mistake and the vendors are entitled to rescission: Crossley v. Maycock, 22 W. R. 387, L. R. 7 Eq. 180; Paget v. Marshall, 33 W. R. 608, 28 Ch. D. 255; Wilding v. Sanderson, 45 W. R. 675, [1897] 2 Ch. 534. The purchaser cannot waive the proviso as to approval: Lloyd v. Nowell, 44 W. R. 43, [1895] 2 Ch. 744.

KEKEWICH, J.—Omitting for the moment the last two lines contained in the heads of agreement of the 10th of April, 1897, and reading it as the production of two business men embodying a bargain come to between them it seems to me to present no great difficulty. [His lordship then, after considering the agreement, said that it was a contract for the sale of thirty-six acres and that the boundary line would be determined without difficulty, and continued:] Then comes a much more serious question. Mr. Percival says: "Not only am I entitled to resist specific performance of this agreement, but I am entitled to resist it on the ground of mistake." Although authorities were cited upon that point, I shall not go into them, because a mistake must first be established.

Now, what was the mistake? There was, in one sense, no doubt, a mistake. The parties did not know that the land contained 52 acres. Mr. North says that he bought, not 52 acres less 10, but 36 acres, while the vendors thought they were only going to get back 10 acres, and that there were only 46 altogether. It now appears that Mr. North will get just what he intended to get—namely, 36 acres. The vendors, on the other hand, will retain more than they intended to retain; they agreed to sell 36 acres, and thought they would only retain 10 acres, whereas, as they bitterly complain, instead of keeping 10 acres they will keep 16 acres. It seems to me to be a strange sort of complaint, but it does not seem to me to be a mistake which goes to the root of the contract; it may be to the disadvantage of the vendor, but it does not really touch the substance of the contract. The claim, therefore, for rescission seems to me to fall to the ground. There is one thing more. Near the end of the heads of agreement these words occur, "subject to approval of conditions and form of agreement by purchaser's solicitor." That means something, no doubt; but the question is, what does it really mean? The point has come up for decision again and again, and I can only repeat the passage in Lord Blackburn's judgment in the case of Rossiter v. Miller, 26 W. R. 865, 3 App. Cas. 1124, which I followed in Lloyd v. Nowell. Lord Blackburn says: "I think the decisions settle that it is a question of construction whether the parties finally agreed to be bound by the terms, though they were subsequently to have a formal agreement drawn up." It is a point which is not free from difficulty, but I think this was not a condition precedent to a complete contract. The parties did agree, as I hold, to what was to be sold, and to the price to be paid, and to some few smaller matters, such as the fence to be erected. Then it probably occurred to them that that would not quite do, and that a formal contract ought to be prepared. Then the purchaser said that his solicitor must approve of such formal document. No contract has been prepared, and the purchaser's solicitor has not given his approval. I think that was only meant to be a final stipulation to make the matter move smoothly. I cannot myself see in this case that it governs the whole contract so as to prevent its being now completed. I think, therefore, that there is a complete contract without any formal agreement.

[By the minutes of the judgment as drawn up it was declared that the agreement constituted a binding contract and ought to be specifically performed, and it was ordered that the defendants should be at liberty to fix the exact eastern boundary of the land having regard to the terms of the agreement, but that they were not entitled to exercise that liberty so as to interfere with the beneficial enjoyment by the plaintiff of the 36 acres of land; and the plaintiff by his counsel accepting the title to the land, it was ordered that interest should be computed at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum on the sum of £3,600, the purchase-money for the land from the 6th of the July, 1897, when the same ought to have been paid according to the terms of the agreement; and it was ordered that an account of the rents and profits of the land received by the defendants or persons on their behalf since the 6th of July, 1897, should be taken, and that that together with the plaintiff's taxed costs should be deducted from the amount of the purchase-money and interest thereon; and that upon the plaintiffs' paying the balance to be certified to be due to the defendants in respect of the purchase-money and interest after such deduction as aforesaid, the defendants should execute a proper conveyance of the land, &c.]

On the 5th of April, 1898, the plaintiff moved to vary the above minutes, inter alia, by striking out the order for payment of interest.

Warrington, Q.C., and R. Rowlands, for the motion.—The vendors have been guilty of wilful default and the purchaser ought not therefore to pay interest. De Visme v. De Visme, 1 Mac. & G. 336. [KEKEWICH, J., referred to Woods and Lewis's Contract, ante, p. 373, [1898] 1 Ch. 433.] The plaintiff did not admit the title, and asks that the recital as to admission be struck out of the order.

Renshaw, Q.C., and Christopher James, for the vendors.—The vendors' conduct does not amount to wilful default. They are, therefore, entitled to the interest. The purchaser cannot have the contract specifically performed and then try to vary it.

KEKEWICH, J.—My judgment did not prevent this point from being taken on a motion to vary the minutes. It is agreed that the order was one for the usual decree for specific performance. Of course there is no usual decree of one form adapted to all cases, but what is meant by the usual decree is one made in accordance with the practice and books on the subject and adapted to each particular case. Sometimes it is made in a vendor's action, sometimes in a purchaser's; sometimes the title is accepted and sometimes not. I think it is open to doubt whether the registrar was right in ordering the purchaser to pay this interest. The question turns on the words in the contract: "If purchase not completed on the 6th of July, purchase-money to bear interest at 4 per cent. from that date until actual completion." I think, however, that I must follow Romer, J., in the case of Woods and Lewis's Contract, to which I have just referred. Speaking of a case where the interest clause made interest payable if delay occurred "from any cause whatever," he says: "But it had been previously settled that the generality of those words did not allow a vendor to claim the interest where delay occurred by his 'wilful default.'" The question is, then, have the vendors been guilty of "wilful default," so that they cannot claim interest notwithstanding the stipulation in the contract giving interest after the 6th of July until actual completion? There are many cases illustrating the meaning of "wilful default," and the case before Romer, J., shows what does not amount to "wilful default." "Wilful default" is obstruction to the completion of the contract. All the cases go to that, that there must be obstruction in the matter of completion. But the question here is, Does the repudiation of the contract by the vendors amount to "wilful default" within the authorities. I do not think it can be said that this is a case of wilful default of the kind mentioned in the authorities; but is it a default of a similar character; I think it is not. The vendors having repudiated the contract, the question arose whether the contract should be performed or not. The purchaser insisted upon it, and having obtained his decree, now comes here and says, "I insist on the performance of the contract, but with modifications in my favour." Mr. Warrington says that that is not so, but that the purchaser ought not to be made to pay interest where the vendors have themselves obstructed him. The answer to that, to my mind, is that the vendors have not obstructed the purchaser, and I therefore think that the registrar was right in providing, according to the usual form, that interest should be paid until completion and set off against rents and profits. As the purchaser has withdrawn his admission of title, that will be struck out, and there will be an inquiry as to title. Otherwise the order will go as drawn. The purchaser must pay the costs of the motion.

NORTH METROPOLITAN TRAMWAYS CO. v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL. (a.)

Practice — Costs — Action against public authority — Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1 (b).

When in substance "judgment has been obtained" by a public authority as defendant within the meaning of sub-section (b) of section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, and costs have been given in its favour, such judgment carries the right to have taxation as between solicitor and client, although no direction as to the mode of taxation is given in the judgment.

The action here had been brought against the defendants for an injunction to restrain an alleged trespass on the tramway belonging to the plaintiffs.

It was successfully contended on behalf of the defendants that they were entitled to acquire and purchase the tramways under the provisions of section 43 of the Tramways Act, 1870, and the plaintiffs' action was dismissed with costs, but no direction was given in the judgment as to how the costs should be taxed.

The defendants brought in a bill for taxation as between solicitor and client, and the taxing-master so taxed it, acting in pursuance of section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act.

The plaintiffs objected to such taxation on the ground that an order for taxation of costs as between solicitor and client ought to have been asked for at the hearing.

J. Tanner, A. H. Carrington, and F. Richardson, for the parties.

ROMER, J.—In my opinion the taxing-master is right in this case. The action was one that came within the provisions of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, and judgment was in substance (apart from a special provision as to certain costs which I need not further refer to) obtained by the defendant council with costs, so that under the Act the council became entitled to have its costs taxed as between solicitor and client. I do not think the Act was intended to take away the discretion of the court in an unsuccessful action of the kind described in the Act, of depriving the public authority in a proper case of its costs. In other words, the court would not, in my opinion, be obliged to let "judgment be obtained" by the defendant within the meaning of the phrase as used in the Act where, in the judicial discretion of the court, the case appeared one in which the defendant authority ought not to recover any costs against the plaintiff. But where, in substance (and each case ought to be dealt with as a question of substance and not of form), the defendant authority in an action falling within the Act succeeds, so that substantially the defendant obtains judgment, then the court is bound by the Act to give the defendant solicitor and client costs. Now, in the case before me the defendant council substantially obtained judgment, and I never intended to deprive it of its rights to solicitor and client costs. But owing to the Act not being specially referred to at the time judgment was given by me, my judgment as drawn up merely directed the plaintiff to pay the defendants' costs, without saying how they were to be taxed. I do not think the form of the judgment prevents the defendants from having their costs taxed as between the solicitor and client.

According to the statute of course the matter could easily be made quite clear by an application to the court to have the form altered, but I do not think it is necessary to bind the defendant to the expense of making such application. No doubt primâ facie an order to tax costs, means taxation between party and party, and it would be better in cases of the kind now before me to insert expressly in the judgment that the costs are to be taxed as between solicitor and client. But the omission would not deprive the defendants entitled to the benefit of the statute, the court having no discretion in the matter when once it is clear that in substance judgment has been obtained by the defendant. Nor is it necessary that the judgment itself should show on its face that the action was one falling within the Act: see Finlay v. Seaton, 1 Taunt. 210, where a somewhat similar question arose under the Act 11 Geo. 3, c. 19; and see also Forman v. Dawes, 11 M. & W. 730, with reference to the special Act there referred to. What Wood, V.C., said in Lister v. Leather, 4 K. & J. 425, 7 W. R. Ch. Dig. 54, is not inconsistent with the view I take. There the Vice-Chancellor was only deciding what form it would be right his judgment should take in a patent action having regard to the provisions of the 43rd section of the Patent Law Amendment Act, 1852.

I may add, too, that I am informed that it is the practice in similar cases in the Queen's Bench Division that the masters should tax as between solicitor and client although there is no express direction in the judgment as to how the costs should be taxed or as to the Act applying. For these reasons I think the taxing-master was right.

HORN v. SLEAFORD RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL. (a.)

Local government—Rating—Water supply—Water rates—Water rents—Contributory place—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 229.

When a district council provide a supply of water to a contributory place, in pursuance of section 51 of the Public Health Act, 1875, it is within their discretion how much of the sum required to meet the expenses of such supply shall be raised by water rates and water rents. The residue may be raised by a rate upon the contributory place, as for special expenses, under section 229.

Semble, section 229, by which the expenses of providing a water supply to any contributory place are made special expenses, includes such supply to a part of a contributory place.

Case stated by quarter sessions.

The appellant appealed to quarter sessions from a rate made upon the owners and occupiers of property in the parish of Heckington to pay the instalments of principal and interest due under a loan raised by the respondents to defray the cost of providing a supply of water for the village of Heckington. The appeal was dismissed, this case being stated for the opinion of the High Court.

The facts and arguments sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Vesey FitzGerald, Q.C., and Bonsey, for the appellant.

R. C. Glen, for the respondents.

Cur. adv. vult.

WILLS, J.—The parish of Heckington is one of the group of parishes forming the rural district of Sleaford. Within the parish of Heckington, and forming perhaps a twentieth part of the area of the parish, is the village of Heckington.

The district council have provided a supply of water for the village of Heckington, and in respect of the water supply they charge water rates. To provide the supply, however, they borrowed, on the security of the rates applicable to the purpose, a sum of £1,350, repayable with interest by instalments. To pay some instalments overdue, with interest, they have made a rate upon the whole of the parish of Heckington.

The appellant, who is rated in Heckington parish, but whose rateable property is two or three miles from the village, objects, and says that the whole of the expense of providing the water supply ought to be paid out of the rates payable by the consumers of the water. To ascertain how this capital expenditure is to be paid involves a minute examination of a somewhat complicated set of enactments.

The district council succeeds to the powers of the rural authority under the Public Health Act, 1875. By section 51 they may provide their district or any contributory place or any part of any such contributory place with a supply of water sufficient for public and private purposes, and for that purpose may construct and maintain waterworks, dig wells, and do any other necessary acts. "Contributory places" are defined by section 229, and in this instance the whole of the parish of Heckington is the contributory place involved.

By section 233 the district council may, with the sanction of the Local Government Board (which has been given), for the purpose of defraying any costs, charges, and expenses incurred by them in the execution of the sanitary acts of the Public Health Act, 1875, borrow any necessary sums of money. The sums so borrowed are made chargeable, if applied to the general expenses of the authority, upon the common fund out of which such expenses are payable —i.e., out of the rates levied upon this district generally; if applied to special expenses of the authority, upon any rates out of which such expenses are payable.

By section 229 expenses incurred by a rural authority are divided into two classes—general and special expenses. General expenses are all such as are not special. The determining element is therefore to be sought in the definition of special expenses.

"Special expenses," says that section, "shall be the expenses of the construction, maintenance, and cleansing of sewers in any contributory place within the district, the providing a water supply to any such place and maintaining any necessary works for that purpose, if and so far as the expenses of such supply and maintenance are not defrayed out of water rates or water rents under this Act" and other matters not material in this case. Special expenses are by the same section made a separate charge on each contributory place

The language is not happy. So far as sewers are concerned, the expenses connected with sewers in any contributory place—i.e., within that area—are made special expenses. So far as water supply is concerned, the cost of providing a water supply to any such place is what is made a special expense. The case of the supply to a part of the contributory place has been omitted. I believe this to be a mere slip of drafting, for the power of a certain number of ratepayers to require that water rates or rents shall be charged to consumers (the exercise of which in default of such requirement is optional with the rural authority) given by section 10 of the Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, is confined to the ratepayers of the contributory place. Such a power would be absolutely unnecessary in the case of a supply to part of a contributory place unless the ratepayers in question are liable to the cost of the water supply, and the restriction of the power to ratepayers of the contributory place would be simply monstrous if they were not the only persons in the district so liable—in other words, if they were not special expenses within the section. It is, after all, no great stretch of language to treat the water supply to the part of the contributory place as (for the purpose of payment) a supply to the contributory place if the contributory place has to pay for it, or for so much of it as is not covered by the water rates or rents.

The question does not arise in the present case, which grows out of an appeal, under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, to the quarter sessions, the foundation of which is a notice of appeal which must (section 1) state the grounds of appeal. The quarter sessions are precluded from entertaining any ground not stated in the notice, and so, therefore, is this court. It was impossible to discuss section 229 without referring to it, and the variation of the language which it exhibits has led us to an elaborate consideration of all the enactments bearing upon the meaning of the complete phraseology, with the result we have indicated, and although we have felt bound to allude to this matter, we have no intention of casting any doubt upon the correctness of the assumption upon which this case has been argued, and which we believe has been generally recognized in practice—namely, that the supply of water to part of a contributory place is included in the expression in section 229, "a supply to any such place."

The objection raised by the appellant is of quite a different character. It is that the whole of the cost both of construction and maintenance of the necessary works and of the supply generally must be paid out of the water rates or rents, so far as is arithmetically possible, and that the expression "if and so far as the expenses are not defrayed out of water rates or rents," which implies that there may be a balance not covered by those sources of income, is intended only to meet such trivial portions of the expenses as fall within a proviso to section 230, which says that where the amount required by any precept from a contributory place in respect of special expenses is less than £10, or so small that a rate of less than a penny in the £ would be required to raise the sum, the overseers to whom the precept is directed shall not assess or levy any special rate for the same, but shall pay the amount as if it formed part of the contribution required from them in respect of general expenses. I cannot think that this view is right.

By section 56 of the Public Health Act, 1875, where the authority supply water to any premises, they may, and by section 10 of the Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, if required by a certain number of ratepayers of the contributory place within which they supply the water, they must charge in respect of such supply a water rate to be assessed upon the net annual value of the premises to which the water is supplied, or they may enter into agreements for the supply of water, in which case the charge is called a water rent, not a water rate. There is nothing at all to indicate the scale of charge, or to give a limit in either direction. The supply of water is to be paid for by the consumer, excepting in certain cases in which upon a report from the surveyor of the authority it appears that a house is without a proper water supply, and the cost is very small or fixed at such an amount as the Local Government Board may think reasonable under all the circumstances; and, except in the limited class of cases to which the elaborate machinery of section 3 of the Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, applies, there is no power to compel anyone to take water from the supply provided, nor, except in the case of persons who are within 200 feet of a stand-pipe, to compel anyone who does not take water to pay for it. Under such circumstances it is obvious that the authority must do like anyone else who has a commodity to sell which the customer may buy or not as he likes. They must make their price sufficiently low to attract custom. If the whole expense—or the whole except a sum too small to make another penny in the pound in the water rate—had to fall upon the consumers and they had to pay an extravagant price they would, wherever they could, do without it, and the people who would have to pay the whole cost of the water supply would be the persons who could not do without it and the persons who live within 200 feet of a stand-pipe. There would be, to say the least, a temptation to set up a great number of stand-pipes.

It is impossible to suppose that anything of the kind was intended. It is of the essence of legislation of this kind that works necessary or desirable for the sake of health should be paid for by the inhabitants at large of the chargeable unit, though the direct benefit may accrue only to a portion—perhaps to a small portion, perhaps even to only one of the inhabitants. What is A's turn to-day may be B's turn to-morrow. Very often the works are too expensive to be borne by those directly benefited, and, had they to be so borne, they could not be done at all. The whole community very often benefits indirectly, and even if they do not, their turn may come and other works for their peculiar benefit may likewise be done at the general expense.

It is of no purpose to put extreme cases and to show that any unreasonable things might be done by the local authority. All the legislation which confers powers upon authorities of any kind is founded upon the assumption that they will act reasonably. Nor is the expectation disappointed, as a general rule, so far as one may judge from the cases—numerous as they are—which bring under the review of the courts the proceedings of local authorities. Large powers for good involve the theoretical possibility of doing high-handed and unreasonable things.

An observation which perhaps touches more closely the present case is that legislation of this kind has necessarily a very wide and general application, and that although it may appear to the appellant hard that he should have to pay for the cost of works to supply water to people three miles off, the operation of a general enactment cannot depend upon whether the parish is one mile long or ten, or the particular area is at one end or the other of the parish.

It is to be observed further that the water supply may be for both private and public purposes. Public purposes, though carried out only in one part of a contributory place, may be of very general benefit not only to the consumers of the water supply, but to others and to persons who live outside the area of the water supply, and it cannot be supposed that expenses applicable to such purposes were intended to be paid exclusively by persons taking the supply for their own private purposes.

In the operation of section 229 no distinction, as it seems to me, can be drawn between capital and current expenditure. Both fall within the category of special expenses. In relief of both is to be carried to the account any sum which can practically and reasonably be raised by water rates and water rents. Of such reasonableness and practicability the local authority must be the only judges. When the amount required has been reduced by the sum raised by the water rates and water rents, the balance, so far as it is capable of being estimated by unbroken pence in the pound in a rate upon the contributory place, is to be charged upon and paid for by the contributory place.

There is nothing to show that in the present instance the proper deductions have not been made, or that any portion of the water rates and rents has been available to reduce the sums required to meet the instalments of debt and the interest in arrear; and I am of opinion, therefore, that the rate was rightly made, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

In the Matter of AN ARBITRATION BETWEEN GEORGE AND THE GOLDSMITHS' AND GENERAL BURGLARY INSURANCE ASSOCIATION. (a.)

Insurance — Burglary and housebreaking — "Actual forcible and violent entry"—Entry by turning handle of door.

A policy of insurance against loss of jewellery in the assured's shop by burglary and housebreaking defined these terms as "loss by theft following upon actual violent and forcible entry upon the premises." At 8 a.m., during the temporary absence of the porter in charge of the shop, an entry was effected by turning the handle of the door of the shop, which was shut, but neither bolted or locked, and jewellery was stolen.

Held, that the loss was covered by the policy.

Special case stated by an arbitrator.

On the 24th of December, 1891, George effected with the association a policy of insurance of his stock-in-trade and jewellery situate at his shop and premises, 78, Strand, London, "against loss or damage by burglary and housebreaking, as hereinafter defined." The policy provided that the assured should be paid the value of any of the property insured which should be "lost by theft following upon actual forcible and violent entry upon the premises."

On the 12th of March, 1897, the policy being then in force, the front door of the shop was at 8.30 a.m. shut, but neither locked or bolted, and access to the shop could be gained by turning the handle of the door. Soon after 8.30 a.m., in the temporary absence of the porter, who was moving the shutters of the shop to the rear of the premises, one or more persons opened the front door, entered the shop unobserved, and stole, took, and carried away certain jewellery which was then in the shop.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether the assured had sustained a loss of the jewellery by theft following upon actual forcible and violent entry upon the premises within the meaning of the policy.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and A. T. Lawrence, Q.C., for the assured.

Bucknill, Q.C., and C. L. Attenborough, for the association.

WILLS, J.—It is somewhat difficult to say what is the proper construction to be placed upon the language of this policy, but, broadly speaking, it seems to me to be a policy against burglary and housebreaking, for it says that the assured shall be insured against burglary and housebreaking as thereinafter defined. We must therefore look to the definition of those terms given in the policy, but it will, I think, be convenient to state first of all what would have been the appropriate description of burglary and housebreaking if those words had been intended to have borne an unqualified meaning. The technical definition of burglary and housebreaking is a felonious breaking and entering of premises for the purpose of committing a felony therein. This policy, however, contains no reference to "breaking" as a term by itself, which is an essential part of the definition of burglary and housebreaking, and substitutes for it "an actual forcible and violent entry upon the premises," and instead of saying for "the purpose of committing a felony therein," the policy says that theft must follow the entry. It is apparent that some qualification of the terms burglary and housebreaking is intended, for, whereas breaking may technically be only a constructive breaking, the policy says there must be an actual forcible and violent entry. Therefore constructive burglary or housebreaking is got rid of. Now, do the words "forcible and violent entry" mean anything more than a burglarious entry, for force is part of the notion which enters into every definition of burglary or housebreaking? In old indictments the expression used was, by force and arms; now we say, feloniously and burglariously. If the policy had omitted the word "violent" and had said "a forcible entry followed by theft" it would have had much the same meaning as the ordinary definition of burglary or housebreaking with the substitution of a theft committed for the intent. Does it, then, make any difference that the word "violent" is used? "Violent" only means by force. In the dictionaries the first synonym given for "violence" is physical force. Does the word "violent" in this policy mean anything more than that? If it did, cases might occur which the policy must obviously have been intended to cover, in which, nevertheless, the force used would be so trivial that they would be excluded from the policy. Take the case of an entry effected by pushing aside a catch and lifting a window, Can it be supposed that the policy would not apply to such a case as that? Another instance might be taken from the opening of premises by means of a skeleton key, which would take no more force than opening a door in the usual way. Illustrations such as these show, to my mind, that the word "violent" in this policy cannot have been intended to be construed in its popular sense, and I do not think it was intended that violence in any special degree must be used. I think that the policy gives a somewhat inartistic definition of burglary and housebreaking subject to certain important qualifications which explain why the parties resorted to a special definition of those terms instead of leaving them to be interpreted according to their ordinary legal meaning.

KENNEDY, J.—I am of the same opinion. This is a policy against burglary and housebreaking, and, seeing that those are words which although they have a technical meaning are also fairly well understood in a popular sense, it would be necessary, I think, to use very clear words to deprive the assured of the benefit to be obtained from the policy by reason of the words burglary and housebreaking having been used. It is quite true that the policy does not say that the assured is desirous of effecting an insurance against burglary and housebreaking simpliciter, but "as thereinafter defined."

What the company would want to be protected against in the strict interpretation of burglary and housebreaking would be what is called constructive burglary. It is also assumed that the premises will be closed by some physical obstruction and therefore the policy says there must be an actual forcible and violent entry, and that really gives an equivalent to the breaking which is an essential part of burglary. So long as there is an actual closing of the premises by some obstacle, there is that condition of things which the company intended to have and what the language of the policy fairly construed gives them. These premises were closed by a door which was intended to prevent persons from coming in, and that obstacle was overcome by force. Nothing would be more undesirable than to have a discussion as to what constituted violence as distinguished from force, for it would be a most difficult matter to settle.

WILLS, J.—I should like to add to what I have already said, that we must not be taken to have decided that shoplifting comes within this policy.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF LONDON AND JUSTICES OF THE STRAND DIVISION.

Ex parte LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL. (a.)

Licensing law—Appeal against refusal to transfer—Notice of appeal served on justices—Order by court of quarter sessions on justices to pay appellant's costs— Certiorari—Alehouse Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), ss. 27, 29.

D. appealed to quarter sessions against a refusal of the licensing justices to transfer a licence. At the hearing of the appeal the justices appeared by counsel to inform the court of the reasons on which they had acted; but the quarter sessions allowed the appeal and made an order directing that the justices should pay all the costs that the appellant had incurred.

Held, that so much of the order as directed the justices to pay costs was ultra vires, as the quarter sessions had no jurisdiction under sections 27 and 29 of the Alehouse Act, 1828, to make such an order.

Cause shown against a rule nisi for a certiorari to bring up to be quashed an order of quarter sessions for the county of London, so far as it referred to the payment of the successful appellant's costs by the justices of the Strand Division.

In January, 1898, the justices for the Strand Division of the county of London held a special session for the transfer of licences to such persons as desired to keep inns, alehouses, and victualling houses to sell excisable liquors pursuant to 9 Geo. 4 and Acts amending the same. Dalton, a publican, applied to them to transfer to him a licence in respect of the "Horse and Dolphin" public-house, and they refused his application. Dalton having served due notice of his intention to appeal to the Clerkenwell Quarter Sessions on the justices of the Strand Division, the latter appeared by counsel at the hearing of the appeal to inform the court of the reasons on which they had refused to grant the transfer. The court of quarter sessions, after hearing counsel on both sides, reversed the decision of the Strand justices; and further ordered that the justices "should forthwith pay or cause to be paid to the clerk of the peace of this county for Messrs. Layton & Sons, solicitors for the said Dalton, the sum of £35 for his costs, and this court doth further order that the treasurer of the county council for London, charged with the receipt and expenditure of moneys from and out of which the costs of public prosecutions have ordinarily been defrayed, do repay unto the said justices and their solicitor the said sum of £35 and a further sum of £7 18s., and indemnify the said justices from all costs and charges whatsoever to which such justices may have been put by reason of their having had served upon them the notice of the intention of the said Dalton to appeal."

The following sections are material to the argument:

Section 27 of the Alehouse Act, 1828, provides that "any person who shall think himself aggrieved by any act of any justice done in or concerning the execution of this Act" may apply to quarter sessions, "provided that such person shall give to such justice notice in writing of his intention to appeal, and of the cause and matter thereof, within five days next after such act shall have been done, and seven days at least before such session . . . and the court at such session shall hear and determine the matter of such appeal, and shall make such order therein, with or without costs, as to such court shall seem meet; and in case the act appealed against shall be the refusal to grant or to transfer any licence, . . . and the judgment be reversed, it shall be lawful for the said court to grant or to transfer such licence in the same manner as if such licence had been granted . . . or transferred . . . at the licensing meeting, and the judgment of the said court shall be final and conclusive; and in case of the dismissal of such appeal . . . the said court shall order the said judgment to be carried into execution and costs awarded to be paid. . . ."

Section 29 provides that in "every such case where notice of appeal against judgment of any justice in or concerning the execution of this Act shall have been given, and such appeal shall have been dismissed, or the judgment so appealed against shall have been affirmed or such appeal shall have been abandoned, it shall be lawful for the court to whom such appeal shall have been made or intended to be made, and such court is hereby required, to adjudge and order that the party so having appealed or given notice of his intention to appeal shall pay to the justice to whom such notice shall have been given, or to whomsoever he shall appoint, such sum by way of costs as shall, in the opinion of the court, be sufficient to indemnify such justice from all costs and charges whatsoever to which such justice may have been put in consequence of his having had served upon him notice of the intention of such party to appeal," with power to commit to prison until payment.

The Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 92), by section 75 repealed sections 27, 28, and 29 of the Alehouse Act, 1828, except in so far as they "relate to the renewing of licences or to the transfer of licences under sections 4 and 14 of the same Act."

By section 66 of the Local Government Act, 1888 (c. 41): "All costs incurred by the quarter sessions or the justices out of sessions of a county, and all costs incurred by any justice in defending any legal proceedings taken against him in respect of any order made or act done in the execution of his duty as such justice, shall, to such amount as may be sanctioned by the standing joint committee of the county council of quarter sessions, and, so far as they are not otherwise provided for, be paid out of the county fund of the county."

F. Low showed cause.—There can be no "parties" to this appeal except the appellant and the justices; the justices being "parties," the order directing them as the unsuccessful party to pay the costs of the applicant is right, and ought not to be quashed. They had notice served on them by Dalton of his intention to appeal, and they appeared on the hearing of the appeal by counsel. It was not as if a third party had raised objection to the granting of the licence. The quarter sessions had jurisdiction to make this order on them to pay costs, under sections 27 and 29 of the Alehouse Act, 1828. By the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 1848, 1878, and 1884, and the Quarter Sessions Act, 1849, other provisions (to the 29th section of the Act of 1828) were made relative to costs on appeal and all costs inconsistent with the provisions of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879. But by the decision of the House of Lords in Boulter v. Justices of Kent, ante, p. 114, [1897] A. C. 556, it was decided that licensing justices were not a court of summary jurisdiction. Therefore all the cases decided on that ground, in which it has been held that no order for costs could be made against the justices cease to be authorities against my contention. Moreover, the case of Reg. v. Justices of London, 43 W. R. 387, [1895] 1 Q. B. 616, is now an authority that no longer can be relied on against me. It is clear that if the justices are the successful parties in an appeal that they are indemnified against loss. Under the Act of 1828 the successful party is entitled to costs from the justices if they are the unsuccessful party. That appears clear from section 66 of the Local Government Act, 1888. [Avory, contrà.—There again the indemnity is restricted to costs incurred in legal proceedings.] [RIDLEY, J.—Do you say, Mr. Low, that these proceedings were legal proceedings?] I submit these were legal proceedings. [Avory, contrà.—If the justices are active litigant parties, then, under sections 27 and 29 of the Act of 1828, they may be liable to pay costs, but I shall contend that the mere service of a notice to appear and their appearing and stating the reasons for refusing the licence does not make them litigant parties to the appeal within the meaning of the statutes.] The question depends solely upon the contruction to be placed upon sections 27 and 29, read together, of the Act of 1828, since the procedure followed under the Judicature Acts has now no bearing on it.

The following cases were referred to during argument: Rex v. Cottingham, 2 A. & E. 250; Price v. James, 41 W. R. 57, [1892] 2 Q. B. 428; Reg. v. Purdey, 13 W. R. 75, 5 B. & S. 909; Reg. v. Goodall, L. R. 9 Q. B. 557, 22 W. R. Dig. 125.

H. Avory, in support of the rule, was not required to argue.

RIDLEY, J.—I think that this rule should be made absolute. The argument of Mr. Low is that in consequence of the ruling of the House of Lords in the case of Boulter v. Justices of Kent, which puts the Summary Jurisdiction Acts out of the question upon this subject, that there must be, by implication if not expressly stated, within section 27 of the Licensing Act of 1828, a power to award costs against the justices because there is nobody else against whom they can be awarded.

That is really the argument; but we must look at the section itself and see whether it means that in every case there shall be the possibility of the power of making any such order, and I am not able to find it. The section remains as it was before, and under that section as it was construed before, without the assistance of the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, there would not have been, as I understand it, the power to order costs against the justices; but with the assistance of those Acts and the decision of Reg. v. Justices of London (which has been quoted by Mr. Low) it could be argued that, if they made themselves parties, there was power to order costs against them if they were parties to the appeal, and in that case the justices had made themselves parties to the appeal, otherwise that case would be a decision completely against Mr. Low, in the present instance, because here the justices have not made themselves parties to the appeal. But although the Act no longer does apply, and therefore the case of Reg. v. Justices of London is not a precise authority against Mr. Low's contention here to-day, it does not follow that it is a decision in his favour; nor do I see in the original Act, without the assistance of Summary Jurisdiction Acts, anything from which it can now be argued that there was more in it than it has been allowed that the Act contained previously to the decision of Boulter v. Justices of Kent. The Act surely is the same as it was before, and we are not to read into that Act power which it was held it formerly did not contain, merely because it has been ruled that the licensing justices are not a court of summary jurisdiction. It appears to me clear that in section 27 there ought to be words can be understood to mean that the costs may be awarded against the justices, before we decide that it should be so. There are no such words that I can find in section 27, and in section 29 it is quite clear to me that whilst the appellant, if unsuccessful, is to pay to the justices such costs as are dealt with in the early part of section 29, there is no provision under which the justices are to be ordered, or can be ordered to pay to a successful appellant his costs. There are, indeed, provisions under which the justices may recover from the treasurer of the county such costs as he has been put to—"to which he has been so put"—and I should have thought that those did not include the costs of the appellant; but, however that may be, the order in the present case has been that the justices shall pay those costs, and that they are to be reimbursed by the treasurer of the county, or, as in this case, by the county council. I think there is no power contained in either section 27 or section 29 of the Licensing Act of 1828 to make that order, and I am not able to accept the argument that because the case of Reg. v. Justices of London is no longer in point against Mr. Low in this case, that therefore he is entitled to succeed. It reverts to the old state of things which existed before, and without the Summary Jurisdiction Acts. I think, therefore, the rule ought to be made absolute.

CHANNELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. The only effect of Boulter v. Justices of Kent is that it prevents certain cases being authorities in the matter which they otherwise would be, and conclusive authorities. As it stands they contain certain dicta which, as far as they go, go against Mr. Low's argument, but it prevents any authority in them being binding on us. The result is it throws us back on the true construction of 9 Geo. 4, and in my judgment you cannot find any power in section 27 to give costs against justices who appear to fight the case. The only words which appear to do so are "shall make such order therein, with or without costs, as to the said courts shall seem meet." It does not seem to me that that necessarily involves that in every case which comes before them under the section there must be some party against whom they can give costs. Those words occur in the general part of that section (27) which relates to an appeal by any person who thinks himself "aggrieved by any act of any justice, done in or concerning the execution of this Act." There may be a very great number of appeals under it, in the great majority of which there would be somebody against whom costs could be given. This is a general power relating to them, but not necessarily applicable in the particular case.

The particular case before us is dealt with in the subsequent part of section 27, which says: "In case the act appealed against shall be the refusal to grant or to transfer any licence, and the judgment be reversed." That is this very thing then; it gives express power to the court to grant or transfer the licence in the same manner as if it had been granted at a licensing session and that the judgment of the court shall be final and conclusive to all intents and purposes, and that is all it says as regards the case where the judgment of the licensing justices is reversed. But in the next part of the section it says, "And in case of the dismissal of such appeal or of the affirmance of the judgment in which such act was done and which was appealed against, the said court shall adjudge and order the said judgment to be carried into execution and costs awarded to be paid, and shall, if necessary issue process for enforcing such order." So that there is an express power to enforce the order as to costs in the one case of the appeal being dismissed, and to issue process for it, and there is nothing whatever said about costs in the case of the appeal being allowed, which certainly looks as if when it was allowed there were to be no costs given to the appellant. Section 29, so far as it has any bearing on that, is quite consistent with that.

Rule absolute.

WYNNE v. WYNNE. (a.)

Divorce — Desertion — Intention at time of leaving— Criminal proceedings pending.

A husband left his wife in 1895 after divorce proceedings in which he had appeared as co-respondent (the jury disagreeing). At the last interview, he left her under the impression that this was the cause of his departure, and that he would return in a few months. He was in financial embarrassment, his firm immediately became bankrupt, and ultimately the official receiver applied for a warrant against him. He had carried on an intrigue with an actress in 1893 and 1894 unknown to his wife. He sent one letter to his wife begging for money, but with no address; but otherwise he did not communicate with or see her.

The court held that, at the time he left his wife, he intended to desert her, and, adultery being proved, granted a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage.

Hearing of undefended divorce action in which the wife, Marianne A. Wynne, petitioned for a dissolution of the marriage on the ground of her husband's adultery and desertion.

The parties were married on the 11th of January, 1881, and there was no issue of the marriage. The husband was a solicitor, and continued in business till March, 1895, when the firm became bankrupt with very heavy liabilities. They lived happily together till the husband was a co-respondent in the divorce suit of Hawtin v. Hawtin and Wynne, which was tried in February, 1895, when the jury disagreed. Immediately afterwards the husband telegraphed to his wife, and on the 2nd of March she met him at an hotel in London; he told her he was ruined, he could not face the disgrace, and must leave for a few months till the matter had blown over. The wife thought the disgrace he referred to was the divorce case. She did not see him again, but in July, 1896, he wrote to her asking for help, but did not give his address other than by saying he had written to his brother telling him his plans. In the bankruptcy the official receiver ultimately procured a warrant for the husband's arrest, it appearing that he had been speculating and living very extravagantly. After his departure the wife found that her husband had been carrying on an intrigue with an actress in 1893 and 1894, and this was the adultery charged and proved.

Bargrave Deane, Q.C., and Priestley, for the petitioner, referred to Drew v. Drew, 36 W. R. 921, 13 P. D. 97, as an authority that in the present case there was desertion without cause for two years.

JEUNE, P.—The adultery is clearly proved, the only question is whether there has been desertion. At first sight there is this difficulty, the respondent undoubtedly left for reasons of a financial kind and fear of the consequences of the acts of which he had been guilty; but that is not conclusive. Sir J. Hannen in Drew v. Drew pointed out that the test to be applied is, What was the respondent's intention with regard to the petitioner when he left her. Here he had previously been carrying on an intrigue with another woman, which shows he had lost all affection for his wife, and he gave a false reason for his departure, and saying that he should only be away for a few months. He also concealed his address from her, although he appears to have sent it to his brother. These facts show that the respondent when he left his wife was anxious to get rid of her society. I think that desertion has been proved, and there must be a decree nisi.

MUNICIPAL COUNCIL OF SYDNEY v. YOUNG. (a.)

Corporation—Municipal corporation—Street vested in corporation—Compensation—Sydney Corporation Act, 1879 (43 Vict. No. 3)—51 Vict. No. 37.

Under the Sydney Corporation Act, 1879, all public ways in the city of Sydney were vested in the council. A local Act (51 Vict. No. 37) enabled the Secretary for Public Works to form a tramway. In the course of construction it became necessary to take a small portion of a street in the city of Sydney, and the municipal authority claimed compensation under the Act, which entitles the owner of property taken to compensation.

Held, that the vesting of a street or public way vested no property in the municipal authority beyond the surface of the street and such portion as may be absolutely necessarily incidental to the repairing and proper management of the street, and did not vest the soil or land in them as owners; and, consequently, that the surface of the street was not subject-matter for compensation.

This was an appeal from the Supreme Court of New South Wales.

The sections of the Acts of Parliament and the facts sufficiently appear in their lordships' judgment.

Witt, Q.C., and Poley, for the appellant.

Sir R. Reid, Q.C., and Vaughan Hawkins, for the respondent.

The judgment of their lordships (the Earl of HALSBURY, L.C., Lords HERSCHELL, MACNAGHTEN, and MORRIS, and Sir RICHARD COUCH) was delivered by Lord MORRIS.—In this case their lordships feel no difficulty. A local Act (51 Vict. No. 37) enabled the Secretary for Public Works of Sydney, who is called the constructing authority, to form a tramway. It became necessary in the making of the tramway to take some twelve perches of a street leading from a particular named place to a public park. The municipal authority of Sydney alleged that by the taking of those twelve perches of this street they were entitled to compensation under the Act, which of course entitles the owner of the property to compensation. That of course depends on whether the municipal authority of Sydney are the owners of the street in any sense that would give them a claim for compensation. The provision by which the property in the street in any respect rests in them is under the Sydney Corporation Act of 1879, the 43rd Victoria, No. 3, which states that "all public ways in the city of Sydney now or hereafter formed shall be vested in the council, who shall have full power," and so on.

Now, it has been settled by repeated authorities, which were referred to by the learned chief justice, that the vesting of a street or public way vests no property in the municipal authority beyond the surface of the street, and such portion as may be absolutely necessarily incidental to the repairing and proper management of the street, but that it does not vest the soil or land in them as the owners. If that be so, the only claim that they could make would be for the surface of the street as being merely property vested in them qua street, and not as general property. Their lordships are of opinion that that is not the subject-matter of compensation, for the street being diverted into a tramway is in no way a taking of property within the meaning of the compensation to be assessed under the Public Works Act of Sydney. In point of fact it is rather the opposite, because the municipal authority, by getting rid of the street, pro tanto have less expense, and it is in that respect a relief to the ratepayers.

Then it has been said that the construction should not be given to the words "shall be vested in the council" in the Sydney Corporation Act of 1879 which has been given to similar Acts in England, because there has been an amending Act passed which seems, as is suggested, to widen that interpretation as to what is vested in them. Their lordships are of opinion that the amending Act does not do so. It provides that "it shall be lawful for the municipal council of Sydney, for the purpose of opening, altering, and widening," &c., to purchase land, to exchange land, or to sell land. That must mean to which they are really entitled as land, and which as a matter of law they have acquired, and can sell like any ordinary individual.

Their lordships are of opinion, therefore, that the judgment of the Supreme Court ought to be affirmed, and they will accordingly humbly advise her Majesty to that effect. The appellant must pay the costs of this appeal.

TRINDER, ANDERSON, & CO. v. THAMES AND MERSEY MARINE INSURANCE CO. (a.)

Insurance—Marine—Freight—Notice of abandonment—Personal negligence of the assured.

Where a ship carrying a cargo sustains sea damage to such an extent as would justify an abandonment to the underwriters on ship, and under such circumstances that the cargo could not possibly be carried on in any substituted ship, it is not necessary that notice of abandonment should be given to the underwriters on freight.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It is no defence to an action on a policy of marine insurance, claiming as for a loss by perils of the sea, that the loss was brought about by the personal (though not wilful) negligence of the assured in the navigation of the ship.

Appeal from the judgment of Kennedy, J., at the trial of the action without a jury.

The action was brought in the interest of the owners of the sailing ship Gainsborough on a policy of marine insurance on freight effected with the defendants by the plaintiffs. The principal plaintiff was A. McPhail, who was the owner of forty-two sixty-fourths of the ship, and was also master.

The Gainsborough, while carrying a cargo of coal on a voyage covered by the policy, stranded on a reef near the island of Honolulu, in consequence of the negligent navigation of the master, and two days afterwards the ship and cargo, being in a very perilous position, were sold as they were by the master to a purchaser, who after jettisoning part of the cargo, ultimately succeeded in getting the ship and the remainder of the cargo, which was greatly deteriorated, off the reef. The circumstances were such that it was impracticable to carry on the cargo either in the stranded ship or in a substituted ship. The plaintiffs claimed as for a total loss of freight.

Another action, Westport Coal Co. v. McPhail, post, p. 566, arising out of the same circumstances was brought by the owners of the cargo against the shipowners, and was tried before Kennedy, J., and a jury a few days before this action was tried. It was agreed that the findings of the jury in that case should be taken to be findings in this case. The findings of the jury were that the stranding was due to the negligence, but not the wilful negligence, of the master in the navigation of the ship; and that the sale of the cargo by the master two days after the stranding was unnecessary.

Kennedy, J., gave judgment in the present case for the plaintiffs.

The defendants appealed on the grounds—first, that no notice of abandonment had been given; secondly, that the loss of freight had been caused by the personal negligence of the assured.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 4.—A. L. SMITH, L.J., read the following judgment: This is an action by a shipowner for a total loss of freight upon a policy of marine insurance covering freight; and the first point taken by the defendants, who are an underwriting company, is that as neither the ship carrying the goods for the carriage of which the freight was to be earned, nor the goods themselves, were actual total losses, notice of abandonment must have been given by the plaintiff to the underwriters upon freight, to entitle him to recover for total loss of freight. The second point is that, as the stranding of the vessel which brought about the loss of freight sued for, was caused by the negligent navigation, though not the wilful act, of the plaintiff the assured (he being part owner and captain of the ship), he cannot recover upon the policy. The facts are as follows: On the 27th of May, 1896, the plaintiff caused a policy of marine insurance to be effected with the defendants on his and his co-owners' behalf against perils of the sea upon "freight chartered or as if chartered" in the ship Gainsborough from Sydney to Newcastle, New South Wales, while there and thence to any port or ports in New Zealand, while there and thence to San Francisco. When the ship was proceeding on her voyage from New Zealand to San Francisco with a cargo of coal, the plaintiff found himself short of water and thereupon justifiably, as it has been held, put into Honolulu for water. Upon nearing Honolulu on Saturday, the 29th of August, 1896, owing, as it has been found, to his negligent navigation, the ship was run upon and became firmly stranded upon a reef and commenced at once to make water. Endeavours were made to get her off by means of towing but without avail, seas were washing over her decks, she was bumping heavily upon the reef and kept going further on, her cargo became wetted by the sea-water, and the ship and cargo were in a very critical and perilous position. In these circumstances the plaintiff took the opinion of Lloyd's agent at Honolulu, together with that of the harbour-master there, and of a Captain Campbell, and they agreed in advising him that, considering the condition and position of the ship and cargo, they should be at once sold; and upon Monday, the 31st of August, they were accordingly sold, situated as they were, and realized the sum of £374, the purchaser Allen having also to pay some charges to the amount of £43. It has been found that this sale was not justified at the time it took place, but my brother Kennedy, who tried the case, has found that the sale, although premature, must have taken place within a few days of the time at which it did. The ship and cargo remained upon the reef until the 26th of September, when Allen commenced operations in order to get the ship and cargo off, a steam pump having by that time been obtained. Some 200 tons of coal were then jettisoned, and upon the 4th of October the ship, with the remainder of her cargo in her, was got off. This coal when got out of the ship was sold at Honolulu by Allen for £1,000.

Without dealing with the evidence in detail, in my judgment it shows that the sea damage which the ship had sustained—situated, as she was, 2,000 miles from San Francisco, which was the nearest port at which the ship could be repaired to make her a cargo-carrying ship, and then only at a cost which would have exceeded the value of the ship when repaired—was such as would have justified an abandonment of the ship and a claim against the underwriters upon the ship for a total loss. The learned judge has found that "it was not a practicable thing to carry on the cargo either in the stranded ship or in any other ship, for none could be obtained, and that it could not have been carried on, and no abandonment would have enabled the assurers to do so; that the cargo, although it did not actually perish, was in a condition in which it was not doubtful whether notice of abandonment could give the assurers any advantage, for it was quite clear it would not; that the cargo would have had to be sold at Honolulu, and that the freight by reason of the stranding was an actual total loss, and that there was a destruction of the voyage." These being the findings of the learned judge, as there was clearly evidence to support them, I see no ground for differing from him. There was no telegraphic communication between Honolulu and San Francisco or anywhere else. Honolulu was, as before stated, 2,000 miles from San Francisco, and this was the nearest place to Honolulu wherefrom to communicate with England. Had notice of abandonment of freight been given by the plaintiff from Honolulu, as the underwriters upon freight now contend it should have been, it would have taken from five to six weeks before the underwriters could have communicated with Honolulu. The evidence shows that the coal in its wet state could not have been carried on board any ship from Honolulu to San Francisco by reason of its inflammable condition and liability to spontaneous combustion. It could have been dried at Honolulu, but it was proved that the process of unshipping, drying, reshipping, and afterwards conveying coal on to its destination is such that, besides the heavy cost of drying, the coal itself becomes greatly deteriorated and damaged, and, as before stated, the learned judge has found that the sale of the coal at Honolulu must have taken place within a few days of the time at which it was actually sold. It was argued for the underwriters that as there was no actual total loss of the ship, for she remained a ship after the stranding and is so still, and as there was no actual total loss of the cargo, for it remained coal after the stranding as before, though wetted and greatly deteriorated and depreciated in value, the assured could not recover for a total loss of freight unless notice of abandonment of freight had been given to the underwriters upon freight. Now, the question of giving notice of abandonment upon a policy covering freight is distinct from the question of giving notice of abandonment upon a policy on a ship, and they must be kept apart. At one time there was a conflict of opinion upon this question of giving notice of abandonment, Lord Abinger, in Roux v. Salvador, 3 Bing. N. C. 266, holding that there were cases in which, although the subject-matter insured against remained in specie, notice of abandonment need not be given; Lord Campbell on the contrary (Knight v. Faith, 15 Q. B. 649) holding that notice of abandonment must be given in all cases except in cases of actual total loss. This controversy was finally, as regards a policy on freight, determined in the case of Rankin v. Potter, 22 W. R., L. R. 6 H. L. 83, in the House of Lords, in which case the judges were called in to advise the House as to the necessity of an assured upon freight in all cases giving notice of abandonment in the case of a constructive total loss of ship before he could recover for a total loss of freight. Lord Abinger's view was supported. In Rankin v. Potter the appellants, the underwriters upon freight, contended that, by the insurance law of England, where the thing insured existed in kind, however deteriorated or damaged, there could be no total loss without notice of abandonment, and one of the questions asked by the House of the judges was this: Was notice of abandonment, either of ship or freight, or of both, necessary to enable the plaintiff to recover for a total loss on a policy on freight? In this case the subject-matter of insurance was chartered freight. I will cite a passage from the opinion of Brett, J., given in answer to the question asked, for it is very pertinent to the present case. The learned judge says (p. 102), "I venture to affirm that it is a correct proposition of insurance law to say that no abandonment is necessary, and no notice of abandonment is required, where there is nothing to abandon which can pass to or be of value to the underwriter. It follows that on a policy on freight in general terms there need be no abandonment of freight, and no notice of abandonment is required, where the ship is damaged to such an extent or under such circumstances as would authorize an abandonment of the ship on a policy on the ship, and where there is no cargo on board the ship, or, if on board, where none is saved with the chance of an opportunity of its being forwarded in a substituted ship. In the several states of circumstances above set forth and considered, the loss of freight on the policy on freight would be an actual total loss. This conclusion does not, as it seems to me, go the length of determining that there never can be a constructive total loss of freight. If, for instance, the ship should be damaged as described, but cargo which was on board has been saved under circumstances which leave it doubtful whether such cargo might or might not be forwarded in a substituted ship, or if the original cargo should be lost and the ship may or may not probably earn some freight by carrying other goods on the voyage insured, it may be, and I think the rule is, that in order to make certain his right to recover as for a total loss on the policy on freight the assured should give notice of abandonment of the chance of earning such substituted freight." It will be also seen upon reading the opinion of Blackburn, J., given to the House in this case, that that learned judge (p. 121) combats the contention that there was a technical rule of insurance law by which notice of abandonment must be given if the thing exists in specie at all, though the state of things was such that the underwriters could do nothing even if they had the notice. He says: "I think this (notice of abandonment) is from the nature of things confined to cases where there are some steps which the underwriters could take if they had notice. When they can do so, I think that the neglect to give a notice of abandonment may determine the owner's election. . . . If there was nothing they could do, no notice, I think, is required." And in another part of his opinion the learned judge says (p. 124), "But as to the freight, I can see nothing which could have been done by the underwriters if the idle ceremony of a notice had been gone though." Lord Chelmsford in delivering the judgment of the House points out that considerations having reference to a policy on freight must be kept entirely separate and apart from considerations having reference to a policy on ship, and after discussing the conflicting cases of Knight v. Faith and Roux v. Salvador, gave judgment upon the principles laid down by Blackburn and Brett, JJ., above alluded to, and the House of Lords held that the assured in the circumstances of that case could recover for a total loss of freight.

It seems to me that in the present case, applying the principles laid down in Rankin v. Potter, the circumstances were such as (a) to authorize an abandonment of the ship on a policy on ship; (b) that there was no chance of an opportunity of the cargo being forwarded in a substituted ship, for no other could be obtained; (c) that this was not a matter of doubt; (d) that the ship herself could earn no freight on the voyage insured; (e) that there was nothing which the underwriters upon freight could have done, had notice of abandonment been given to them, and it would have only been an idle ceremony to have done so. Five years after this decision in Rankin v. Potter in the House of Lords, Brett, L.J., in this court in Kaltenbach v. Mackenzie, 26 W. R. 844, 3 C. P. D. 467, when considering the necessity of giving notice of abandonment upon a policy upon ship, made some observations as to what had been decided in Rankin v. Potter in the House of Lords, which, if applicable to a policy upon freight, would raise a difficulty in the present case. That learned judge, when, as before stated, dealing with a policy upon ship, said (p. 475): "I am not prepared to say that if it could be shown that the subject-matter of insurance at the time when the assured has information upon which otherwise he would be bound to act" (i.e., give notice of abandonment) "is in such a condition that it would absolutely perish and disappear before notice could be received or any answer returned, that that might not excuse the assured from giving notice of abandonment; but I am prepared to say that nothing short of that would excuse him; and although I do not say what I have stated would excuse him, I am not prepared to say it would not." Cotton and Thesiger, L.JJ., gave judgment to the like effect, and held that as the ship had not ceased to exist and been entirely lost at the time when notice of abandonment should have been given, the assured could not recover for a total loss on a policy upon ship. It appears to me that the learned judges were dealing in this case of Kaltenbach v. Mackenzie with a loss occasioned by a sea peril upon an insurance upon ship, and not with a loss of freight upon a policy on freight, which, as pointed out by the House of Lords, are contracts entirely independent of each other; and that what I have already said about Rankin v. Potter governs the present case. I am of opinion, therefore, that this first point as to the necessity of there being a notice of abandonment given in this case fails the defendants.

The second point taken is that inasmuch as the ship was run upon the reef by the negligent navigation, though not wilful act, of the captain, as he was one of the assured he cannot recover upon the policy. It cannot be doubted that a policy upon ship covering perils of the sea covers a loss brought about by the negligent navigation of the captain and crew, if such loss is immediately caused by a peril of the sea. It was held over fifty years ago in Dixon v. Sadler, 5 M. & W. 405, at p. 414, that an assured of ship makes no warranty to the underwriters that the master and crew will do their duty during the voyage, and consequently their negligence is no defence to an action on a policy when the loss is brought about by their negligent navigation, if the loss is immediately occasioned by the perils of the sea. Parke, B., when delivering the judgment of the court, cited five cases in support of this proposition, commencing as far back as the year 1818 with the case of Busk v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 2 B. & Ald. 73. That the negligent navigation of a ship by a person other than the assured affords no defence to an action upon a policy of marine insurance against perils of the sea, when the loss is immediately occasioned by a peril of the sea, is clear, the reason, in my opinion, being that what is insured against is a peril of the sea, which is none the less a peril of the sea though brought about by negligent navigation. Is there, then, any warranty by a part-owner, if he be one of the assured, that he will not personally be guilty of negligent navigation during the voyage covered by the policy? We are not dealing with a loss brought about by the wilful act of an assured. Negligent navigation has never been held to be equivalent to "dolus," or the "misconduct" which is spoken of by Lord Campbell in Thompson v. Hopper, 5 W. R. 83, 6 E. & B. 937, nor is it the negligence referred to by Lord Ellenborough in Bell v. Carstairs, 14 East 374. It cannot be doubted that the legal maxim, In jure non remota causa sed proxima spectatur, applies when considering what are the particular perils for which an insurer undertakes to be liable on a policy of marine insurance, if such maxim contravenes no principle of insurance law, and is not hostile to the manifest intention of the parties (see per Lord Campbell in Thompson v. Hopper). It is not disputed at the bar that negligence of an assured upon a fire policy, whereby the fire was occasioned which caused the loss, affords no defence to the insurer. Why so? Because loss by fire is what is insured against. And so in a marine policy sea perils are what is insured against. The risk undertaken by an underwriter upon a policy covering perils of the sea is that if the subject-matter insured is lost or damaged immediately by a peril of the sea, he will be responsible; and in my judgment it matters not if the loss or damage is remotely caused by the negligent navigation of the captain or crew or of the assured himself, always assuming that the loss is not occasioned by the wilful act of the assured. In the last case the maxim above referred to does not apply for the reasons pointed out by Lord Campbell in Thompson v. Hopper, for then not only does the maxim contravene the principles of insurance law and the manifest intention of the parties, but it is qualified by another legal maxim, Dolus circuitu non purgatur. I believe that there cannot be found in the insurance law of England a single case to support the proposition now contended for by the underwriters, which is that, assuming the loss has not been occasioned by the wilful act or default of the assured, but is immediately caused by a peril of the sea, the remote and not the proximate cause is to be looked to.

There are, on the other hand, cases which in my judgment strongly go to show that what I am saying is the law. I refer again to Thompson v. Hopper and the case in the House of Lords of Dudgeon v. Pembroke, 25 W. R. 499, 2 App. Cas. 284. In each of those cases the underwriters were sued upon time policies for losses immediately occasioned by perils of the sea. It never suggested itself to the underwriters to attempt to defend themselves upon the ground that the losses were occasioned by the negligence of the assured, but on the contrary in the first case the defence was founded upon the assured having "knowingly, wilfully, wrongfully, and improperly" committed acts whereby the loss was occasioned, and in the second case, upon the assured having "knowingly and without justifiable cause" sent the ship to sea in such an unseaworthy condition that the loss was thereby occasioned. If negligence of the assured whereby the loss was occasioned constituted a defence to the underwriters upon a policy covering perils of the sea, it is to me inconceivable that such defence was not set up, more especially when it is seen who the counsel were who appeared for the underwriters. The total absence of authority as to the point now suggested as being a valid defence, and the presence of authority where such a defence might have availed the underwriters but was not set up, to my mind is most significant. As Lord Penzance said in Dudgeon v. Pembroke, if what is now contended for be the law, "the underwriters have been signally supine in availing themselves of it, for there is no case where such a defence as this has been set up. The materials for such a defence must have existed in countless instances, and yet there is no trace of it in any case which has been brought to your lordships' notice, still less any decision upholding such a doctrine."

My brother Kennedy has dealt with what cases have been pressed into the service of the underwriters as being authorities, which in reality they are not, and I do not go over them again. I agree in his judgment, and for the reasons above I am of opinion that both points fail the defendants, and that this appeal must be dismissed.

COLLINS, L.J., read the following judgment: I am of the same opinion. On the question of abandonment I think that on the facts found the case is concluded by Rankin v. Potter. The arguments of the appellants were really those of the dissentient judges in that case.

As to the negligence point, I think this also is concluded by authority. There can be no doubt whatever that the proximate cause of the loss was a peril of the sea. It is now conclusively settled by the series of cases, of which Hamilton v. Pandorf, 36 W. R. 369, 12 App. Cas. 518, is the last, that "perils of the sea" mean the same thing whether they appear in a bill of lading, a charter-party, or a policy of insurance. But the rights of a party relying on an exception of sea perils in a contract of carriage may be very different from those of an assured claiming for a loss by the like perils under a policy. Negligence by the carrier will defeat his right to claim the benefit of the exception, not because it prevents the loss being a loss by sea perils, but because his negligence gives a cross-right to the underwriter to an equivalent amount: see Lord Herschell's opinion in The Xantho, 36 W. R. 353, 12 App. Cas. 503, at p. 510, citing Willes, J., in Grill v. General Iron Screw Collier Co., 14 W. R. 893, L. R. 1 C. P. 600. The loss therefore being by a sea peril, the right of the assured is absolute unless his own conduct has given a cross-right to the underwriter against himself. Now, it has been settled by a long series of authorities that negligence of the assured's servants does not give such cross-right and does not therefore on the absolute contract of insurance relieve the underwriter from making good the loss of which a sea peril was the proximate cause.

"I may say," says Willes, J., in the passage above referred to, "that a policy of insurance is an absolute contract to indemnify for loss by perils of the sea, and it is only necessary to see whether the loss comes within the terms of the contract and is caused by perils of the sea; the fact that the loss is partly caused by things not distinctly perils of the sea does not prevent it coming within the contract. In the case of a bill of lading the case is different, because there the contract is to carry with reasonable care unless prevented by the excepted perils. If the goods are not carried with reasonable care and are consequently lost by perils of the sea, it becomes necessary to reconcile the two parts of the instrument, and this is done by holding that, if the loss by perils of the sea is caused by the previous default of the shipowner, he is liable for the breach of his covenant."

If, therefore, negligence of the owner's servants does not excuse the underwriter, as it does not, it must be because such negligence gives no cross-right in a contract of insurance as it would in a bill of lading. These decisions, therefore, involve the proposition that the owner does not contract not to be negligent, otherwise the negligence of his servants, being just as much his negligence as it is under a bill of lading, would give the same cross-right in both cases. Unless, therefore, the personal negligence of the owner works some personal disability upon him, he is entitled to enforce the contract of insurance. His negligence does not any more than that of his servants alter the character of the sea peril, which still remains the causa proxima, and it does not give a right of cross-action as it is not a breach of contract. The observations of Willes, J., on this point in Thompson v. Hopper, in the Exchequer Chamber, 6 W. R. 857, E. B. & E. 1038, are again instructive. Dealing with the maxim Dolus circuitu non purgatur, which had been pressed to support the contention that the personal act of the shipowner in sending an unseaworthy ship to sea was an answer to a claim against insurers on a time policy, he says: "Dolus therein stands for dolus malus, and cannot mean simply anything which may lead to the damage of another. . . . Without entering into a discussion of the precise meaning of dolus or dolus malus in the civil law, I may say that if dolus, in the sense in which it is used in the maxim, can exist independent of evil intention, it cannot so exist without either the violation of some legal duty, independent of contract, or the breach of a contract express or implied between the parties. To recognize in a court of justice dolus, or wrong, or misconduct as a ground of action or defence apart from these conditions would be to confound all certainty in the law." The wilful default of the owner inducing the loss will debar him from suing on the policy in respect of it on two grounds, either of which would suffice to defeat his right; first, because no one can take advantage of his own wrong, using the word in its true sense, which does not embrace mere negligence: see per Bramwell, B., in Thompson v. Hopper; secondly, because the wilful act takes from the catastrophe the accidental character which is essential to constitute a peril of the sea.

"I think," said Lord Halsbury in Hamilton v. Pandorf, "the idea of something fortuitous and unexpected is involved in both words 'peril' or 'accident.'" Nothing short, therefore, of dolus in its proper sense will defeat the right of the assured to recover in respect of a loss of which, but for such dolus, the proximate cause would be a peril of the sea; and the law is so stated by Lord Penzance in Dudgeon v. Pembroke in the passage referred to in the argument. "In effect," says Willes, J., in a later passage in the judgment already quoted, "there being no violation of the law and no fraud in the assured, an increase of risk to the subject-matter of insurance, though such increase be caused by the assured, if it be not prohibited by the policy, does not avoid the insurance."

The cases relied on by the appellants do not support their contention. Those based on the absence of documents may be rested on two grounds, assuming that the act of the assured fell short of dolus, which is not clear—viz.: (a) That in the case of insurance against capture there is an implied contract that the ship shall be properly documented; it is put on this ground by Phillips, section 745, and by Arnould, 5th ed., p. 668; (b) that capture insured against being not the mere detention for the purpose of inspection of documents, but "the taking with intent to deprive the owner of all dominion or right of property over the thing taken" (Arnould, 5th ed., p. 748, citing Emerigon), the want of documents may be regarded as the proximate cause of the loss. Willes, J., in Thompson v. Hopper, explains these cases on this ground. Referring to Bell v. Carstairs, he says: "The loss was the immediate and direct result of the want of proper papers, and it was the duty of the owner of the ship, by the law which authorized its capture, if not by the general law (see Roccus), to be provided with those papers, and the want of them was the direct, immediate, and only cause of the loss." Pipon v. Cope, 1 Camp. 434, is explained by Parsons in his work on Marine Insurance, on the ground that the owners who were claiming in respect of loss by seizure for smuggling for the third time in three consecutive voyages must be taken to have assented to the barratrous acts of their servants (see at p. 571). It was at all events crassa negligentia æquiparata dolo. I entirely agree with the decision and reasons given by Kennedy, J.

WESTPORT COAL CO. v. MCPHAIL. (a.)

Ship—Bill of lading—Exception—Negligence of master—Ship navigated by owner—Liability of owner for negligence in navigation.

A bill of lading contained an exception of "the neglect and default of pilot, master, or crew in the navigation of the ship." The goods carried under the bill of lading were lost in consequence of the stranding of the ship, which was brought about by the negligence of the master, who was one of the owners of the ship.

Held, that the owner who was master was as much entitled as the other owners to rely on the exception.

Appeal from the judgment of Kennedy, J., at the trial of the action with a jury.

The action was brought by the owners of a cargo of coal shipped on board The Gainsborough against A. McPhail and others, the owners of The Gainsborough, for breach of the contract contained in a bill of lading to deliver the said cargo. McPhail, besides being part owner, was also master of the ship.

The Gainsborough, while proceeding on the carrying voyage, stranded in consequence of the negligent navigation of the master, and two days afterwards the ship and cargo, being in a very perilous position, were sold under the circumstances described in Trinder, Anderson, & Co. v. Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance Co., ante, p. 561.

The bill of lading contained the following exceptions: "The neglect and default of pilot, master, or crew in the navigation of the ship, collisions, and all and every the dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers, and navigation of whatever nature or kind soever."

The jury found that the stranding was due to the negligence, but not the wilful negligence, of the master in the navigation of the ship; and that the sale of the cargo two days after the stranding was unnecessary.

Kennedy, J., gave judgment for the defendants other than McPhail, but he gave judgment for the plaintiffs against McPhail.

McPhail appealed.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 4.—COLLINS, L.J., read the judgment of the court as follows: This is an action by owners and shippers of coal upon a bill of lading signed by the defendant McPhail, who, as master, on behalf of himself and his co-owners of the ship Gainsborough, signed the bill of lading for the coal shipped thereon; and the facts stated in the judgment in the case of Trinder, Anderson, & Co. v. Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance Co., ante, p. 561, as far as material, apply to this case. The following are the material parts of the bill of lading upon the construction of which this case depends: "Shipped in good order and condition by the Westport Coal Co. on board the good ship Gainsborough, whereof is master for the present voyage A. McPhail, lying in the port of Westport and bound for San Francisco, 1,315 tons of coal to be delivered (subject to the exceptions hereinafter mentioned) in like good order and condition at the aforesaid port. The following are the exceptions, the act of God, . . . barratry, the neglect and default of pilot, master, or crew in navigation of the ship." It was signed, "A. McPhail, master." The question is whether these exceptions are such as to cover the negligent navigation of the defendant McPhail, who was master of The Gainsborough and was also interested in the ship as part owner. On the first point made by the plaintiffs, we are of opinion that the argument, that having regard to the words immediately preceding and following it, the word "master" in the exception must be read as not embracing a part owner who acts as master, cannot prevail. If the exception is inapplicable to such a person, the other co-owners are not protected; the person who caused the mischief does not come within the description of master against whose negligence they provided, and they have in fact made no contract relieving them from liability for his acts. Kennedy, J., has held that they are protected, and there is an appeal against his decision. The case of Jones v. Nicholson, 10 Exch. 28, 3 W. R. Dig. 179, decides that the relation of owners and captain may exist between part owners and one of their number so as to entitle them to claim against underwriters in respect of his acts on a policy against barratry of master or crew, and certainly it would be a strange result if the exception of master's negligence were wholly nugatory wherever he had an interest as part owner. It is also clear law that a party is not debarred from contracting against liability for his own negligence, and therefore there would be no personal incapacity in a part owner debarring him from setting up the exception of master's negligence even though he were himself the master; and in another case the present defendant has been held entitled to recover against underwriters for a loss brought about by the same negligence that we are now discussing. But though the defendant is, we think, to be treated as the captain within the exception, and though he is not debarred from relying upon it whether he be sued as captain or as owner, it does not follow that that suffices to relieve him from liability in this case. But it is very desirable to see what the precise ground is on which his non-immunity from liability must be placed. It is a well-established rule that exceptions must be strictly construed against the person for whose benefit they are inserted, and this rule has been frequently applied so as not to interpret them in bills of lading as relieving the owner from his obligation to take due care. This rule would debar us from reading into the exception any such words after "master" as would cover part owner's as distinguished from master's negligence. The exception, therefore, must be treated as not excusing a breach of the owner's duty as such. But it is at this point that the real difficulty arises. The captain is excused, the owner is not. But the holder of the bill of lading has given up the right to complain of loss traceable to the master's negligence, and it was the negligence of the master in the sphere of his duty as master which caused the loss, a loss, moreover, against responsibility for which he is certainly protected in his capacity as master by the bill of lading itself, which is signed by him, and in which he is expressly named. The plaintiffs seek to make him liable by viewing him in two different capacities—that is to say, they distinguish his capacities for the purpose of limiting the exception, but they mix them up again for the purpose of fixing him with liability as owner. But does it follow that because one and the same person is captain and part owner negligence in either capacity is to be deemed negligence in both? Or does not this question involve an examination of what his duty is in each capacity, so as to see whether there was in fact negligence in both? So far as the navigation of the ship is concerned, the duty of the owner as distinguished from the master would be to take due care to appoint a competent person, and therefore the defendant's co-owners in this case, having discharged that duty and being protected against the master's negligence, are not now charged with negligence as owners. Does it make any difference that the master cannot divest himself of his personality as part owner when he is engaged in duties which have been properly delegated to him as master? Tried by the converse case, if the owners had appointed a notoriously incompetent master, whose incapacity had caused disaster, the exception of master's negligence would certainly not have protected them, and it would certainly have been no better protection to that one of their number who had been appointed captain, in respect of that part of his negligence, which would clearly be negligence as owner and not as captain. Moreover, if the negligence of the captain in the proper sphere of his duty is to be deemed a breach of the owners' duty because the captain is also part owner and cannot divest himself of his personality as such, it would follow that the other co-owners are liable. They are not protected against negligence of owners. The same person who, as captain, is their agent is also part owner, and, on the hypothesis, was negligent. If, therefore, they have been rightly held excused, it can only be because his negligence as captain is treated as the only negligence which in fact caused the damage. The case has been argued before us on the basis that they are excused as the learned judge held, and, if it is to be dealt with on that basis, it follows that the only ground on which the present defendant can be held liable while his co-owners are excused is that he is under a personal disability by reason of his negligence, and this ground, where there has been no wilful default, cannot be maintained. Are we then to give effect to the highly artificial reasoning by which it is suggested that the same acts of the same man are within or without the exception according as he is regarded as owner or as master, and this, though the acts were unquestionably done in the discharge of his functions as master only? It seems to us that it would be simpler and more in accordance with common sense to hold that the negligence which caused the damage was exclusively master's as distinguished from part owner's negligence within the meaning of the exception. The case of Jones v. Nicholson, above cited, favours this view. There was there no contract by the underwriters to be responsible for a part owner's barratry. Their only contract was against that of captain or mariners, and the argument was that the captain, being an owner, could not commit barratry. The court obviously regarded the act done by a captain, who was also part owner, as an act done by him as captain only, and not as part owner, and therefore as coming within the policy. Again in Earle v. Rowcroft, 8 East 126, it was contended that a captain, who was also supercargo, and as such represented the owner, must be taken to have assented as supercargo to his acts as captain, and therefore debarred the owner from claiming in respect of them as barratrous. Lord Ellenborough dealt with this argument by saying that it only required to be stated to be rejected. The plain common sense of the matter seems to be that the owners, including the defendant, bargained to be excused from the consequence of the negligence within the sphere of his duty of the person, whoever he might be, who should be properly charged with the command of the ship. That person was the defendant, and the loss has arisen by reason of the very negligence which they provided against—viz., negligence in the navigation of the ship. This construction involves no addition of words to those in the bill of lading, which as they stand are sufficient and unambiguous. We have pointed out that the logical result of the plaintiffs' contention, involving as it does the proposition that the acts of the defendant, being those of one man, are inseparable, and must be deemed to have been done in both capacities, must be that the co-owners are unprotected and the exception nugatory. There is certainly no reason in common sense for adopting this artificial contention unless we are forced to do so, for had the same master done the same acts, being one of seven persons formed into a limited company and holding the largest interest in it, he would be protected, while, on the proposed construction, if he were a part owner holding only one share, he would be liable to the full extent of the damage. The appeal must be allowed.

NEW IXION TYRE CO. (LIMITED) v. SPILSBURY. (a.)

Patent—Agreement to assign—Subsequent licence—Notice—Priority—Equitable rights—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 87.

The proprietor of letters patent agreed to assign them to a company. He subsequently granted a licence to work the patent to certain persons who had, however, express notice of the agreement. The licence was registered before the agreement.

Held, that the licence, though on the register prior to the registration of the agreement, was void as against the company.

John Forrest Walters, on the 24th of June, 1896, entered into an agreement with the plaintiffs in this action, the New Ixion Tyre and Cycle Co. (Limited), to transfer to them for valuable consideration certain letters patent in respect of pneumatic tyres of which he was the registered proprietor. The agreement was not however registered until the 27th of September, 1897, although the plaintiffs were in possession of the letters patent from the date of the agreement. Walters, in pursuance of the agreement, assigned the letters patent to the plaintiffs on the 20th of October, 1897, when the assignment was duly registered. Before the registration of the agreement, Walters, on the 16th of September, 1897, granted a licence for valuable consideration to Spilsbury and three other defendants in this action to make and sell tyres under the letters patent, and notification of the licence was entered in the patent register on the 18th of September, 1897. Spilsbury and the three other defendants had express notice of the agreement of June 24th, 1896, and of the plaintiffs' equitable title to the letters patent thereunder, prior to the granting of the licence to the defendants.

On the 6th of October, 1897, Spilsbury and the three other defendants transferred their rights under the licence to the Licensed Tyre Syndicate (Limited), who were also defendants in the action. The plaintiffs in this action asked for a declaration that the licence or the alleged licence was invalid and void as against them, and that they were entitled to the letters patent free from any right or interest of the defendants as licensees or otherwise; delivery up of the licence to be cancelled, an injunction, and damages.

Spilsbury and the three other defendants alleged that their rights under the licence were not subject to any rights or equities of the plaintiffs, and the defendant company claimed the right to work the patent under their title. The principal question which arose was whether express notice of the agreement by the defendants when they took their licence was an equity upon which the plaintiffs could insist, notwithstanding that their agreement was registered after the licence. This depended on the consideration of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, s. 87, which provides that: "Where a person becomes entitled by assignment, transmission, or other operation of law to a patent the comptroller shall on request and on proof of title to his satisfaction cause the name of such person to be entered as proprietor of the patent . . . in the register of patents. . . . The person for the time being entered in the register of patents . . . as proprietor of a patent . . . shall subject to the provisions of this Act and subject to any rights appearing from such register to be vested in any other person, have power absolutely to assign, grant licences as to, or otherwise deal with the same and to give effectual receipts for any consideration for such assignment, licence, or dealing. Provided that any equities in respect of such patent . . . may be enforced in like manner as in respect of any other personal property."

Renshaw, Q.C., and Rowden, for the plaintiffs.—The defendants had express notice of our agreement when they took their licence; our equitable right is not, therefore, lost by the fact that they registered their licence before we registered our agreement. They referred to the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, ss. 23 and 87, and in particular to the proviso at the end of section 87; and to In re Green's Patent, 24 Beav. 145, 6 W. R. Ch. Dig. 52. [KEKEWICH, J.—That case went on the words of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83]

They also referred to In re Morey's Patent, 6 W. R. 612, 25 Beav. 581; and Hassall v. Wright, 18 W. R. 821, L. R. 10 Eq. 509, 513.

Arthur Powell, for Spilsbury and the three other defendants.—There is no equity here which the court will enforce. An equitable interest to be enforced must be on the register.

A. Cartmell, for the defendant company.—We are not affected with notice. Both the legal and equitable interests are to be registered; the register is a complete record of all facts of title, and you cannot go outside the register.

KEKEWICH, J.—The plaintiffs are, in my opinion, entitled to judgment. In arriving at that conclusion one must first consider the meaning of the 87th section of the Act of 1883 to see how it affects the title of the plaintiffs and the defendants respectively what it requires, and also what is allowed independently of the Act. There is to be a register of title—that is provided for by section 23; and that register, it is not unimportant to observe, as Mr. Cartmell says, includes equitable interests as well as legal, and this section 87 protects the interest of the man who is on the register, so as to prevent a man who is not on the register asserting a legal or equitable title against the man who is on the register. That is the general principle. Anyone who registers an instrument, whether an assignment or otherwise, under this section, must register it subject to any rights appearing from such register to be vested in any other person; and, therefore, it seems perfectly plain and beyond all dispute to my mind that when the plaintiffs registered their agreement of June, 1896, after the defendants had registered their licence, so far as the registered title was concerned they took subject to that licence; and it is in fact because their agreement and the assignment which followed it are subject to that licence that they come here to insist that as against them the licence is invalid. The object of the action is to get rid, on the equitable ground, of the legal right which the statute gives to the defendants.

That brings me to the question, Is it competent to plaintiffs to insist upon the equitable right which is the foundation of their claim? There might be other equities brought forward with reference to other facts. The equity which they insist upon here is this, that at the time the defendants accepted that licence they had, not as it happens constructive, but express notice of the agreement with the plaintiffs under which the plaintiffs afterwards took their assignment; and that, therefore, they cannot insist on their registered licence as against the agreement of which they had notice. That is their point. Why should they not make it? As regards the register of ships, it took considerable legislation—at any rate repeated legislation—amending legislation, to keep the register clear of equities; and I take it that the defendants here are bound to show that there is not by any implied—I will not say "implied" by any doubtful construction, but by language of which there can be no doubt—a provision excluding such title as that alleged by the plaintiffs. There is a proviso at the end of section 87, which is, at any rate, not in favour of the defendants: "Provided that any equities in respect of such patent, design, or trade-mark may be enforced in like manner as if in respect of any other personal property." If the subject-matter of the agreement or assignment were a leasehold, there can be no doubt that the defendants, having notice of the agreement, could not take a title from Mr. Walters so as to defeat the plaintiffs; and that is a species of personal property assignable at law; and it seems that what is applicable to one is necessarily applicable to the other. But it may be that that proviso requires some discussion—that the limits and extent of that proviso may not be easily reached; that any equities may have to be considered with reference to the letters patent in particular, and that questions may arise which I ought not to consider at the present moment. I am content to say that that proviso, at any rate, even if it is not in favour of the plaintiffs is not in favour of the defendants, and that in the absence of any proviso or any decision in their favour, I think the proper construction of the Act is that such an equity as the plaintiffs allege is open to them as an argument with reference to their title as appearing on the register.

Having disposed of that, I come to the question whether that equity is established. As regards the first point, and as regards the second which I am now approaching, I think it better to put aside the authorities cited by Mr. Renshaw, and for this reason, that those authorities deal with earlier statutes; they do not touch, and they could not touch, because they were anterior to it, the statute which I am now construing, and it is better to say, of course without in the slightest degree criticizing those decisions, that they cannot affect me because they do not affect the statute which is before me. Therefore I deal with the whole question on general principles. [His lordship then considered the evidence on the question of notice and said that it was clear that the defendants, before they took their licence, had express notice of the agreement, and that they must therefore have taken the licence subject to the agreement. His lordship then, considering further arguments of the defendants, held that the agreement was a binding agreement and one capable of being specifically performed, and that it had been carried out by the assignment, and continued:] The result is that I must hold that this licence, although on the register, and although on the register prior to the registration of the agreement of the 24th of June, 1896, does not interfere with the plaintiffs' rights and that as against them it is not binding, but is void.

Power—Appointment—Period of ascertaining class—Gift over on marriage or death of surviving unmarried daughter—Remoteness.

In 1835 a husband and wife, in exercise of a power of appointment conferred upon them by their marriage settlement, appointed that a certain fund should be held by the trustees upon trust (in the events which happened) to pay thereout the sum of £1,500 to each of their three daughters, F., L., and S., who should thereafter marry; and upon further trust, so long as they or any or either of them should be from time to time living and unmarried, to pay the income of the fund to such of them as should from time to time be living and unmarried, if more than one in equal shares; and in case one or two only of them should marry, then upon trust, after the decease or, as the case might require, the marriage of such one of them as should be last living and unmarried, to pay the fund unto the four other children of the marriage, and such one or more of them the said F., L., and S., as should marry as aforesaid, in equal shares.

Held (1) that the final gift over was void for remoteness; (2) that the appointment of the £1,500 to each of the three unmarried daughters was also void for remoteness; and (3) that the appointment of the income of the fund to the three unmarried daughters was a valid appointment of an equal undivided third share of such income to each of such daughters so long as she was living and unmarried, but that the gift over of such one-third share on her marriage was void for remoteness.

Summons.

By the settlement, dated the 17th of May, 1793, executed upon her marriage with John Gage, Mary Milbanke settled a reversionary interest, to which she was absolutely entitled, in a sum of £30,000 expectant upon the determination of her father's life interest therein upon the trust therein contained in favour of herself and her husband successively for life, and after the death of the survivor in trust for such of the children of the marriage as they should by deed jointly appoint, or as the survivor should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment for their children in equal shares, sons at twenty-one and daughters at twenty-one or marriage.

There were two sons and five daughters of the marriage, and they all attained the age of twenty-one years.

Mrs. Gage's reversionary interest fell into possession before the date of the deed-poll next referred to.

By a deed-poll dated the 30th of November, 1835, under their hands and seals, Mr. and Mrs. Gage, in exercise of their power in that behalf, appointed that (subject nevertheless to their own prior respective life interests) the trustees of the settlement should hold the settled funds representing the £30,000 upon trust to pay six months after the death of the survivor of them, the appointors, certain sums to each of the children (naming them) of the marriage, amounting in the aggregate to £18,000, and out of the residue of such funds to raise and pay to each of the three then unmarried daughters—namely, Frances Elizabeth Gage, Louisa Henrietta Gage, and Sophia Matilda Gage, "who shall hereafter marry," the sum of £15,000 to be paid to her or her respective executors, administrators, or assigns, if she should marry after the death of the survivor of the appointors (which event happened), upon the day of her respective marriage, or as soon thereafter as conveniently could be; and upon further trust so long as the said Frances Elizabeth Gage, Louisa Henrietta Gage, and Sophia Matilda Gage, or any or either of them should be living and unmarried, to pay the income of the residue of the said fund unto them or such of them as should "from time to time be living and unmarried," and if more than one in equal shares; and if all of them should happen to marry then upon the trusts therein declared, but in case all of them the said F. E. Gage, L. H. Gage, and S. M. Gage "shall die without having been married, or in case one or two only of them shall marry," then in the first-mentioned case (which did not happen) upon the trusts therein declared, "and in the said secondly-mentioned case" (which did happen) "the trustees or trustee do and shall immediately after the decease or, as the case shall require, the marriage of such one of them the said F. E. Gage, L. H. Gage, and S. M. Gage, as shall be last living and unmarried as aforesaid pay the said residue of the said sum of £30,000, or of such stocks, funds, or securities as aforesaid" unto the four other children of the marriage, naming them, "and such one or more of them the said F. E. Gage, L. H. Gage, and S. M. Gage as shall marry as aforesaid in equal shares as tenants in common and their respective executors, administrators, and assigns."

Mr. and Mrs. Gage both died in 1846.

In 1847 Louisa Henrietta Gage married Baron de Bertouche, and upon her marriage she was paid £1,500 by the trustees of her parents' settlement. Previous to her marraige she had settled all her interest under the deed-poll of 1835. She died in 1880.

Frances Elizabeth Gage never married, and died in 1888.

Sophia Matilda Gage never married, and died in 1897.

The present trustees of Mr. and Mrs. Gage's marriage settlement took out this originating summons against the trustees of Frances Elizabeth Gage's will, and the personal representatives of the Baroness de Bertouche and of the four other children entitled under the gift over contained in the deed-poll, for the determination of the following questions—namely (1) whether the appointment by the deed-poll of 1835 of the residue of the £30,000, after payment thereout of the specific sums therein mentioned was a good exercise of the power given to Mr. and Mrs. Gage by their marriage settlement or whether the appointment of such residue was wholly or in part void for remoteness; (2) who were now entitled, and in what shares, to the funds subject to the settlement of 1793; and (3) if and so far as might be necessary execution of the trusts of that settlement.

The first question argued was whether the gift over in the deed-poll of the residue of the £30,000 was void for remoteness or not.

M. Baillie, for the plaintiffs, stated the case.

E. E. Fletcher, for the trustees of Frances Elizabeth Gage's will.—We are entitled in default of appointment. The appointment is bad because it offends the rule against perpetuities. The question is, is the gift over to the four named children "on the death or marriage," as the case may be, "of the last living or unmarried" of the three named daughters a good gift? It is not a good gift, for the class must be ascertainable within twenty-one years from the death of the survivor of the father and mother, and this gift is not ascertainable till the death of the last of the unmarried daughters, which in fact happened fifty-one years after the death of the surviving parent: Stuart v. Cockerell, L. R. 7 Eq. 363, 17 W. R. Ch. Dig. 191; Blight v. Hartnoll, 30 W. R. 513, 19 Ch. D. 294; Morgan v. Gronow, L. R. 16 Eq. 1, 21 W. R. Dig. 176.

Vaughan Hawkins, for the representatives of some of the appointees under the gift over.—The appointment is good. It is a gift to the three daughters defeasible on their death unmarried. This case is the same as Wainwright v. Miller, 45 W. R. 652, [1897] 2 Ch. 255.

Norton and Kenyon Parker, for other appointees.

Fletcher, in reply.—Wainwright v. Miller is in my favour. The gift is not defeasible on death unmarried; on the contrary, no interest is given to the three daughters until they marry. The class to take is not ascertainable until that event, and the gift therefore is too remote.

KEKEWICH, J.—To my mind this is an example of an attempt to do a perfectly legitimate thing in a wrong way. I think the appointors might have done what they desired and provided as they purported to do without raising any real question as to the result. I say "any real question as to the result," for though Wainwright v. Miller removes any doubt there might have been, I cannot myself doubt that if this appointment had been made on similar lines it must have been upheld. Any contingency of defeasance might have been introduced, but the difficulty, to my mind, seems to lie in the precise form of the gift over. In the case I am now considering the gift over is to four named persons about whom there can be no question at all. There would have been no question either about the three unmarried daughters if they had been unconditionally included in that gift over, but they are not, for the appointors limited the gift over in their case "to such one or more of them as shall marry as aforesaid"—that is, "as shall have been married when the gift over comes into operation." But the gift over comes into operation by the death of the survivor of the three unmarried daughters. You have therefore to consider at that point of time whether any of them were married—that is, in this case, in the year 1897, an indefinite time, a time, in fact, far beyond lives in being and twenty-one years afterwards. But of course this is not a question of fact, but a question of possibility, whether it could or could not exceed the limit allowed by the law of perpetuities.

In limiting the appointment in this way the appointors were only postponing the determination of the class as regards these three daughters until it could be ascertained by the death of the last survivor of them whether one or two or all of them were married. Unfortunately, by postponing the ascertainment of the class as regards the three daughters you postpone it as to the other four children also, and so these latter have to wait until the death of the last survivor of the three unmarried daughters. In my opinion, therefore, the donees of the power have exceeded the limit allowed by the law of perpetuities and the gift over is void for remoteness.

R. F. Norton.—The appointment of £1,500 each to the three unmarried daughters "who shall hereinafter marry" is also bad as it likewise transgresses the rule against perpetuities.

Vaughan Hawkins.—The appointment is good. The gift is vested but defeasible on the happening of a certain event; and that is a good gift: Wainwright v. Miller.

KEKEWICH, J.—It seems to me that I cannot, consistently with my decision on the other point, hold that this appointment is good. The question can be stated in the simplest manner. A marriage settlement is made in the usual form and contains the ordinary power of appointment among the children of the marriage. In exercise of this power an appointment is made by the husband and wife directing the trustees of the settlement to hold the trust fund upon trust to pay to each daughter, as and when she marries, a sum of £1,500, and, subject thereto, disposing of the rest of the trust fund, or not disposing of it, or appointing part of it to some of the children of the marriage, and leaving the remainder to go as in default of appointment. The question is whether this appointment is valid seeing that a daughter may marry more than twenty-one years after the death of the survivor of the appointors, and that until a daughter marries it is necessarily left uncertain as to what will be taken by the other children under the appointment, or under the trusts of the settlement in default of appointment. That seems to me to be obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities, although it is a very moderate provision in favour of the children and might be very desirable; but of course I have nothing to do with that. The point seems to be quite new, and no case has been cited dealing with such an appointment. I must, therefore, decide the question on principle, and on principle I think that the appointment is bad and there must be a declaration to that effect.

Subsequently to the above decisions another summons was taken out by the trustees of the Baroness de Bertouche's marriage settlement, asking for a declaration that the trust in the deed-poll for payment of the income of the residue of the £30,000 so long as the three unmarried daughters, Frances Elizabeth Gage, Louisa Henrietta Gage, and Sophia Matilda Gage, or any or either of them should be living and unmarried, and if more than one in equal shares, was invalid.

The summons was adjourned into court, and came on for hearing on the 18th of February, 1898.

Vaughan Hawkins, in support of the summons.—The appointment in question is altogether void for remoteness; and even if the gift to them while living and unmarried is good, the gift over on death or marriage is bad. Wainwright v. Miller does not apply. This is not a case of a gift with cross-remainders over, but of a gift to a class which cannot be ascertained until after the legal limit is passed.

He also referred to Boughton v. James, 1 Coll. C. C. 26, and Lewis on Perpetuities, p. 173.

R. F. Norton, for persons in the same interest.

M. Baillie, for the trustees of Frances Elizabeth Gage's will and the representatives of Sophia Matilda Gage.—The whole gift is good. A gift to a class of unborn children for their lives is good, and a gift over determining any such life interests on the happening of a certain contingency was held to be good in Wainwright v. Miller, which applies here.

Vaughan Hawkins replied.

KEKEWICH, J.—It has been already decided on the construction of this very will, and, as it happens, by myself, that a gift over on the marriage of the object of the power, which marriage may not happen within the time limited by what we term the law of perpetuities, is bad. I do not mean to go back on that at all. It applies, it seems to me, to this clause which I have now to consider. But I think that Mr. Vaughan Hawkins and Mr. Norton are endeavouring to press that decision too far. I say at once that I accept Wainwright v. Miller, which indeed, commends itself to my judgment, and, I think, expresses the view of Knight-Bruce, L.J., in Boughton v. James. I will treat that case as a guide. It seems to me that I have to construe this will as one always has to construe any instrument in order to find out its legal meaning. If that legal meaning offends against the law, you cannot give effect to it; but if its legal meaning is within the law, then you can give effect to it. Now, this is a terse, succinct gift, and Mr. Norton says—and Mr. Vaughan Hawkins says the same thing—that there are no gifts here with cross-remainders over; that you cannot find here a gift to the three, and then if one marries to the two, and if two marry to the one. It is not written out at that great length. If it were written out it would occupy a whole page instead of a few lines; but to my mind the draftsman has succeeded in expressing all that in a succinct form, and it seems to me an excellent expression of intention. The gift is to these three daughters by name—not to so many "of my daughters"—but to these three ladies, or any or either of them as shall be living and unmarried at the date when they take possession. If, therefore, they are all living and unmarried they all take. Of course they take the whole between them. There are three of them, and one would expect to find that they take equal undivided shares as tenants in common, and the testator has so expressed it, and if you run on further down you will find that that is so provided, for the testator says that if there are more than one they are to take in equal shares; so that really, though it is a gift to all of them who shall be living and unmarried, it is really a gift of a third to each, and that works out throughout the whole sentence. There is no gift over in express words on the marriage of anyone to the others; but you are obliged to import that, as it seems to me, in order to give full effect to the sentence, because such of them as are living and unmarried take, while those who being alive and married, or those who, having been alive in the first instance, subsequently die, lose their shares; and it seems to me precisely the same thing as if the appointors had said, "We assume that the three will be living and unmarried at the time when the appointment takes effect. We give them the income between them in equal undivided shares as tenants in common until one of them marries; thenceforward we give it to the remaining two until another of them marries; thenceforward we give it to the remaining unmarried one until she marries." Then there is a gift over when all of them marry—that is to say, when the last spinster takes a husband. That seems to me the plain meaning of the words, though it is written in a succinct and, I think, perfectly accurate form. If that is so, on the authority of Wainwright v. Miller, and on the law generally, I see no reason why these three ladies should not take the whole property between them in equal and undivided shares as long as they are living and unmarried. It is not denied that they did. But an event happened within about a year—namely, one of them married. On the construction that I have put on the deed-poll there was a gift over in that event of one-third. I think that gift over is bad; I need not pursue it further. As regards what the two unmarried daughters had before—that is, each an undivided third, I cannot see that that was interfered with because one-third was given over. It really, according to my view, comes to a construction of the will. I think it must be declared that the appointment of the income was valid as to the share of each daughter so long as she was living and unmarried, but that the appointment was invalid as to one-third from the date of the marriage of Louisa; and it follows that the gift of one-third over on the death of Frances, who died unmarried, was also invalid as from her death.

DAVEY v. WILLIAMSON.
RICHARDS (Claimant). (a.)

Company — Debenture-holders — Floating security — Execution creditor—Sheriff—Priority.

A trading company issued first mortgage debentures payable on the 31st of December, 1898. They were secured by a floating charge upon all the property of the company. Indorsed on the debentures was the provision that they should become payable "if an order is made, or an effective resolution is passed, for winding up the company"; also, "whenever the trustee of the within-mentioned trust deed shall have entered upon the mortgaged premises comprised in the trust deed, or appointed a receiver or receivers under the provisions therein contained." A further condition was that no part of the property subject to the security should be dealt with except in the ordinary course of business of the company.

The debenture-holders were entitled to the benefits and subject to the conditions of the said trust deed, which vested in a trustee for the benefit of the debenture-holders the leasehold property and the uncalled capital of the company, and gave to such trustee the right to call upon the company to vest in him all the property of the company, but the company was left free—until the trustee or the debenture-holders took action on the happening of any of certain events contemplated by the deed, one of which was "If any execution, sequestration, extent, or other process of any court or authority is sued out against the property of the company for any sum whatsoever," or until the happening of any of the events contemplated by the terms of the debentures—to carry on the business and deal, but only in the ordinary course of business, with the assets of the company.

The plaintiffs obtained judgment against the company for a sum of money, and a writ of fi. fa. was issued, under which the sheriff seized certain goods in the possession of the company which were charged by the debentures. The claimant then, for himself and the other debenture-holders, claimed the goods as theirs under the debenture securities. The sheriff thereupon interpleaded. The due date of the debentures had not then arrived, nor had any winding-up resolution been passed. No receiver had been appointed, nor had the trustee put in force his powers under the trust deed.

Held, that the rights of the debenture-holders prevailed against those of the execution creditor. The seizure under the execution on the judgment was not a dealing by the company in the ordinary course of business within the condition indorsed on the debentures. The security had become enforceable by reason of the fact that an execution had been sued out against the company. The goods seized were charged with the payment of the amount of the debentures, which exceeded the value of the goods, and the judgment debtor had therefore no interest in the property seized available to satisfy the judgment debt.

This was an appeal from the decision of His Honour Judge Paterson on an interpleader issue in which the question was whether the rights of the claimant, claiming for himself and the other holders of debentures of the defendant company (the judgment debtors) to certain goods seized under writ of fi. fa. by the sheriff prevailed over the rights of the plaintiffs, who were the execution creditors.

The learned county court judge held that they did not, and apparently on two grounds: (1) that the rights of the debenture-holders had not become "crystallized," the debentures not having become due and no receiver for the debenture-holders having been appointed; and (2) that seizure of the company's goods under execution was a dealing with such goods in the ordinary course of business and did not contravene any rights of the debenture-holders, whose securities were, in his judgment, subject to the risk of such seizure.

The company (a trading company) in January, 1894, being duly authorized to do so, issued £3,000 first mortgage debentures in sixty debentures of £50 each, and six of these were held by Richards, the claimant. They were made a charge on all the property of the company, real and personal, present and future, not assured or charged by the trust deed hereinafter mentioned, and were payable on the 31st of December, 1898, or on such earlier date as the principal moneys thereby secured should become payable in accordance with the conditions endorsed thereon. Amongst such conditions were the following: "(4) The principal moneys hereby secured shall become payable immediately on the happening of any of the events hereinafter specified, and also all right of the company to deal for any purpose whatsoever with any of the property shall forthwith cease on the happening of any such events." Here followed the events, inter alia: "(c) If an order is made or an effective resolution is passed for winding up the company"; "(d) Whenever the trustee of the within-mentioned trust deed (hereinafter called the trustee) shall have entered upon the mortgaged premises comprised in the trust deed or appointed a receiver or receivers under the provisions therein contained." By the third condition endorsed on the debentures it was provided that until the moneys thereby secured should become payable the debentures should be a floating security, and it was stipulated that the company should not before payment of such debentures create any charge to the prejudice of the debenture-holders without their sanction, and finally, that no part of the property subject to the floating security of such debentures should be dealt with except in the ordinary course of the business of the company. Further, by such debentures it was provided that the holders should be entitled to the benefit of, and be subject to, the conditions of the trust deed.

The trust deed (25th of January, 1894) referred to, was a deed between the company of the one part and James Thomas Harrison, called the trustee, of the other part, by which the company demised to the trustee certain leaseholds described in the first schedule thereto, and assigned to the trustee the amount uncalled on the shares of the company. The trust deed also contained a covenant that the company would immediately after being requested by the trustee, assure to or otherwise vest in the trustee the business of the company and the goodwill of such business and all the real and personal property and assets of the company present and future, if any, not thereinbefore assigned or demised to the trustee, except chattels within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Act. The deed further provided that the premises thereby demised and assigned and the premises comprised in the covenant should be held by the trustee as a security for the debenture-holders, and so that the principal money and interest owing in respect of the debentures should be a fixed and not a floating charge so far as relates to such of the premises as were thereby demised and assigned respectively and should be a floating charge so far as relates to such of the premises as were comprised in the covenant, and so that the company should not create any mortgage or charge upon the premises in priority to the money and interest secured by the debentures, and subject as aforesaid the trustee should hold the premises upon trust to permit the company and its assigns to hold and enjoy the premises and to carry on the business and any business authorized by the memorandum of association of the company until the happening of one or more of the events upon which the security thereby constituted became enforceable.

The events contemplated were twelve in number, but the only important one for the purposes of this case was the fourth, which was as follows: "(b) If any execution, sequestration, extent, or other process of any court or authority is sued out against the property of the company for any sum whatsoever."

The effect, briefly put, of the documents was that the debentures were secured by a floating charge upon all the property of the company, and that the trust deed vested in a trustee for the benefit of the debenture-holders the leasehold property and the uncalled capital of the company, and gave to such trustee the right to call upon the company to vest in him all other property of the company, including the goodwill of its business, but excluding any chattels within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Act; but the company was left free until the trustee or the debenture-holders took action on the happening of any of the events contemplated by the deed or by the terms of the debentures to carry on the business and deal freely, but only in the ordinary course of business, with the assets of the company.

The company got into difficulties, and was unable to discharge its obligations by payment as they arose. In the result the plaintiffs obtained judgment against them for £11 17s. 9d., and a writ of fi. fa. was issued, under which the sheriff seized certain goods in possession of the company which were charged by the debentures. The claimant then, for himself and the other debenture-holders, claimed the goods as theirs under the debenture securities. The sheriff thereupon interpleaded, and the goods seized were not sold. To complete the facts, it only remains to add that the due date of the debentures had not arrived; that no winding-up resolution had been passed; that no receiver had been appointed; and that the trustee had not put in force his powers under the trust deed.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 14.—Lord RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J., read the following judgment of the court: [After stating the facts above set out his lordship proceeded as follows:] In this state of things the question is, Do the rights of the debenture-holders prevail against those of the execution creditor? It may seem hard upon the execution creditors that they should not be able to realize their judgment for their debt incurred in supplying trade goods for the purpose of the company's business, and that they should be met by claims of debenture-holders of which they had no knowledge or public means of knowledge, and that such debenture-holders should be allowed to claim as theirs, goods in the apparent control of the company, and upon which, possibly, or indeed probably, credit had been given to them. But these are matters which concern the judgment and action of Parliament. We must determine the right of litigants in conformity with what we believe to be the law. In our judgment the rights of the debenture-holders do, in this case, prevail against the execution creditor.

We cannot assent to the view of the learned county court judge that a seizure under an execution on a judgment against the company is a dealing by the company in the ordinary course of business within the 3rd condition endorsed on the debentures so as to be within the authority given to the company by the terms of the debentures. It is not in the ordinary course of business that the debts of a going business, firm, or company shall be liquidated by seizure of their assets under legal process. Nor can the transaction be properly described as a dealing by the company at all. It is a compulsory legal process directed against the company, not a dealing by them.

The second ground on which the learned county court judge proceeded was that the rights of the debenture-holders had not "crystallized," or, in other words, that the moneys secured by the debentures had not become payable. As to this, it is, in the first place, to be observed that, although this is so, yet by reason of clause 4 (b) of the trust deed, previously set out, the security constituted by that deed had become enforceable by reason of the fact that an execution had been sued out against the company. But, apart from this, the sheriff can only realize the judgment against the goods of the judgment debtor. Here the goods seized are validly charged with the payment of the amount of the debentures, and it is admitted that that charge far exceeds the value of the goods in question. The rights of the execution creditor are subject, not only to the legal, but also to the equitable, rights of the debenture-holders. The sheriff cannot merely by seizing affect the rights of third persons to which property was subject when in the hands of the debtor, unless, indeed, such third persons have debarred themselves from the assertion of such rights.

It follows, therefore, that there was no interest of the judgment debtor in the property seized available to satisfy the judgment debt. Nor is the debenture-holder prevented from asserting his charge upon the property in the circumstances of this case. The company as a going concern had come to an end, and although the due date of the debentures had not arrived, the holders were entitled to intervene to protect their security. Neither were they bound to apply for a receiver or to proceed with a view to the winding up of the company. They are entitled to say to the sheriff, "The goods seized are validly charged to us, and you cannot sell them to the prejudice of our security." No case has been cited to us, and we know of no case, in which, in such circumstances as the present, the rights of the execution creditor have prevailed over those of debenture-holders.

It seems to us that this reasoning is fully supported by the authorities: see In re Standard Manufacturing Co., in which case the rights of the debenture-holders had not "crystallized"; see also In re Opera, Limited.

The result is that the appeal will be allowed.

KIRSHENBOIM (Appellant) v. SALMON & GLUCKSTEIN (LIMITED) (Respondents). (a.)

Trade-mark—Merchandise marks—False trade description—Application to goods—Goods supplied equal in quality to goods described—Absence of fraudulent intent—Offence—Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), ss. 2, 3.

By section 3 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, a false trade description is defined as "a trade description which is false in a material respect as regards the goods to which it is applied."

Held, that a trade description which is false in point of fact as a description of the goods is "false in a material respect as regards the goods to which it is applied," and is therefore a false trade description within the meaning of the section, although the goods supplied are of as good a quality as the goods described, and although there is no intention to deceive or defraud the buyer; and, consequently, that a person who sells cigarettes to which a label is attached describing them as hand-made when in fact they are machine-made, is guilty of an offence under the Act, although he shows that the cigarettes actually sold were of as good a quality in all respects as if they had been made by hand, and that he had no intention to deceive the buyer.

Case stated by Mr. Lushington, metropolitan police magistrate sitting at Bow-street police-court.

An information was preferred by the appellant against the respondents under section 2 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, for having sold to the appellant certain cigarettes to which a false trade description—namely, the words "Guaranteed hand-made by experienced workmen"—was applied, contrary to the provisions of the Merchandise Marks Act. This information was heard and determined on the 3rd of July, 1897, by the magistrate, who dismissed the information. The facts were these:

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law

The respondents sold to the appellant for the sum of 2½d. ten cigarettes in a packet, to which a printed label had been affixed bearing the words, "Ten cigarettes guaranteed hand-made by experienced workmen." The ordinary price for ten cigarettes made by hand of the same quality of tobacco would have been 2¾d.

The appellant was a member of the Amalgamated Cigarette and Tobacco Cutters' Union, and it was admitted by him that he purchased the cigarettes for the purpose of ascertaining whether they were hand-made or not, and with a view to eventual legal proceedings, and not in the belief that they were made by hand, or with the object of purchasing hand-made cigarettes for re-sale or consumption. It was admitted by the respondents that the cigarettes were not made by hand, and it was not suggested that the quality of the tobacco used by the respondents was inferior to what it should have been. The complaint was founded on the method of manufacture only.

The cigarettes were found upon examination by the magistrate to be free from tightness, looseness, or lumps, and to be well and evenly made for all smoking purposes.

It was proved that they were made by the respondents by a newly-invented machine called Barron's machine; that the same qualities of starch and paper were used in this making as would have been used if they had been made by hand and in the same quantities; and that Barron's machinery includes a sifting process by which the tobacco is freed from dust before it is packed inside the paper roll.

The magistrate found as a fact that the cigarettes made by Barron's machine were as pure and clean in point of material, and as proper in point of construction for all smoking purposes as they could have been if hand-made.

It was also proved that the printed label complained of was one of a parcel of two million labels for the ten-cigarette size of packet, which had been printed for and used by the respondents before their adoption of Barron's machine and while they still made their cigarettes by hand only, and that the respondents had continued to apply the remaining stock in hand (about half a million) of these labels to the ten-cigarette packets.

The magistrate was satisfied that in their continued use of the old ten-cigarette labels after they had ceased to make cigarettes by hand the respondents were actuated merely by a spirit of economy that prompted them to use the large remaining stock of labels which they had already paid for, and thereby to save the cost of printing an equivalent number of new ones; and he held that there was no intention to deceive the buyer or to induce him to purchase goods which he would not have purchased if the description in question had been omitted from the label.

As a matter of law he held that the words of the label constituted a trade description applied to goods within the meaning of the Merchandise Marks Act, in which goods are defined as embracing for the purposes of the Act anything which is the subject of trade, manufacture, or merchandise; and whereas a false trade description is defined by the Act to mean a trade description which is false in a material respect as regards the goods to which it is applied, he held that, in determining whether the label in question constituted a false trade description within the meaning of the Act, he was to interpret the terms of the statute in strict reference to the relation borne by the truth or falsehood of the description to the special and essential qualities and functions of the manufactured article, and he held that the label, although untrue in point of fact as a trade description, was not a false trade description in any material respect as regarded the cigarettes sold to the appellant within the meaning of section 3 of the Merchandise Marks Act, and he therefore held that the respondents had not been guilty of any offence under the Act, and he dismissed the information.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether, upon the facts aforesaid, the magistrate ought to have convicted the respondents.

The Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), provides: Section 2 (1) "Every person who (d) applies any false trade description to goods, or . . . shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, and unless he proves that he acted without intent to defraud, be guilty of an offence against this Act. (2) Every person who sells, or exposes for, or has in his possession for, sale, or any purpose of trade or manufacture, any goods or things to which any forged trade-mark or false trade description is applied, or to which any trade-mark or mark so nearly resembling a trade-mark as to be calculated to deceive is falsely applied, as the case may be, shall, unless he proves (a) That having taken all reasonable precautions against committing an offence against this Act, he had at the time of the commission of the alleged offence no reason to suspect the genuineness of the trade-mark, mark, or trade description; and (b) That on demand made by or on behalf of the prosecutor, he gave all the information in his power with respect to the persons from whom he obtained such goods or things; or (c) That otherwise he had acted innocently; be guilty of an offence against this Act."

Section 3 (1) "For the purposes of this Act the expression 'trade description' means any description, statement, or other indication, direct or indirect, . . . (c) as to the mode of manufacturing or producing any goods. . . . The expression 'false trade description' means a trade description which is false in a material respect as regards the goods to which it is applied, and includes every alteration of a trade description, whether by way of addition, effacement, or otherwise, where that alteration makes the description false in a material respect, and the fact that a trade description is a trade-mark, or part of a trade-mark, shall not prevent such trade description being a false trade description within the meaning of this Act."

Corrie Grant, for the appellant.—The learned magistrate was wrong in holding that this was not a "false trade description" within the meaning of section 3 of the Act. The description on the label was "guaranteed hand-made by experienced workmen." It was admitted that the cigarettes were machine-made, and not hand-made; and the magistrate has held that this description was untrue in point of fact. That was sufficient to render the respondents liable under the 2nd sub-section of section 2. [He was stopped.]

H. Avory, for the respondents.—The learned magistrate was right in refusing the convict. There are two grounds upon either of which his decision can be supported. In the first place, the question was a question of fact for the magistrate to deal with, and he has dealt with it as a question of fact and his decision upon it is final. Section 3 of the Act defines what a false trade description is, and it defines it as a trade description which is false in a material respect as regards the goods to which it is applied. In each and every case, therefore, the magistrate has to consider upon the evidence whether the description is false in a material respect as regards the goods; he has to consider and decide upon the materiality of the falsehood of the description. Applying that here he had to consider the materiality of the description

"hand-made" as compared with machine-made cigarettes. He has done so and he has found that the misdescription was not material so far as regarded the goods. The magistrate has to inquire in each case as to the materiality of the false description as regards the goods, and here he has found that the machine-made cigarettes were as good as the hand-made cigarettes, and that, therefore, there was no false description in any material respect as regards the goods. In the second place, the respondents have proved that they "acted innocently," which is a defence under clause (c) of sub-section 2. The magistrate has found in the case that there was no intention to deceive the buyer, or to induce him to purchase goods which he would not otherwise have purchased. There was no intention to deceive, and there was no profit made by the respondents by the misdescription; that being so, the respondents have succeeded in proving that they "acted innocently," which is a defence to this information. Upon both grounds the decision of the magistrate was correct.

He referred to the cases of Starey v. Chilworth Gunpowder Co., 38 W. R. 204, 24 Q. B. D. 90; and Gridley v. Swinborne, 5 Times L. R. 71.

Lord RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J. — This case comes before us on a case very carefully stated by the magistrate, and we are asked to express the opinion of the court whether the magistrate ought to have convicted the respondents. The charge was a charge preferred under section 2, sub-section 2, of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, and that sub-section provides that it is an offence against the Act to sell any goods to which a false trade description is applied, unless the person so selling proves certain things therein specified. The facts are fully set out in the case, and the learned magistrate upon those facts finds, and very properly finds, that the description "guaranteed hand-made by experienced workmen" is a trade description within the meaning of this Act, and that it was falsely applied; and then he proceeds to explain what he means by that finding, and he thought that the goods supplied were at least as good as those ordered, and he further finds that there was no intention to deceive the buyer. He therefore finds that this was a false trade description applied by the respondents, but he also finds that the falsity of that trade description was not material under the circumstances. If the magistrate had contented himself with merely finding as a fact that the trade description, though false, was not materially false, probably it would have been the duty of the court to have accepted that as a finding of fact. But what he has done, and quite rightly done, is this: he has set out the grounds and reasons by which he has arrived at his conclusion, and he has arrived at that conclusion by what I may call the doctrine of equivalents—that is, that, though the purchaser did not get what was described by the particular description applied to the goods, yet he got other goods which were as good as those so described.

In dealing with the question it seems to me to be necessary to refer to the general scheme of the Act. The general scheme of section 2 is this: It enumerates several things which are offences against the Act, and then it points out how a party charged with any of these offences may meet the primâ facie case made against him. If the charge is one under sub-section 1 of that section, then he may meet the primâ facie case against him by showing that he "acted without intent to defraud." If the charge is under sub-section 2, then there are two ways in which the charge may be met. Under clauses (a) and (b) of that sub-section, he may meet the charge by proving that he took all reasonable precautions and that he gave all the information in his power, and that obviously applies where the person charged buys goods from someone else and re-sells them to another person; or if he proves under clause (c) that he "had otherwise acted innocently," and the onus is on the defendant to show that, once a primâ facie case is made out against him. I now come to the question of materiality. In dealing with that question we ought to remember that the Act was aimed at and intended for the protection of buyers, not only as to the number, quantity, or weight of the goods, but also as to the place or country in which the goods were made, and as to the mode of manufacturing the goods, so that goods from a foreign country should not be sold as home-made goods.

Then in section 3 we have the definition of a "false trade description," which is there given as a trade description which is "false in a material respect as regards the goods to which it is applied." Under that definition it is no answer to say that the buyer has got as good an article as was described. If that were an answer to a primâ facie charge against a person, I do not see anything to prevent a person selling, say, an American ham as Yorkshire ham, and then being entitled to say that the American ham was as good as, or better, than the Yorkshire ham; and the same answer might be given in the case of butter, cheese, cigars, or any other article which might be sold under a wrong description. I cannot see that that is an answer. Applying that to the facts of this case, I do not think that it is an answer to this charge to say that the cigarettes sold here were as good as hand-made cigarettes. There are people who think the hand-made cigarettes the better. These considerations seem to me to show that the ground on which the magistrate proceeded was not the right ground, and that he was wrong in the conclusion which he arrived at, and that that conclusion cannot be supported. The buyer is entitled to know what he is buying, and to have it properly described. Another point was taken on behalf of the respondents, that in doing what they did they "had acted innocently," within the meaning of clause (c) of sub-section 2; but I cannot accept that reason. They did this thing of affixing a false trade description to the goods deliberately, and it is impossible, therefore, to say upon the facts of this case that they acted innocently within the meaning of the Act. The case, therefore, must go back to the magistrate, with the intimation of our opinion that he must convict, but it will be for him in his discretion to determine what punishment he will inflict.

HAWKINS, J.—I entirely agree. I think that the question of the materiality of the description on the label cannot be made to depend upon the question whether or not the particular goods sold were better or worse than the goods as described.

DAY, J.—I am of the same opinion.

WILLS, J.—I am of the same opinion. The magistrate has found that the misdescription affected the price of the article to the extent of about twenty per cent. How can his decision be supported? It is said that the article so misdescribed was as good as it would have been if it had answered the description; but I do not think that that can possibly be an answer to the offence charged.

WRIGHT, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Appeal allowed; case remitted to magistrate.

MOLYNEUX v. FLETCHER AND CLARK. (a.)

*Will—Advancement clause—Power—*Bonâ fide exercise of.

A testator bequeathed his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income to his children in equal shares. The will contained a proviso authorizing the trustees to apply a certain sum of each child's "presumptive share" towards the "advancement in life" of such child, the trustees to be sole judges of the advisability of such payment, and of what the term "advancement in life" might signify. After the share of one of the children, a married daughter, had become vested, the trustees advanced £250 to her at her request. This sum was intended, as the trustees knew, to be used in discharging a debt owed by the daughter's husband to one of the trustees.

Held, that the power to advance had not been exercised bonâ fide, and was a breach of trust.

Further consideration of an action tried before Kennedy, J., at the Liverpool assizes.

The action was brought against trustees of a will claiming a declaration that the advance of a sum of money by the defendants was a breach of trust and that the defendant Fletcher was liable to replace the sum advanced.

The facts are fully stated in the judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 4.—KENNEDY, J.—This action was brought by certain infants (by their next friend) against two gentlemen, and it was claimed that the defendant Fletcher, acting as trustee under the will of Edward Durant, the plaintiffs' grandfather, had committed breaches of trust. By the terms of Edward Durant's will, which was dated the 18th of April, 1878, the testator appointed executors and trustees, and devised to them all his real and personal estate, with certain directions as to realization and investment, and made his children the beneficiaries under his will. The testator left two children surviving him, who were infants at the date of his death, on the 20th of April, 1878. The two children were Fanny Jane, who came of age in 1880 and is still living and unmarried, and Amelia Margaretta, who came of age in 1881, and in 1885 married Daniel Webster Molyneux. Both she and her husband are still living, and the plaintiffs, six in number, are the children of this marriage. Neither Miss Durant nor Mrs. Molyneux are parties to this action. The defendant Fletcher was appointed a trustee of the will by order of the court in 1887. The other defendant, Clark, became a trustee only quite recently, and long after all the events in respect of which the claim in this action is made had taken place. It is alleged on behalf of the plaintiffs that in 1887 the defendant Fletcher and his then co-trustee, Thomas Urmston Clare, committed a breach of trust in advancing out of the capital funds £500 to Miss Durant and £250 to Mrs. Molyneux, and the question I have to determine in this action is whether in either or both of those cases a breach of trust has been committed. The will contained a direction to the trustees to apply in or towards the maintenance and education or otherwise for the benefit of each child of the testator entitled under the trust of the will to a share, not absolutely vested, the annual income of such share. The will further declared that it should be lawful for the trustees to apply in or towards the advancement in life of each child a sum not exceeding £500 of her presumptive share, such sum or lesser sum to be paid if the trustees should think fit, notwithstanding that the child's share was settled as thereinafter mentioned, and the trustees were to be the sole judges of the advisability of such payment and of what the term "advancement in life" might signify. Subject to that power, the trustees were, after the shares became vested, by the children coming of age, to pay the income to the two children in equal shares, and after their death upon trust for such of their children as they should appoint, and in default upon the same trusts for the children. If the daughters had no children, then their shares were to go as they might appoint, and in default of appointment to their next-of-kin.

The claim in this action was put upon the ground that the moneys paid by Fletcher in 1887 were not paid with the single view of "advancement," but with the view of the money being used for the benefit of Fletcher himself. Fletcher was a large creditor of Mrs. Molyneux's husband, and was pressing him for payment, and it is said that, though the money was nominally advanced under the power in the will, it was in reality advanced with the well-understood purpose that it should pass into the hands of Molyneux to be used by him in reduction of his debt to Fletcher. In the first place, I think it right to say that upon the construction which I put upon this will there was no power to make any advance at that time at all. It is clear on the authorities that where a power is given to trustees to apply capital money for the advancement in life of a child that power is to be construed according to a well-understood meaning. Undoubtedly instances occur in reported cases where it was intended that the advance might be made at any time in the life of the beneficiary and not within some strictly limited period. Where there is such intention apt words, such as "or otherwise benefit," are always used to express it. In In re Keshaw's Trusts, 16 W. R. 963, L. R. 6 Eq. 322, Malins, V.C., held that where there was a power at any period of the daughter's life to apply a portion of the trust fund for her advancement or otherwise for her benefit (which the Vice-Chancellor described as a very large power) an advance might be made to the husband to set him up in trade. And again, in Lowther v. Bentinck, 23 W. R. 156, L. R. 19 Eq. 166, Jessel, M.R., said: "The words which precede those which I have to construe are 'preferment or advancement,' both large words but both having, I may say, a well-known legal meaning. They are followed by the words 'or otherwise for his benefit,' which are the largest terms of all." The learned Master of the Rolls in that case then goes on to say that the words "or otherwise for his benefit" were inserted so as not to limit the powers of the trustees, and that case therefore shows that without those larger words the words "preferment or advancement" would have had a more restricted and narrow meaning. Now, in this case the words are "advancement in life" alone, and there is a further provision that the money is to be a sum not exceeding "£500 of his or her presumptive share." That means, I think, that the advancement is to be limited to the time when the share is presumptive and not vested, and I am fortified in that view by the statement in Davidson on Conveyancing, 2nd ed.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

vol. 3, p. 555, where in dealing with the cognate subject of settlements it is pointed out that the power of advancement should be extended to vested as well as presumptive shares. I further think that in spite of the very large powers of discretion given by this will to the trustees to determine what is "advancement in life," it is doubtful whether in this case an advance of money for use by the husband in his business (quite apart from the question of the benefit to Fletcher) can be justified under the terms of the will, the fund being for the daughter's separate use without power of anticipation. In Talbot v. Marshfield, L. R. 3 Ch. App. 622, 17 W. R. Ch. Dig. 191, Lord Hatherley, then Page Wood, L.J., held that where a share was advanced to set up a married daughter in business for her separate use that was a good execution. But that case clearly shows where the line must be drawn, for Lord Hatherley points out that the fund was settled to the daughter's separate use (as is the case here), and that, therefore, an advance for the purpose of paying the husband's debts was not justifiable. On the facts of this case I feel bound to come to the conclusion that, although the money was paid on the formal request of Mrs. Molyneux and her sister, it was perfectly well understood by Fletcher that the money was to be used in the husband's business for the payment of his debt to Fletcher. At that time Fletcher was admittedly pressing Mrs. Molyneux's husband for payment of the money owing by him. It is not necessary for me now to go through all the evidence, but having considered the evidence very carefully I have come to the conclusion that Fletcher did, as I have said, know the object with which the advance was to be made, and also that Fletcher received from the husband money in payment of his debt which was undoubtedly the proceeds of the two cheques which Fletcher had handed to Mrs. Molyneux and to Miss Durant, and which they in Fletcher's presence handed to Mrs. Molyneux's husband. In justice to Fletcher I should add that I have no doubt that he believed that, as whatever the husband did was done with the consent of the ladies, therefore the transaction was not morally wrong. I think the consciousness of that blinded him as to the wrongfulness of doing that which, although the tenants for life consented to it, was in fact a breach of trust. I am of opinion that the payment of these two sums by Fletcher under these circumstances was not a proper or justifiable exercise of the power of advancement contained in this will. The law is laid down by Lord Westbury in Duke of Portland v. Topham, 12 W. R. 697, 11 H. L. Cas. 32, where he says (at p. 54): "I think we must all feel that the settled principles of the law upon this subject must be upheld—namely, that the donee, the appointor under the power, shall, at the time of the exercise of that power, and for any purpose for which it is used, act with good faith and sincerity, and with an entire and single view to the real purpose and object of the power, and not for the purpose of accomplishing or carrying into effect any bye or sinister object (I mean sinister in the sense of its being beyond the purpose and intent of the power) which he may desire to effect in the exercise of the power." Another instance of the application of the principle is to be found in Humphrey v. Olver, 7 W. R. 334, 28 L. J. Ch. 406.

But another question now arises. The sole plaintiffs in this action are the infant children of Mrs. Molyneux; neither that lady nor Miss Durant are parties. On the evidence before me I have no doubt that both ladies knew what use was intended to be, and was in fact, made of the moneys advanced to them. The rule of equity is that where a trustee has committed a breach of trust of this kind with the consent of the tenants for life he is entitled to be indemnified by them (see In re Holt, 45 W. R. 650, [1897] 2 Ch. 525). As, however, they are not parties to this action, all I can do in this matter is that in making the order which I am about to make —viz., that Fletcher do replace the £250 advanced to Mrs. Molyneux, for the benefit of the beneficiaries of the will, I do so without prejudice to any proceedings that Fletcher may take against Mrs. Molyneux for an indemnity. With regard to the £500 advanced out of Miss Durant's share I cannot give the plaintiffs any relief, and for this reason. Their interest depends only on the possibility of Miss Durant dying unmarried and without exercising her power of appointment or intestate and the plaintiffs being her next-of-kin. That is not such an interest as entitles them to claim in this action in respect of the £500 advanced to Miss Durant: see Clowes v. Hilliard, 25 W. R. 224, 4 Ch. D. 413, and Stockley v. Parsons, 38 W. R. 712, 45 Ch. D. 51. The defendant Clark had no part in the breach of trust, but he has put in a defence in this action siding with Fletcher, and pleading that there was no breach of trust. Under these circumstances I cannot give him costs, but I do not give costs against him. I give directions for a reference to the registrar for the appointment of new trustees.

Judgment accordingly.

CLEGG. v. ELLISON. (a.)

Literary and scientific institution—Institution in the nature of a joint-stock company — Literary and Scientific Institutions Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 112), ss. 30, 33.

The proviso to the 30th section of the Literary and Scientific Societies Act, 1854, whereby institutions "which shall have been founded or established by the contributions of shareholders in the nature of a joint-stock company" are exempted from the operation of that section, does not require that the institution to be exempted should be actually in all respects a joint-stock company, but merely that such institution should, in some respects, partake of the nature of such a company.

Held, therefore, that a society in which the following elements of a joint-stock company were present—that is to say, first, the existence of a joint-stock or common property; secondly, the contribution of members as the source of such property; and, thirdly, the holding of that property by numerous persons in transferable shares —fell within the exemption.

The observations of Kay, J., in In re The Bristol Athenæum, 38 W. R. 396, 43 Ch. D. 236, discussed and dissented from.

This was a summons by William Edwin Clegg, on behalf of himself and all the other shareholders of the Sheffield Botanical and Horticultural Society, asking that the defendants, the trustees and committee of management of the society, might be ordered to sell the property of the society pursuant to resolutions passed and confirmed at meetings of members of the society held on the 26th of April and the 10th of May, 1897, and to distribute the proceeds of sale in accordance with those resolutions.

(a.) Reported by W. SCOTT THOMPSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The society was established under a deed of constitution dated the 15th of October, 1844, made between the various persons whose names are mentioned of the first part, and three named persons of the other part, whereby it was witnessed that whereas the said several persons parties hereto, the greater number of whom were resident in the borough or in the neighbourhood of Sheffield aforesaid, had agreed to form themselves into a society for the encouragement and cultivation of the science of botany and horticulture, and for the instruction and recreation of the members of the society and their respective families and other persons thereinafter mentioned, and to observe the several articles, rules, and regulations thereinafter contained—that was to say:

Clause 1, that the society was to be denominated the Sheffield Botanical and Horticultural Society, and its objects were to be as there specified.

Clause 2 provided that "the said society shall not make any dividend, gift, division, or bonus in money into, between, or among any of its members, nor shall any member in respect of the share or shares held by him have or be entitled to any share or interest in the gardens or other property of the society further than that in the event of a dissolution thereof, under the rules for the time being in force, the members then constituting the society shall be entitled to the property of the society according to their respective shares therein, as personal estate, after payment of all debts due therefrom and promising for all engagements then entered into by the society, or to which it shall then be liable."

Clause 3 provided for the committee of management.

Clause 4 provided that certain gardens recently purchased should be vested in certain gentlemen there named "upon such trusts as shall secure to the members of the society and their families, and to such other persons as, pursuant of these rules, shall be entitled thereto, the free use and enjoyment of the gardens under the management of the committee and subject and according to the rules of the said society for the time being."

Clause 5 provided "that all the personal property of the society shall be vested in the committee for the time being."

Clause 6 provided that "every person who has already paid or who shall hereafter pay to the funds of the society £5, and who shall execute this deed or articles of constitution or a separate deed or agreement with any five of the committee for the time being that he will observe or perform the same and the rules and regulations for the time being in force for the management and government of the society, shall be a member of the society and shall be considered as having one share therein, and for every further £5 so paid by such person he shall be considered as having an additional share therein subject to such regulations as the committe for the time being shall make for limiting the number of shares in the society."

Clause 7 provided that "every member shall pay an annual subscription of 15s., or such smaller sum as the committee for the time being shall require in respect of each share held by such member, for which he shall receive a ticket of admission to the gardens of the society."

Clause 8 provided for the register of members.

Clause 9 provided for what was to become of a member's share on marriage.

Clause 10 provided that "any member or the executor or administrator of any deceased member who shall have duly observed all the rules and bye-laws of the society may, with the consent of the committee and in such manner and subject to such regulations as they shall from time to time appoint, substitute any other person in place of himself as a member of the said society in respect of his share or shares or of any one of his shares therein."

Clause 12 provided that "every member shall have admission for himself and his family to the gardens of the society."

Under clause 14 (which was added subsequently to the first deed under the powers of administration) the committee were empowered through the secretary to issue season tickets in each year and available for the following twelve months. The places of sale and price to be advertised as the committee might deem desirable, and each ticket should be consecutively numbered. The proceeds of such sales of season tickets should, under the inspection of the committee, be divided pro rata at the last meeting of the committee in each year amongst the holders of more than one share.

Clause 19 provided that "no person resident within the circuit of seven miles from the parish church of Sheffield, except such as are entitled by these rules, shall have admission to the gardens on any terms whatever."

Then came the management clauses, and amongst other provisions there was a provision as to meetings.

Clause 24 provided that "notice of every meeting shall be given by advertisement in all the Sheffield newspapers, or by a circular letter addressed to every member, or in both such ways at the discretion of the committee, at least seven days before the time appointed for holding such meeting."

Clause 38 provided for instruction in botany "so that no expense arising from such instruction shall be chargeable to the funds of the society."

Clause 40 provided for the sale of spare plants, fruit, and flowers, and so forth.

Clause 41 provided that "the annual subscriptions and all other moneys payable to the said society shall be applied under the direction of the committee in payment of the expenses of the society and to the maintenance and improvement of the gardens."

Clause 44 provided for the forfeiture of shares in certain cases.

Clause 45 for dissolution of the society by resolution of meetings specially called for that purpose.

The real estate of the society was vested in trustees and the personal estate in the committee of management, and every person who paid to the funds of the society £5 and executed the deed became a member and was entitled to one share in the society, which was transferable by him or his legal personal representatives. Each member was liable to pay an annual subscription of 15s., and was entitled to admission for himself and his family to the gardens of the society but was not entitled to any dividend or bonus, but was, upon the dissolution of the society entitled to a share of the profits of the society after the payment of debts and liabilities.

The gardens which formed the property of the society were conveyed to trustees for the society by a deed dated the 20th of June, 1845. The property at the time of conveyance was subject to a mortgage for £3,000, which had since been paid off. The purchase-money and the mortgage debt were paid and discharged out of the funds of the society contributed by the members. The trusts of the deed of 1845 were in accordance with the deed of constitution.

Recently the gardens had not been carried on with success from a financial point of view; and at the meetings mentioned in the summons a resolution was passed that the society be dissolved, and that the property of the society be sold to a public body known as the Town Trustees of Sheffield at a price sufficient, after payment of debts, liabilities, and costs, to pay each member the sum of £5 for every share held by him. It was, however, admitted that the value of the property probably exceeded such amount.

The Literary and Scientific Institution Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 112), was passed on the 11th of August, 1854, nearly ten years after the establishment of this society. Section 29 provides that "Any number not less than three-fifths of the members of any institution may determine that it shall be dissolved forthwith, or at the time when settled upon, and all necessary steps shall be taken for the disposal and settlement of the property of the institution, its claims and liabilities, according to the rules of the said institution applicable thereto, if any, and if not, then as the governing body shall find expedient." And further provides that "in case of disputes the adjustment of the affairs of the society is to be referred to the judge of the county court of the district." Section 30 provides that: "If upon the dissolution of an institution there shall remain, after the satisfaction of all its debts and liabilities, any property whatsoever, the same shall not be paid to or distributed among the members of the said institution or any of them, but shall be given to some other institution to be determined by the members at the time of the dissolution, or in default thereof by the judge of the county court aforesaid, provided, however, that this clause shall not apply to any institution which shall have been founded or established by the contributions of shareholders in the nature of a joint-stock company." Section 33 provides that "this Act shall apply to every institution for the time being established for the promotion of science, literature, the fine arts, for adult instruction, the diffusion of useful knowledge, the foundation or maintenance of libraries or reading-rooms for general use among the members or open to the public."

Upjohn, Q.C., and Ingle Joyce, for the applicants.—The question is whether this society comes within the Literary and Scientific Societies Act, 1854. Now, that Act solely deals with institutions for the benefit of the public. Section 29, as to dissolution, is quite in conflict with the provisions in the present case. Even if we might be deemed to fall within the Act, we are taken out of it by the proviso to section 30, we are "in the nature of a joint-stock company." The definition of a member in section 31 of the Act is very different from that contained in our Act.

They referred to In re Dutton, 27 W. R. 398, 4 Ex. D. 54; and In re The Bristol Athenæum, 38 W. R. 396, 43 Ch. D. 236.

John Dixon, for the defendants, the trustees and managers.

Sir R. E. Webster, Q.C., A.G., and R. J. Parker, for her Majesty's Attorney-General.—We submit that this scheme cannot be carried out, having regard to the provisions of the Act, the property being worth more than the purchase-money. It is a mistake to treat these members as being shareholders in the ordinary sense, they are merely members who have paid an entrance fee, they consist solely of persons who have either taken a £5 share, or have been nominated by a person who has taken such a share. The expression "a company in the nature of a joint-stock company" must mean a company carried on for profit, but this society prohibits its members from receiving any profit. The mere fact that members get some advantage by becoming a member cannot make any difference.

Ingle Joyce replied.

STIRLING, J., stated the facts, and continued: The application was opposed by the Attorney-General, who insisted that the property of the society, after satisfaction of its debts and liabilities, ought not to be distributed among the members of the society, but ought, under the provisions of the Literary and Scientific Institutions Act, 1854, to be given to some other institution of a like nature.

The plaintiffs and the defendants, the trustees and managers of the society, contend that the society falls within the exception to section 30 of that Act—or, in other words, that the society is an institution which has been founded and established by the subscriptions of shareholders in the nature of a joint-stock company. The contention on behalf of the Attorney-General is that the shareholders are not members in the proper sense of the term; and, secondly, that the society is wanting in one of the necessary elements of a joint-stock company—namely, that it should be carried on for the purposes of gain.

As regards the first of these contentions on behalf of the Attorney-General it appears to me it is not well founded. The suggestion is that the payment of £5, mentioned in clause 6 of the deed of constitution, is merely in the nature of an entrance fee; but this seems to me to attribute too little force to the language of that deed. The contributor of £5 is to be considered as having a share in the society which is transferable, and entitles the holder to certain benefits in the way of enjoyment during the continuance of the society, and to participate in the distribution of the property upon a dissolution. Although, if the argument on behalf of the Attorney-General be well founded, any such participation is forbidden by the statute of 1854, still it is to be borne in mind that that prohibition was not in force at the date of the deed; and the provisions of clause 2 may be taken into consideration in ascertaining whether or no the members are shareholders. In my opinion they are. The other contention of the Attorney-General is one which requires much greater consideration. In the first place, I think that the society was not formed for the purposes of profit. Clause 2 distinctly prohibits any dividend, division, or bonus. The language here used follows that of section 1 of the statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36, under which societies established for purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts are exempted from rates on certain terms, of which two are that the society should be supported wholly or in part by annual voluntary contributions, and should not, and by its bye-laws might not, make any dividend, gift, division, or bonus in money unto or between any of its members, which is a reason for the prohibition of dividends found in the articles of constitution. Still, that prohibition constitutes a prominent feature in the deed of constitution, and the provisions of clauses 14, 15, 19a, and 40 appear to me to be provisions as to management and not to affect the result. As I have said before, I come to the conclusion that the society was not formed for the purposes of profit.

The question then arises whether the absence of any purpose of profit precludes the application of the proviso at the close of section 30. That proviso is not that the clause "shall not apply to any institution which shall be a joint-stock company," but "shall not apply to any institution which shall have been founded or established by the contributions of shareholders in the nature of a joint-stock company." That appears to me to mean that such an institution was not to be actually, in all respects, a joint-stock company; but to be such as, without being a joint-stock company, should in some respects partake of the nature of such a company. If it be asked what elements of a joint-stock company were more particularly contemplated by the Legislature, I should say these: First, the existence of a joint-stock or common property; secondly, the contributions of members as the source of such property; and thirdly, the holding of that property by numerous persons in transferable shares. All these ingredients exist in the constitution of the society; and although no doubt joint-stock companies are ordinarily formed for the purpose of profit, many institutions exist, which are not formed for that purpose, to which it is hard to deny the nature of a joint stock company.

Under the Companies Act of 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89, it appears to be clear that a joint-stock company may be formed for other purposes than those of profit. Section 6 of that Act provides that "any seven or more persons associated for any lawful purpose may, by subscribing their names to a memorandum of association and otherwise complying with the requisitions of this Act in respect of registration, form an incorporated company"; and section 21 provides that "no company formed for the purpose of promoting art, science, religion, charity, or any other like object, not involving the acquisition of gain by the company or by the individual members thereof shall" without certain sanction hold more than a certain quantity of land. Then in the Companies Act of 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), section 23, it is provided, "Where any association is about to be formed under the principal Act as a limited company, if it proves to the Board of Trade that it is formed for the purpose of promoting commerce, art, science, religion, charity, or any other useful object, and that it is the intention of such association to apply the profits, if any, or other income of the association in promoting its objects and to prohibit the payment of any dividend to the members of the association, the Board of Trade may by licence under the hand of any of the secretaries or assistant secretaries direct such association to be registered with limited liability without the addition of the word 'limited' to its name."

Now, section 4 of this Act of 1862 prohibits the formation of any company consisting of more than twenty persons for the purpose of carrying on any business that has for its object the acquisition of gain by the company or by the individual members thereof unless registered as a company under the Act. Upon this section it has been repeatedly held that associations of more than twenty persons may exist which do not require to be registered, and are not made illegal by the Act of 1862: see for example, Smith v. Anderson, 29 W. R. 21, 15 Ch. D. 247; Crowther v. Thorley, 32 W. R. 330; and In re Siddall, 33 W. R. 509, 29 Ch. D. 1; and yet it would be difficult, as I think, to deny to those associations the nature of joint-stock companies.

The Joint-Stock Companies Registration Act of 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 110) applies only to joint-stock companies established for the purpose of profit; and it was repeatedly held (see Reg. v. Whitmarsh, 15 Q. B. 600; Bear v. Bromley, 18 Q. B. 271; and Moore v. Rawlins, 6 C. B. N. S. 289, 7 W. R. C. L. Dig. 15) that associations which very closely resemble joint-stock companies did not require registration under that Act.

On behalf of the Attorney-General some observations of Kay, L.J. (then Kay, J.), in In re Bristol Athenæum, were properly relied on. The actual decision in that case was that the Bristol Athenæum, an association possessing a constitution somewhat similar to that of the Sheffield society, could not be wound up as an unregistered company under section 199 of the Companies Act, 1862. With that decision I do not differ. Incidentally, however, his lordship did express the opinion that the Bristol Athenæum was not a joint-stock company and not within the proviso of section 30 of the Act of 1854. No one can be more sensible than I am of the weight which is due to anything which fell from what the learned judge said; but I have, while preparing this judgment, been informed by North, J., that he has, in a case before him (In re The Russell Institution, [1898] 2 Ch. 72), independently arrived at a similar conclusion with regard to the construction of section 30 of the Act of 1854 to that which I have endeavoured to express. In my judgment, on the main question, the applicant is entitled to the order for which he asks.

There remains, however, a minor question, which is one entirely of form. By clause 24 it is provided that notice of every meeting of the members shall be given by advertisement in all the Sheffield newspapers. It is admitted that although notice has been given in all the morning Sheffield newspapers an evening paper was omitted and no notices were served. Having regard to the nature of the dealing with the property which is about to take place, it seems to me that this is a case in which I should require the rule to be strictly adhered to, and therefore I think before I make an order a meeting ought to be called properly in accordance with the directions in the rules.

Q. B. Div. (Kennedy, J.) June. 7.

MARSHALL v. MACKINTOSH. (a.)

Contract—Building agreement—Default of builder—Re-entry of landowner—Damages.

A builder having made default under a building agreement, the landowner exercised the right reserved to him in such a case by the agreement to re-enter and take possession of the land and premises, with all the buildings, plant, and materials thereon.

Held, that an action would lie at the suit of the landowner against the builder to recover damages for the builder's breach of the agreement.

Action to recover damages for breach of contract.

The defendant, who was a builder, by an agreement dated the 10th of June, 1896, with the plaintiff undertook to pull down and re-erect "in carcase" before the 25th of December, 1896, a hotel in Dover street, Piccadilly, and to take a lease of the hotel from the plaintiff for eighty years from the 10th of June, 1896, at a peppercorn rent for the first year, and at the rent of £1,100 for the second and every subsequent year of the term.

The material provisions of the agreement were as follows: "(2) The lessee will at his own cost take down and clear away the old buildings, and before the 25th of December, 1896, erect in carcase (that is to say, the walls built and structure roofed in, the timbers of the floors and partitions fixed, and the gutters, rain-water pipes, and drains completed and made good in communication with the common sewer), the new buildings. . . . And in default by the lessee of the stipulation contained in this clause he shall forfeit all benefit under this agreement, which shall thereupon cease and be determined, and all the materials and buildings on the said premises shall be forfeited to, and become the absolute property of, the lessor. (11) If the new buildings shall not be erected or completed within the time and in manner aforesaid before the 25th of December, 1896, or if the lessee shall fail to observe or perform any of the stipulations herein, . . . or if he shall not proceed with the works with proper diligence, then . . . the lessor shall be entitled to re-enter upon and to the immediate possession of the said piece of land and premises, with all the buildings, erections, plant, and materials therein without making to the lessee any allowance or compensation in respect thereof. . . ."

The defendant had possession of the site on the 10th of June, 1896, and removed from it materials worth £200, and commenced, but did not complete, the pulling down of the hotel, but did not rebuild it or any part, and, save as aforesaid, wholly neglected to perform the contract. In consequence of the default of the defendant the plaintiff took possession of the premises, and put an end to the contract on the 19th of January, 1897.

The action was tried by Kennedy, J., without a jury. The learned judge found there had been a breach of contract by the defendant and referred the case to an official referee to report what damage, if any, the plaintiff had sustained, having regard to all the facts, by reason of the defendant's breach of contract.

The official referee reported that the plaintiff after taking possession of the premises on the 19th of January, 1897, forthwith took every reasonable precaution to endeavour to relet without loss, and did relet for the best terms he could by an agreement of the 5th of May, 1897, for eighty years from the 24th of June, 1898, at a peppercorn rent for the first year, and at the rent of £900 for the second and subsequent years of the term; that the fair value at which to capitalize the rent was twenty-five years' purchase. The official referee found that the damages which the plaintiff sustained by reason of the defendant's breach of contract in this action were the loss of two year's rent of £1,100 from the 24th of June, 1897, to the 24th of June, 1899, amounting to £2,200, and the loss of £200 a year rent from the 24th of June, 1899, at twenty-five years' purchase, amounting to £5,000, making a total of £7,200. If the plaintiff was only entitled to recover damages caused by the removal of materials by the defendant and by the loss of possession from the 24th of June, 1896, to the 19th of January, 1897, then the official referee found that the amount of such damage was £200 and one years' rent of £900 from the 24th of June, 1896, to the 24th of June, 1897, the earliest date at which the plaintiff was able to relet the premises.

E. Morten, for the plaintiff.

G. A. Scott, for the defendant.

KENNEDY, J.—In this case the only point I have to decide is the question of damages which the plaintiff is entitled to recover. The damages assessed by the learned official referee under alternative heads are large, and, as Field, J., took occasion to say in the course of his judgment in Wigsell v. School for the Indigent Blind, 30 W. R. 474, 8 Q. B. D. 357, at p. 359, few questions as to the principle upon which damages ought to be assessed are free from difficulty. The defendant, by an agreement in writing of the 5th of June, 1896, contracted with the plaintiff (in substance) to pull down and remove certain buildings numbered 47 and 48, Dover-street, Piccadilly, and to build on the site a new structure according to certain approved plans, elevations, sections, and specifications. The plaintiff contracted that the new structures should, before the 25th of December, 1896, be erected "in carcase" to the satisfaction of the plaintiff's architect. Upon this being done, the plaintiff contracted with the defendant to give him a lease of the land and buildings for a term of eighty years from the 24th of June, 1896, at a peppercorn rent for the first year, and thereafter at the yearly rent of £1,100. The only other provisions of the building agreement to which I need specially refer are the latter part of clause 2 and clause 11. [His lordship read these clauses.] By clause 13 the defendant had an option, subject to the terms of the agreement, during the first year of the term granted by the agreement, to purchase the fee simple at the price of £28,600. The defendant, as stated in the report of the official referee, got possession of the site on the said 10th day of June, the date of the agreement, but, except that he took down and removed £200 worth of materials from the old buildings, he did nothing whatever towards the fulfilment of the contract. The fact evidently was that he had entered upon the undertaking as a speculation without the means of fulfilling it. He frankly stated in his evidence before me that the terms of the agreement were such that he could not raise the money to build. He added that shortly before the plaintiff took possession he thought there was just a prospect, and a very good prospect, of his being able to sell the freehold. So far as I can see in the evidence no communication of such a prospect was ever made to the plaintiff.

Finding nothing beyond the removal of the £200 worth of materials had been done, and no prospect of anything being further done by the defendant, the plaintiff re-entered on the 19th of January, 1897. There can be no question of his right under the agreement to do so; and, apart from the express terms of that document, I think that upon the facts in evidence the defendant had not only broken the agreement, as he admits he did, but that the breach was of such a nature that the plaintiff would be reasonably justified in treating the defendant's conduct as showing an intention on the defendant's part not further to perform the contract.

It is clear, in my view, that the mere fact of re-entry and forfeiture does not in itself exonerate the defendant from the liability to damages for breach of contract prior to re-entry. If authority was wanted, Hartshorne v. Watson, 4 Bing. N. C. 178, appears to be an authority in point. I do not think Mr. Scott contended for the contrary view; but he did contend on behalf of the defendant that the effect of the latter part of clause 2 and clause 11, which I have read, do in this contract limit the plaintiff to such compensation as may be afforded to him by taking possession of the materials, plant, and buildings on the premises at the time of re-entry without any allowance or compensation to the defendant, and that he cannot claim damages beyond. I cannot accept this view. It appears to me that this would be to read into these clauses "as and for liquidated damages" or words to the same effect, and this, I conceive, I am not entitled to do. It is common enough to find the insertion of such words where there is an intention of the parties to agreements so to limit the liability for a breach of the contract. Instances of this are to be found in Reilly v. Jones, 1 Bing. 302; Lea v. Whitaker, 21 W. R. 230, L. R. 8 C. P. 70; and in Ex parte Newitt, In re Garrud, 29 W. R. 344, 16 Ch. D. 522, which was, like the present, the case of a building agreement. In the last cited case Brett, L.J., in the course of the argument at p. 529 says, "the words 'as and for liquidated damages' are inserted in favour of the builder; if they were not there the landowner would also bring an action for damages for the breach of the agreement." James,

L.J., on the same page says, "'liquidated damages only means that the things seized are to be taken in full satisfaction," and in the course of his judgment, at p. 531, he adds, in reference no doubt to the stipulation "as and for liquidated damages," "the building agreement provides in effect that in a certain event certain property of the builder may be taken by the landowner in full satisfaction of the agreement." It appears to me that in the absence of some such words as "as and for liquidated damages" I cannot construe clauses 2 and 11 as depriving the landowner of the right to prove, if he can, actual damages for the defendant's failure to perform the contract. I may add I do not think that the words in clause 11, "without making to the lessee any allowance or compensation in respect thereof" would operate to prevent the builder, if the landowner after a breach re-enters and claims damages, from having considered in the damages any value which might exist in buildings, plant, or material seized by the landowner when he re-enters. The damages must be assessed rebus sic stantibus, and it might be the case, for example, that if the structure at the time of re-entry though not entirely completed "in carcase" was nearly so, or if very valuable plant and material were on the land, the landowner would fail to prove any substantial damage at all to flow from the breach on which he sues, as he failed in the case of Oldershaw v. Holt, 12 A. & E. 590, where after re-entry he made an advantageous lease with a new contractor.

The remaining question is, what are the damages to which the plaintiff here is entitled for the breach which is committed before the plaintiff re-entered on the 19th of January? The learned official referee, to whom I referred the question of damage, has given two alternative assessments. [His lordship read the report of the official referee.] The damages must be assessed, in my judgment, upon well-known and well-recognized principles. They must be such as flow naturally, and, in the cirumstances of the case necessarily, from the breach of contract; further, they must be such damages as may reasonably and properly be taken to have been in contemplation of the parties when they entered into the contract; subject to this, at all events, the plaintiff is to borrow the language of Field, J., in Wigsell v. The School for Indigent Blind, 8 Q. B. D., at p. 364, "entitled to have his damages assessed at the pecuniary amount of the difference between the state of the plaintiff upon the breach of the contract, and what it would have been if the contract had been performed." Now, what would have been the state here, if the defendant's contract had been performed before the date of the re-entry on the 19th of January? There would have been a complete removal of the old buildings, and upon this important site the "carcase" completely erected of a valuable building. If this had been the case, it may, I think, fairly and properly be assumed that if the defendant failed to further complete his contract and take his lease, there would have been no difficulty in the plaintiff getting someone to take up the undertaking on at least as profitable terms. As it is, not only, after seven months, is there no new building erected, or even begun, but the old building is still on the ground and substantially as it was on the 10th of June, except so far as it had been made, I suppose, less valuable by its having had £200 worth of materials removed from it by the defendant. It is shown by evidence to the satisfaction of the referee that the plaintiff forthwith took every reasonable precaution to endeavour to relet without loss, and did relet for the best terms he could obtain. Those terms, as was stated in the official referee's report, involved the heavy loss of £7,200. Looking at the largeness of the amount, I have most carefully considered if there is any fault of principle in this assessment, and I can find none. It appears to me to be fair to assume that if the defendant had not broken his contract before the plaintiff re-entered on the 19th of January, 1897, the state of the plaintiff would have been that which he had under the contract with the defendant; he would have got the value of the contract either from the defendant, if he completed it, or from a new contractor, if the defendant after performing the contract so far had subsequently incurred a forfeiture. Oldershaw v. Holt, which is the case most in point, of which I am aware, has never been disapproved; and in that case it was held by the Court of Queen's Bench in a very similar case of re-entry upon breach of a building lease, the breach being, as here, the neglect to build, that the jury might properly give their verdict on an estimate of the plaintiff's real damage, taking into consideration an increased rent secured by the agreement, which had been made with a new lessee after the re-entry. Upon the same reasoning the official referee might, as it seems to me, properly consider here in getting at the plaintiff's real damage the fact of the reduced rent which the plaintiff was practically obliged to accept from a new contractor, and come to the conclusion which he has come to, that the difference between that rent and what the plaintiff would have received under his contract with the defendant fairly represents the damage which flowed naturally and necessarily from the defendant's breach of contract before the plaintiff re-entered, as, under this agreement with the dedefendant, he was entitled to do on the 19th of January.

As to the second or alternative assessment, it is only necessary to say that I do not think that the damages could, according to legal principle, be assessed upon that basis. I understood in the course of the argument that it was inserted in the report in deference to the wish of counsel, in order that this method of assessment might be before me on the hearing of the arguments.

again rated to a rate for highway expenses in respect of its occupation of the land.

Held, that the appellant company was not, by reason of the order made under section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862, exempted from liability to be rated for highway expenses, and that the question of the appellant company's liability was not res judicata by reason of the decision of the quarter sessions in 1881 that the rate then in question was invalid.

Special case stated by quarter sessions for the North Riding of the County of York upon the hearing of an appeal by the North-Eastern Railway Co. against a rate made for the relief of the poor in the parish of Dalton and for other purposes chargeable thereon, on the 7th of June, 1897.

Prior to the making of an order by the quarter sessions for the North Riding at Michaelmas, 1880, constituting the hamlet of Islebeck a separate highway parish, and annexing such parish to the Bridforth highway district, that hamlet formed part of the township of Bagby in the said district, and was a place in which all the highways were repairable by the occupiers of land ratione tenuræ, and in which no highway rates were leviable by reason of the exemption contained in section 33 of the Highway Act, 1835. Islebeck continued to form part of the township of Bagby until June, 1886.

The appellant company was at all material times in occupation of lands in Islebeck, and was, prior to the 11th of April, 1881, liable ratione tenuræ to repair part of a highway in Islebeck.

On the 11th of April, 1881, an order was made at petty sessions under section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862, whereby it was ordered that all the highways within Islebeck should become, and for ever thereafter be, parish highways and be repaired and maintained by the Bridforth Highway Board, and the sums to be paid by the respective occupiers of lands in Islebeck previously liable to repair the highways in full discharge of all claims thereafter in respect of the repair and maintenance of the highways were fixed. Such sums were duly paid in accordance with the order.

On the 22nd of August, 1881, the appellant company was rated and assessed in respect of its lands in Islebeck, to a rate for the expenses incurred by the Bridforth Highway Board in repairing and maintaining the highways in its district, including the highways in Islebeck, and for other expenses legally incurred by the board. Such rate was appealed against by the company to quarter sessions upon the ground that the company was exempt from liability to contribute towards the repair and maintenance of the said highways, and upon proof of the foregoing facts the appeal against the rate was allowed.

In 1886 the hamlet of Islebeck was detached from the township of Bagby and amalgamated with the township of Dalton in the Bridforth highway district.

On the 7th of June, 1897, a rate for the relief of the poor in the parish of Dalton was made, in which the appellant company was rated and assessed in respect of its occupation of its lands in Islebeck. Such rate was levied (inter alia) in respect of expenses incurred or to be incurred by the Rural District Council of Thirsk (the successor of the Bridforth Highway Board) in respect of the repair and maintenance of the highways within the said rural district, including the portion of the parish of Dalton which was comprised in Islebeck.

The appellant company appealed against this rate to quarter sessions.

On behalf of the appellant company it was contended:

(a) That it having been decided on the appeal to the quarter sessions in 1881 that the company was not liable to contribute towards the repair and maintenance of the highways in that portion of Dalton which was formerly the hamlet of Islebeck, the question was res judicata, and the court of quarter sessions was precluded from deciding otherwise in the present appeal;

(b) That the company having been liable to maintain the highways in the hamlet of Islebeck ratione tenuræ was exempted by section 33 of the Highway Act, 1835, from liability to rates levied in respect of the repair and maintenance of such highways, and had continued to be exempt ever since;

(c) That the company, having complied with the requirements of the order of quarter sessions of the 11th of April, 1881, was by section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862, discharged of all claims thereafter in respect of the repairs and maintenance of any highways in Islebeck, and was, therefore, not liable to pay the rate in question.

On behalf of the respondents it was contended:

(a) That the decision of quarter sessions in 1881 was final only for its proper purpose and object, which was that the company was not liable to pay the particular rate then in question, and that that decision was not conclusive evidence of the matters referred to in paragraphs (b) and (c) of the appellant's contentions, which matters only came (if at all) collaterally in question before the quarter sessions, or were only incidentally cognizable, or were at most only matters to be inferred by argument from that decision;

(b) That the exemption from the payment of highway rates conferred by section 33 of the Highway Act, 1835, continued only so long as the liability of the company to repair the highway ratione tenuræ lasted, and that, therefore, the exemption determined on the 11th of August, 1881, when, by virtue of the order of that date, the highway became a parish highway;

(c) That the order of the 11th of August, 1881, only operated to discharge the appellant company from all claims from that date by the Bridforth Highway Board or its successors in respect of the repairs and maintenance of the highway then ordered to be made repairable by the parish, and in no way affected the liability of the appellant company in respect of its occupation of property within the district of the Thirsk Rural District Council, and otherwise by law liable to be rated, from paying rates for expenses incurred by the council in respect of the repair and maintenance of highways within its district.

The court of quarter sessions held that the question was not res judicata, and that the court was not bound by the decision on the appeal to quarter sessions in 1881, and that the appellant company was not exempt from payment of any portion of the rate. Accordingly the appeal was dismissed.

The questions for the opinion of the court were:

(1) Was the court of quarter sessions precluded by its previous decision in 1881 from holding that the appellant company was liable to be rated in respect of its occupation of land within the hamlet of Islebeck for expenses incurred by the rural district council of Thirsk in relation to the highways within its district?

(2) Was the appellant company exempt from payment of so much of the said rates as was levied in respect of the repair and maintenance of the highways in the hamlet of Islebeck?

The Highway Act, 1862, s. 35: Where any person or corporation is liable by reason of tenure of lands or otherwise to repair any highway situate in a highway district, the person or corporation so liable may apply to any justice of the peace for the purpose of making such highway a highway to be repaired and maintained by the parish in which the same is situate; . . . and the justices at petty sessions . . . shall, if they think fit, make an order . . . that such highway shall thereafter be a highway to be thereafter repaired and maintained by the parish, and shall in such order fix a certain sum to be paid by such person or corporation to the highway board of the district in full discharge of all claims thereafter in respect of the repair and maintenance of such highway; . . . From and after the making of such order by the justices . . . such highway shall be repaired in like manner and at the like expense as highways which a parish is liable to repair.

Bethune (R. Cunningham Glen with him), for the appellants.

Macmorran, Q.C., and Gawan Taylor, for the respondents.

The following cases were cited in the course of the arguments: Reg. v. Heath, 14 W. R. 388, L. R. 1 Q. B. 218; Heath v. Overseers of Weaverham, 42 W. R. 478, [1894] 2 Q. B. 108; Reg. v. Hutchings, 29 W. R. 724, 6 Q. B. D. 300; Wildes v. Russell, 14 W. R. 796, L. R. 1 C. P. 722; Reg. v. Inhabitants of Haughton, 1 W. R. 164, 1 E. & B. 501; Rex v. Wick St. Lawrence, 5 B. & Ad. 526; Reg. v. Inhabitants of Clint, 11 A. & E. 624*n*.

WILLS, J.—This case raises two questions—the first as to the construction of section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862, and the second as to the estoppel. The first question is whether the latter part of section 35 operates to discharge from all future liability for highway expenses the person previously liable ratione tenuræ, or whether the operation of the section is confined simply to the extra cost which would fall upon the person so liable as compared with the other ratepayers. I think that the governing words of the section are "The highway shall thereafter be repaired and maintained by the parish." It would have been easy to have said that the person, in respect of whom the liability to repair ratione tenuræ previously existed, should continue to enjoy the exemption; but that was not said in so many words, and some of the consequences, which would follow if such a construction were adopted, are so startling that in my opinion the respondents' construction of the section is the right one. In this particular place there were formerly no highways which were not repairable ratione tenuræ, and if the appellants' contention is right the result might be that, the sum to be paid by way of composition having to be fixed once for all, there would, if the expenses of repair increased in course of time, be no method of providing for the increase. In the same way, the contribution of an individual towards the highway expenses might be fixed at a sum which might in course of time become utterly inadequate to represent the burden of the liability to repair the particular highway from the burden of repairing which he had been discharged, or utterly inadequate to represent a fair proportionate share of the general highway expenses. Take for example the case of a person liable ratione tenuræ to repair a country lane. The sum to be paid by him under section 35 would be fixed with reference to the then existing state of things, and would consequently be moderate in amount; suppose he turned his property into a building estate and thereby caused the traffic to increase, if he had remained liable ratione tenuræ the increased expense of maintaining the road would have fallen on him, but if the sum to be paid by him had been fixed once for all he would derive a benefit at the expense of the community on whom the whole of the increase would fall.

It may be said that the respondents' construction of the section may operate harshly and may impose additional and even unjust burdens on individuals, but enactments of this kind are for the general benefit, and although there may be occasional injustice or hardship such cases would be rare. It seems to me that the more reasonable conclusion is that where the Legislature says that the highway shall hereafter be maintained and repaired by the parish, it means what it says, and a highway cannot be a highway repairable by the parish if some of the parishioners are exempt from contribution to the expense. If, as in the present case, the burden in the shape of highway rates cast upon the person liable ratione tenuræ by reason of the extinction of that liability is the same in amount as that previously existing, the sum to be paid by way of composition would be fixed at a nominal amount, and so no injustice would be done.

The second question was whether the judgment of the quarter sessions on the appeal in 1881 operated as an estoppel in the present case. Questions of estoppel often raise difficulties, not as to the principle, but as to the application of the principle. In Reg. v. Hutchings Lord Selborne, quoting from the Duchess of Kington's case, said: "'The judgment,' said Chief Justice De Grey, 'of a court of concurrent' (or of exclusive) 'jurisdiction, directly upon the point, is conclusive upon the same matter between the same parties coming incidentally in question in another court for a different purpose. But neither the judgment of a concurrent or exclusive jurisdiction is evidence' (that is, as I understand the meaning of the Chief Justice, conclusive evidence) 'of any matter which came collaterally in question, though within their jurisdiction; nor of any matter incidentally cognizable, nor of any matter to be inferred by argument from the judgment.'" The judgment of the quarter sessions in 1881 was that the rate then in question must be quashed. It followed that that rate was bad, and as between the same parties that question could not again be discussed; but the construction of section 35 of the Highway Act of 1862 was not one of the things necessarily involved in the judgment of the quarter sessions in 1881. It seems to me that Reg. v. Hutchings is very near this case. Mr. Bethune, who argued this case as well as it could be argued, contended that Reg. v. Hutchings was distinguishable on the ground that there is a difference between the judgment of a court of quarter sessions, which is a court of record, and a decision of a magistrate. That is so, no doubt, for some purposes, but the decision in Reg. v. Hutchings proceeded on no such ground as that, and there is nothing in that case to support the contention that in cases of estoppel there is any difference between a decision of a court of record and a court of summary jurisdiction.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the respondents are entitled to judgment.

KENNEDY, J.—I am of the same opinion, and on the same grounds.

Q. B. Div.
(Wills and Kennedy, JJ.) April 22.

LEICESTER COUNTY COUNCIL v. LEICESTER ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE. (a.)

Poor law—Rating—Exemption—Buildings occupied for police purposes—Chief constable's residence—43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 64.

By section 64 of the Local Government Act, 1888, the buildings used by the police at Leicester, then vested in the justices, became the property of the county council.

The chief constable for the county, on his appointment to that office, had to reside in a certain part of the police premises, and the assessment committee assessed that portion of the police buildings to the poor rate.

Held, that such rate should be quashed, because that part of the police premises occupied by the chief constable was occupied by him for the purposes of the police, and the fact that he was permitted to keep his wife and family there also rendered his occupation thereof none the less an exclusive occupation of that part of the building for the purpose of the county police.

Special case under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 11, after notice of appeal against a poor rate made on the chief constable's residence at Leicester. The question was whether a building used as the headquarters of the Leicester County Constabulary in the town of Leicester, part of which was used by the chief constable in his official capacity as a residence—the rest being admittedly occupied for ordinary police purposes—was liable to be rated.

In 1867 the police premises, including the chief constable's residence, had been assessed to the poor rate of St. Martin's Parish, Leicester. At that time the property was vested in the justices, and they appealed against the assessment, and a case (Reg. v. St. Martin's, Leicester, 15 W. R. 1036, L. R. 2 Q. B. 493) was stated for the opinion of the court of Queen's Bench, which court decided that the justices were not liable to poor rates for such premises. By virtue of the Local Government Act, 1888, the premises in question passed from the justices and vested in the county council. Since 1867 neither the justices nor the county council had been rated for the premises until in April, 1897, this rate was made in reference only to that part of the premises occupied rent-free by the chief constable, and it was not disputed that it was a condition of his appointment that he must reside there in his official capacity.

The defendants having made the rate, the Leicester County Council appealed to quarter sessions, and a case was stated for argument.

E. W. Garrett (S. Everard with him), for the appellants.—The question for the opinion of the court is whether this rate can be levied. We contend that no part of the building ought to be rated.

He referred to Reg. v. St. Martin's, Leicester, 15 W. R. 1036, L. R. 2 Q. B. 493.

Premises occupied for the purposes of the police are exempted, and quarters resided in by the chief constable come within that class of buildings. The fact that his wife and family live there also makes no difference: Reg. v. Stewart, 6 W. R. 35, 8 E. & B. 360; Gambier v. Lydford Justices, 2 W. R. 226, 3 E. & B. 346; Martin v. West Derby Assessment Committee, 31 W. R. 489, 11 Q. B. D. 145; and Reg. v. Lancashire Justices, 6 W. R. 74, 27 L. J. M. C. 220.

Hugo Young and C. B. Marriott, for the respondents.—The reason why the case was stated is that since the authorities that have been cited were decided the ownership of these premises has been transferred by virtue of section 64 of the Local Government Act, 1888, c. 41, from the justices to the Leicester County Council; and another fact that has altered the previous state of matters is that in two decisions in 1896 (County Council of Middlesex v. Assessment Committee of St. George's Union, 45 W. R. 215, [1897] 1 Q. B. 64, and Worcestershire County Council v. Assessment Committee of St. Nicholas, Worcester, 45 W. R. 309, [1897] 1 Q. B. 480) the Court of Appeal decided that the court in looking at a building used partly for Crown purposes and partly for county council purposes, might split up the building and consider whether a portion of it was rateable, although another portion of it was not. Prior to 1888 all these buildings were vested in the justices, who had always been regarded as the servants of the Crown. Now premises occupied by the county council for administrative purposes are liable to be rated, and the respondents claim that they are entitled to split up the building according to the purposes in respect of which each part was used by the county council, as had been done in other cases, such, for example, as the Shire-hall in the Worcester case. The question is whether this portion, used as a place of residence for the chief constable and his family, is exclusively occupied for Crown purposes. If it is not exclusively used for Crown purposes it is not exempt and the respondents' submission that part at any rate of it being used for the chief constable's private purposes is liable to the rate: Greig v. University of Edinburgh, L. R. 1 Sc. & Div. 348.

THE COURT allowed the appeal.

WILLS, J.—The case has been very clearly put by Mr. Young, and he has argued his point in the only way possible. It seems that this case is free from difficulty and it is very undesirable to encourage an attempt such as this to upset established authorities and privileges. The sole question raised is whether the occupation by the chief constable of the county is an occupation of that part of the police buildings exclusively for police purposes. The chief constable was required so soon as he was appointed to the office to live there in order that he might always be at hand and ready to discharge his duties. There is no doubt that the building generally was occupied by the police for the purposes of the police, and there is no doubt that premises so occupied are not liable to poor-rate. The only question was whether the residence of this officer being used by his family as well as himself could be treated as a part of the building set apart and used for private purposes—that is, for a purpose other than for the purposes of the police. Now, as he had to live there because it was the head office of the county constabulary and he, as the chief constable, was required to be there so as to be in immediate communication with all parts of his district, does it make a difference as to the rateability of this portion that his wife and family lived with him? It would be an absurdity to hold that it did. A wife and family have been held to be a kind of necessary appendage and must be provided for when a house or other quarters are allotted to a public servant. I appreciate the point taken that the old decisions have ceased to be conclusive authorities because of the change brought about by the Local Government Act, 1888, c. 41, and I feel that there may be cases in which premises formerly vested in the justices and then exempted from liability to rates may now when occupied by the county council no longer be exempted because by the changes brought about by the Act of 1888 a new principle of severing a building into portions for the purposes of levying rates has sprung up which before was never thought of. In this case, however, it seems to me clear that the building was occupied by the chief constable for police purposes, and that he occupied them none the less exclusively for police purposes because he was allowed to keep his wife and family there. My judgment must therefore be for the appellants with costs.

KENNEDY, J., concurred.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. } Admiralty. } Feb. 9.

"THE RIPON CITY" OR "SILVIA." (a.)

Ship—Possession—Sale of ship by majority owners—Judgment by consent—Agreed damages—Meaning of "such deductions as the interveners may be able in law to establish as proper from the respective shares and interests of the plaintiffs."

The owners of fifty-two sixty-fourth shares in a ship—the ship having been arrested in an action in rem for master's wages and disbursements—put in bail in the action and paid the amount found due by the court. They subsequently, without the consent of the owners or mortgagees of the remaining shares in the ship, entered into a contract for the sale of the whole ship to a foreign purchaser, and delivered her to him, receiving the total purchase-money. The mortgagees of eight of the remaining twelve sixty-fourth shares in the ship and the sequestrator of the mortgagee of those shares then arrested the ship in an action of possession, and the owners of the fifty-two sixty-fourth shares having intervened in that action, agreed to settle the suit by paying to the plaintiffs eight sixty-fourth parts of the purchase-money they had received for the ship, less such deductions as the interveners might be able to establish as proper from the respective shares and interests of the plaintiffs.

Held, that a sum paid by the interveners for brokerage at 2½ per cent. was a deduction to be allowed within these words, but that the amount paid for wages and disbursements, and sums paid for cancelling an onerous charter-party entered into for the ship and for repairs to her not required by the purchasers, were not allowable deductions.

Motion by mortgagees in objection to registrar's report.

This was an action of possession carried on on behalf of Messrs. Green, Holland, & Co., the owners of one sixty-fourth share in the vessel Ripon City; of Thomas Ronaldson, the owner of one other sixty-fourth share in the same vessel; (and by amendment) of Elizabeth Balls and R. K. Donald, each the mortgagee of four sixty-fourth shares in her; and of T. McLintock, the sequestrator according to the Scotch law; and of M'Lean & Co., the mortgagors of the above last-mentioned mortgaged shares in the vessel against The Ripon City. The plaintiffs claimed in the action a declaration that a pretended sale of The Ripon City made by Sir Christopher Furness and Furness, Withy, & Co. (the owners of fifty-two sixty-fourth shares in her and her managing owners) on or about the 20th of April, 1897, to a foreign purchaser was null and void, a decree that possession of the ship should be given to the plaintiffs, and that all things might be done to give and restore to the plaintiffs a legal title to The Ripon City and their shares therein.

Sir Christopher Furness and Furness, Withy, & Co. appeared as interveners in the suit, and in their defence, after admitting that they had sold The Ripon City to Paolo Viale, an Italian subject, for £8,650, and that the British certificate of registry of the said vessel had been closed on the 20th of April, 1897, alleged that they had always been ready to account to the plaintiffs for their proportion of the said purchase-money, or alternatively to pay to the plaintiffs the fair market value of their shares, and brought into court the sum of £400 as sufficient to satisfy the claims of Messrs. Green, Holland, & Co. and Thomas Ronaldson in the action. This amount of money was taken out of court by the plaintiffs, Messrs. Green, Holland, & Co. and Thomas Ronaldson.

On the 7th of August, 1897, the action came on to be heard, and the court made a decree by consent of all parties that judgment should be entered for the remaining plaintiffs in one-eighth of £8,650, with interest thereon at 10 per cent. per annum from the 17th of April, 1897, to the 7th of August, 1897, and per cent. per annum on the amount of the judgment found due from the 7th of August, 1897, until payment, "less such deductions as the interveners might be able in law to establish as proper from the respective shares and interests of the plaintiffs; the question of such deductions to be referred to the registrar and merchants."

The registrar with regard to the deductions to be made in accordance with the above judgment reported as follows:

In the account filed by the interveners they claimed to deduct from the purchase-money various sums amounting in all to £6,943 1s. 8d., leaving a balance of only £1,490 13s. 4d., of which one-eighth would be payable to the plaintiffs. At the reference, however, this claim was reduced by the withdrawal of certain items to £5,541 7s. 11d. The deductions still claimed include a sum of £795 5s. which had been paid by the ship's broker before the sale of the vessel, £325 paid shortly before the sale to cancel a disadvantageous charter entered into by Neil M'Lean & Co. while the vessel was in their hands, and £400 which had been paid by Furness, Withy, & Co. to the master in settlement of an action of wages and disbursements instituted in his name against the vessel on the 17th of February, 1897. It was held by Barnes, J., at the trial of this action that this settlement of the action was illegal and void, and I do not see how the mortgagees can be held liable for any of the other payments above mentioned, none of which would confer a lien on the ship. As regards the plaintiff Elizabeth Balls, it was suggested that she, at least had become liable as mortgagee in possession for the ships' liabilities at that time, and it is true that in one of the letters from her solicitors to the solicitors for the interveners dated the 11th of February, 1897, she was described as a mortgagee now in possession of four shares, but I think it was rightly contended by her counsel that she was not really a mortgagee in possession as nothing really had been done by her to take possession of the shares until she was joined as a plaintiff in this action on the 21st of July, 1897, and that she could not as a mere mortgagee be liable for a share of the expenses of working the ship or of cancelling a charter. The next deduction claimed was for a sum of £1,281 0s. 2d. found due to the master in his action against the ship for wages and disbursements, including his liability on certain bills of exchange which fell due and were dishonoured in August and October, 1896: see The Ripon City, [1897] P. 226, 45 W. R. Dig. 153. The amount was paid on behalf of Messrs. Furness, Withy, & Co. This was a debt for which there was an existing lien at the time of the sale of the ship in April, 1897, and it seems clear upon the authorities that it must take precedence of the mortgagees' claim. In fact it has been so decided by Barnes, J., in giving judgment in the master's action, where he said, "I may notice in passing that in the present case the eight sixty-fourth shares standing in the name of Neil M'Lean & Co., though mortgaged, are therefore subject to the plaintiffs' claim": The Ripon City, [1897] P. 226, at p. 244. This, I presume, will apply to the master's costs in the same action, but not to the costs of defending it. There remains the costs of the repairs which the vessel was undergoing at the time of her sale for which a total deduction is claimed of £2,171 18s. 2d. The general rule seems clear that a mortgagee not in possession is not liable for outlays incurred in improving the mortgaged property, but a question arises in this case on the following words in the contract for sale: "The sellers agree to complete No. 3 survey and hand certificate to purchaser." It was agreed on behalf of the managing owners that the contract price of the vessel was really not £8,650, but that sum less the cost of repairs, and that the plaintiffs are only entitled to one-eighth of the purchase-money after making that deduction. This would probably have been the case if, before commencing the repairs, the vessel had been sold in consideration of her being repaired by the vendors. But here the repairs had almost been completed before the date of the agreement for sale, and it did not even appear that they had been undertaken with a view to that particular sale. . . . It seems to me that the plaintiffs were entitled to one-eighth of the value of the vessel in her condition at the date of the agreement for sale, including so much of the repairs as had then been done, and it is evident from the dates that the cost of any repairs which then remained to be completed must have formed a very small portion of the total costs. The managing owners have claimed to deduct no less than £2,171 18s. 2d., including, it seems, the cost of repairing damage sustained by the vessel being on fire at Savannah during her last voyage. But the sum for which the contractors undertook to execute according to specification the necessary repairs for passing her No. 3 survey, the completion of which was a condition of the sale, was only £840, and there is nothing to show that the repairs still remaining to be done at the date of the contract for sale formed part of the classification repairs represented by that sum, nor that the costs of any such uncompleted repairs was not fully covered by insurance in respect of which it appears from the correspondence that the managing owners expected to recover about £1,400. In our judgment the managing owners have clearly failed to prove what, in our judgment, it clearly lay upon them to prove—namely, that any part of the cost of the repairs is properly chargeable to the mortgagees. The broker's commission of 2½ per cent. on the purchase-money appears to be a reasonable and proper deduction. I think the interveners ought to pay the costs of the reference.

Both the plaintiffs and interveners appealed against the report of the registrar, the plaintiffs asking that the report should be varied by the deduction of the 2½ per cent. brokerage made by the registrar being disallowed, and the interveners claiming that they were entitled to have the items disallowed by the registrar as above stated allowed them in account as deductions proper to be made under the decree in the action.

Jan. 17.—F. Laing, on behalf of the plaintiffs, brought on the appeal before the President (Sir F. Jeune) by way of motion, the hearing being continued on the 18th of January and the 19th of January.

Aspinall, Q.C., and Dawson Miller, appeared on behalf of the interveners.

The argument of counsel appear from the judgment.

The following authorities were cited as to equitable interests between owners and mortgagees of ships being recognized by the court and as to the power of the court to make a decree as to the plaintiffs' title: The Innesfallen, L. R. 1 Adm. & Ecc. 72, 14 W. R. Adm. Dig. 26; Batthyany v. Rouch, 29 W. R. 665, 44 L. T. Rep. 177; The Rose, 21 W. R. 511, L. R. 4 Adm. & Ecc. 6.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 9. — JEUNE, P. — The questions in this case arise on objections to a report made by the learned registrar in pursuance of a judgment of the court given by consent, and relate to the distribution of the proceeds of a vessel called The Ripon City, called at the time of the sale The Ripon City or Silvia.

The deductions now in question which were claimed in argument before the registrar and before me are, I think, divisible under four heads; first the sum of £216 5s. claimed as brokerage at 2½ per cent. on the purchase-money. This sum has been allowed by the registrar, and I think rightly. The effect of the decree by consent was, in my opinion, that Mrs. Balls and Mr. R. K. Donald, whom I will speak of as the plaintiffs, are to be treated as acquiescing in the sale as a sale, but with the reservation of all rights as to distribution of the proceeds; the gross sum realized being £8,650. It was argued before me that the plaintiffs as mortgagees could on a sale add their costs of it to their claim on the purchase-money, and should be permitted to do so now. No doubt the plaintiffs could do this as against their mortgagors but not as against the owners of other shares in the ship. Secondly, the most important question in this case arises with regard to the maritime liens on the ship which were cleared off by the interveners. The registrar has allowed the deduction of the amounts secured by lien which were paid by the interveners to Messrs. Cory in consequence of the decision of Barnes, J. (see The Ripon City, [1897] P. 226), and also of Messrs. Cory's costs on the ground that this lien was in existence at the time of the sale of The Ripon City to the Italian purchaser. But there appears to me to be no difference between the different maritime liens imposed by the conduct of Neil M'Lean & Co., and the case is the same as if the interveners had, instead of giving bail, then paid all such liens.

There is, then, but one question of law involved, and to this counsel for the interveners addressed their main argument. They contended that on the true construction of the transaction between the interveners and Messrs. Neil M'Lean & Co. the interveners ceased to be owners, and became either mortgagees, or at least unpaid vendors, with a security for payment of the purchase-money; that they took possession in order to enforce their security; that they could not enforce their security for sale without clearing off the maritime liens on the ship; and so, having not indeed relieved the mortgagees of the eight shares from personal liability, but having relieved their property from a prior incumbrance, they were entitled to deduct what they had paid in respect of the liens from the purchase-money before dividing it. I have considered the agreement of the 10th of October, as modified by the letters of the same date and of the 22nd of November, 1895 (see The Ripon City, [1897] P. 226, at p. 227), and it appears to me clear that the property in the vessel never passed to Neil M'Lean & Co., nor could specific performance ever have been enforced, as the interveners were never in a position to sell the whole ship. The position of things, I think, was that for the original intention of the whole ship being transferred to Neil M'Lean & Co., and the interveners becoming mortgagees for the unpaid purchase-money there was substituted an agreement under which the interveners, until Messrs. M'Lean & Co. acquired all the shares, remained the owners, except in so far as on proportionate payments there was a transfer of shares, Messrs. M'Lean & Co. being in the meantime allowed to work the vessel. It confirms this view to find that in their pleadings in the present action the interveners describe themselves as at all times owners of the vessel, and their argument before Barnes, J., in The Ripon City proceeded on the basis of their being the owners and not Messrs. M'Lean & Co. It was contended before me that Barnes, J., had held that the interveners were the mortgagees and Messrs. M'Lean & Co. the owners of the ship; but it is clear to me that the language of the learned judge has been misapprehended on this point. He held that a maritime lien would attach to the vessel by reason of the acts of Messrs. Neil M'Lean & Co. and without their being any personal liability on the part of the interveners, just as the act of a mortgagee left in possession of a vessel may impose a lien on her in priority to the rights of the mortgage. It was in this sense, and in this sense only, that the learned judge used the expression "So that practically the buyers were owners and the sellers were in a similar position to that of mortgagees in respect of the purchase-money remaining unpaid." For the purpose of this case it does not appear to me material whether the interveners are to be regarded as mortgagees or as owners in the position I have described. In one view they may be regarded as owners of the equity of redemption in regard to the plaintiffs' mortgagees because they had a claim against Neil M'Lean & Co. for any surplus after the discharge of those mortgagees. But they may also be regarded as having rights resembling those of a mortgagee, and so being in a somewhat similar position to that of the plaintiffs. Their legal position cannot, I think, be put higher than that. Further, it is clear that they were not personally liable on the liens discharged by them, and that to free their interests in the ship from those liens it was necessary to free the plaintiffs' interests as well, but that the plaintiffs did not expressly require them to discharge those liens. The question is, Have they, under these circumstances, on any legal principle a right to claim that the amount of the liens paid off by them shall be deducted from the purchase-money before division, and so have a proportion of the expense incurred by them thrown on the plaintiffs? The argument of counsel for the interveners was based on a contention that this payment might be treated as a payment at the implied request of the plaintiffs, and he relied on the cases of Johnson v. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., L. R. 3 C. P. 38, 16 W. R. C. L. Dig. 100, and The Orchis, 38 W. R. 472, 15 P. D. 38. It was decided in the former of these cases that the mortgagee of a ship who in order to obtain her release from a maritime lien for wages paid was entitled to recover the same on a count for money paid against the owners by whom the ship was managed and who were personally liable for the wages. The ground of the decision was that the sum was paid by the plaintiff in that case under compulsion and in respect of a liability imposed on the defendants. The same principle was carried further in the case of The Orchis, where it was held by the late President and the Court of Appeal that a mortgagee of forty-eight sixty-fourth shares in a ship, who paid to the master a sum in respect of which he had a maritime lien, was entitled to recover such sum against the owners of the other sixty-fourth shares; the ground of the decision being the several liability for the amount both for the mortgagors and the other owners. But what was, I think, an essential feature in those cases, the personal liability of the defendants to pay the sum which the plaintiff was considered to be compelled to pay and did pay, is wanting in the present instance. It is true that by the satisfaction of a maritime lien the property of every mortgagee is relieved from what, so long as it remains, is a prior charge, but a request by the mortgagee for the payment off of the lien is not to be inferred for that reason. It may be reasonable enough if there be personal liability for a debt to infer that the person liable desires and impliedly requests its discharge. But it is a further step, and one I believe erroneous, to contend that where there is no liability, but only the bare fact of benefit to property, a similar request is to be implied. People cannot be forced to buy even certain benefits against their will. In the present case, too, the benefit was doubtful. If the ship had sold for enough to provide for the lien and the mortgagees, and there is evidence to show that this was at least contemplated as possible, the plaintiffs, as mortgagees, would have gained nothing by the discharge of the lien. I have considered whether the satisfaction of this lien might not be treated as money paid to keep the property in existence, like the payment of premiums on policies of insurance. That analogy, however, seems to me to be imperfect, because different considerations may arise in the case of a payment necessary to preserve a property in existence from one which only relieves it of a burden. But were the analogy more complete than it is I think the that decision of the Court of Appeal in Falcke v. The Scottish Imperial Insurance Co., 35 W. R. 143, 34 Ch. D. 234, has finally dispelled the inferences connected with the employment of the term "salvage" in earlier cases, and decided that the payment of premiums by the owner of the equity of redemption in a mortgaged policy gives him no prior right, and that payment of premium confers such a right only on one or other of the principles enumerated by Fry, J., in the previous case of In re Leslie, 31 W. R. 561, 23 Ch. D. 552, principles which have no application in the present instance. Nor does the practice of the Admiralty Court appear to me to afford any guide in the matter. It has always been held that a person advancing money to the master to pay wages has been allowed to claim in priority for his advance, but this is, I think, because he is considered to be identified with the master. It is true also that a bottomry bond-holder who discharges a claim for wages becomes entitled to priority in respect of such payment; but this is only when he has been allowed by the court to make it. I have also endeavoured to see whether the present case may not be considered as analogous to that of the holder of an equity of redemption who pays off a first mortgage with the intention of keeping it alive, as against mesne incumbrances. I take the general principle of equity to be as laid down by Jessel, M.R., in Adams v. Angell, 25 W. R. 139, 5 Ch. D. 634, the decision of which case was afterwards approved by the House of Lords in Thorne v. Cann, [1896] A. C. 11, 43 W. R. Dig. 121. "Now, in a court of Equity it has always been held that the mere fact of a charge having been paid off does not decide the question whether it is extinguished. If a charge is paid off by a tenant for life without any expression of his intention, it is well established that he retains the benefit of it against the inheritance. Although he has not declared his intention of keeping it alive it is presumed that his intention was to keep it alive, but it is manifestly for his own benefit. On the other hand, when the owner of an estate in fee or in tort pays off a charge the presumption is the other way; but in either case the person paying off the charge can by expressly declaring his intention, either keep it alive or destroy it. If there is no reason for keeping it alive then, especially in the case of an owner in fee, equity will, in the absence of any declaration of his intention, destroy it, but if there is any reason for keeping it alive such as the existence of another incumbrance, equity will not destroy it." In the present case there was, no doubt, strong reason on the part of the interveners for keeping alive the charge enforceable by law, and no doubt also the interveners could have taken an assignment of the rights of the lien-holders when they paid off to a trustee or even perhaps to themselves. But is there enough or indeed anything beyond the fact of the payment off to show that the interveners, in giving bail, which I have treated as equivalent to paying off the maritime liens, intended to keep them alive for the purpose of maintaining a priority for such payment as against the mortgagees? I cannot think that there is. The interveners, when they gave bail, probably did not believe in the validity of the arrest; but in determining to put an end to it I think that their real object, or at least an obvious and sufficient object, was to keep the conduct of the sale of the ship in their own hands and so certainly obtain the brokerage and probably get a better price for the vessel instead of allowing her to run the risk of being condemned by the court and sold by auction, and they did this prudently enough for their own benefit partly as holders of at least fifty-two sixty-fourths of her, and partly as entitled to claim against Neil M'Lean & Co. anything their equity of redemption of the eight shares might produce. It would be, I think, a mere fiction to suppose that it was intended to keep the liens alive for any purpose, I can therefore discover no ground on which the interveners can claim a priority over the mortgagees for any of their payments in discharge of liens. Thirdly, when the interveners took possession of The Ripon City she was under a charter-party made by Neil M'Lean & Co. This charter-party was of an onerous kind, and accordingly the interveners on the 9th of April, 1897, paid £325 for its cancellation. It is contended that before that date both Mrs. Balls and Mr. R. K. Donald had become mortgagees in possession. This turns on certain correspondence which passed between the interveners, Mrs. Balls' solicitor, and Mrs. Balls herself. There is no doubt that in this correspondence Mrs. Balls' solicitor spoke of her as "mortgagee now in possession of four shares," and the interveners accepted that statement in their replies. But it is clear to me that on the side of Mrs. Balls there was misapprehension of the probable effect in law of the language employed, and on the side of the interveners there was misapprehension of the legal effect of Mrs. Balls becoming a mortgagee in possession, and on the whole I am of opinion that no act was done by or on behalf of Mrs. Balls which made her a mortgagee in possession. I come to the same conclusion as to Mr. Donald, the evidence with regard to his case being of the same character, but somewhat weaker than that with regard to Mrs. Balls. But whether they took possession or not neither Mrs. Balls nor Mr. Donald gave any express authority to pay anything for the cancellation of the charter, though Mrs. Balls was aware that the cancellation was intended and consented to it, and in the absence of any such authority I do not think that the interests of either of them can be held liable.

Fourthly, the remaining point turns on the claim to make deductions in respect of the repairs to the vessel. This clearly must be limited to the cost of any repairs done in consequence of the promise in the agreement for sale to the Italian purchaser. I think such costs should be deducted if it could be proved that they were incurred after and in pursuance of the agreement for sale. But I agree with the finding of the learned registrar that no such proof has been given, and I have no doubt that the repairs were practically completed before the agreement for sale.

I am of opinion, therefore, that the only deduction to be allowed is the claim for brokerage, and the account must be reformed accordingly. The plaintiffs, of course, cannot have more than the amount of their mortgages and interest. I think that the plaintiffs are entitled to the costs of the action, of the reference before the registrar, and of these objections.

LIQUIDATION ESTATES PURCHASE CO. v. WILLOUGHBY AND OTHERS. (a.)

Mortgage—Assignment of fund—Notice—Purchase of mortgaged property—Payment off of incumbrance—Intention to keep alive.

Where a person in possession of a fund on which others have charges has received notice of an assignment of his rights by one of the persons entitled to a charge, and nevertheless makes payments to the assignor, the rights of the several persons entitled to the charge, to what remains of the fund, cannot in any way be affected by such payments.

Where neither the deed nor the circumstances under which an assignment is executed shew an intention to extinguish an incumbrance paid off, such incumbrance will not merge, but be considered as still existing.

This was an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (Lindley and A. L. Smith, L.JJ., Kay, L.J., dissenting), 44 W. R. 612, [1896] 1 Ch. 726.

The facts are set out in Lord Herschell's judgment, and in the report in the court below.

Swinfen Eady, Q.C., and Dauney (Edward Ford with them), for the appellants.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and Vernon Smith, Q.C. (W. C. Druce with them), for the respondents.

Thorn v. Cann, [1895] A. C. 11, 43 W. R. Dig. 121; Toulmin v. Steere, 3 Mer. 210; Adams v. Angell, 25 W. R. 139, 5 Ch. D. 634; and Shaw v. Foster, 20 W. R. 907, L. R. 5 H. L. 321, were referred to.

The House took time for consideration.

EARL OF HALSBURY, L.C.—The facts out of which this appeal arises may be very simply stated. The business and assets of a mercantile firm were for sale in the year 1888 and a Mr. Walker had procured the sale to himself of the business and assets for the sum of £502,000. He was, however, under the obligation of bringing into court the sum of £25,000. This he did not possess, and accordingly he procured the assistance of Lord Henry Paulet, who advanced £9,000; Sir John Willoughby, who advanced £10,000, and Mr. Arthur Kennedy, who advanced £6,000. This £25,000 was advanced under a bargain, among other things that the lenders should be repaid their advances rateably together with certain other advantages in proportion to the advances. The whole arrangement assumed that Walker was to manage the whole adventure and to be the recipient of the money paid and to distribute it in pursuance of the agreement when obtained.

Three months after the date of this agreement, Kennedy, who had advanced £6,000, charged his interest in the agreement to one Norton for the sum of £6,200. Of this charge Walker received due notice, and at the beginning of the following year Walker succeeded in re-selling the property for £850,000. In the April following Walker, notwithstanding Norton's notice, thought proper to hand over to Kennedy £5,122 and conveyed property to him which is assumed to be worth £5,000. I do not understand it to be denied that this payment, or, to speak more accurately, this handing over to Kennedy of what Walker had received, notwithstanding his knowledge of Norton's charge, was a breach of Walker's duty—something he had no right to do—and for which he had neither received any authority from Norton, and of which, indeed, Norton had no knowledge.

I desire to treat this part of the case as entirely independent of questions which arise upon further arrangements by Kennedy a year afterwards. But, stopping at this point, I am unable to understand in what way Walker's improper use of his possession of the property realized by the re-sale can effect Norton's rights or any person claiming under Norton. If instead of handing it over to Kennedy he had been robbed of it and all that remained of the property was insufficient to pay all the persons having rights under it why should Kennedy's assignee be in a less favourable position for receiving his proportionate amount because the whole fund had been diminished by the unlawful act of the robber? Can it make any difference that Walker in defiance of his duty thought proper to divert a certain sum of money from the gross fund in favour of Kennedy at a time when to his knowledge Kennedy had no right to receive it? What Norton, in right of Kennedy's previous rights, was entitled to was the amount of his debts from Kennedy; and why Norton should be selected as the victim of a loss to which he in no way contributed I am unable to understand.

Lindley, L.J., uses the phrase that he did not understand why Norton's loss should be thrown on the other adventurers. It appears to me that the words "Norton's loss" involve the fallacious assumption that in some way or another the share which had once belonged to Kennedy, and which by the hypothesis at the time of the handing over to Kennedy no longer belonged to him, must be so ear-marked as already Norton's that it becomes Norton's loss; but this, I think, is erroneous. If the whole fund created has been pro tanto diminished by an unlawful act of the person who by the agreement of all the parties was the custodian of the money, and the person through whose hands it was to be distributed, it appears to me that the observation to which I have referred might be retorted and it might with propriety be asked: Why should the part of the loss which was a loss to the whole fund be appropriated to one particular adventurer or the assignee of that adventurer? No one has ever yet explained what Norton did or what Norton omitted to do which made him more responsible to a loss of any part of the fund than any other one of the adventurers, and I am therefore of opinion that on this part of the case the judgment of the majority of the court below is erroneous.

So far, although I respectfully dissent from the conclusion, I understand the argument. The money and property handed over to Kennedy are assumed to be payments to Kennedy which he had a right to receive, and by that process Norton's claims were pro tanto defeated. I fear that with respect to the remaining part of the case I have some difficulty in understanding the ground of the decision. Kennedy, in 1890, executed a deed assigning to Lord Windsor whatever he was entitled to under the original bargain of 1888. As I have already said, I think he was entitled to nothing at the date of that assignment except what remained to him after discharging the debt due to Norton. By a subsequent deed through the medium of a company called the Capital and Finance Company (Limited) the present appellants purchased Lord Windsor's interest and Norton's interest under the original bargain of 1888. Lord Windsor took and could only take from Kennedy what Kennedy had left after his assignment to Norton. But the appellant company purchased for £1,000 Norton's interest which had been created by Kennedy on the 21st of September, 1888. Some litigation had arisen in which Norton's rights were held not to be capable of being enforced, and accordingly this action was brought to enforce those rights against the funds that had been deposited in court, the practical question in the cause being whether, in taking the account of what was due to Norton, the moneys and property handed over to Kennedy could be taken into account as being payment of Norton's claim.

I am unable to follow the reasoning for one or two grounds. In the first place, the thing assigned and of which title was conveyed to Lord Windsor was not the whole sum, and could not have been the whole sum which was due to Kennedy under the original bargain but only so much of it as remained after providing for £6,200 due to Norton. The thing assigned by Norton was that original sum, and I am unable to follow what merger is supposed to arise when Norton sold one sum of money, or the right to it, and Lord Windsor sold another sum of money, or the right to it. So far as the deed itself is concerned, I can see no indication of anything but an intention of two different vendors to sell two different things to the same vendee. Nor am I quite certain that I understand what is meant by extinguishing Norton's interest, or how, if such a thing could be done, there is any indication of any intention to do it. Norton's title to what he originally got seems to me to be untouched by anything disclosed in the course of the narrative. He has sold that interest to the appellant company for £1,000, and it appears to me therefore that the appellants are entitled to a decree for that interest, whatever that may be; and in arriving at that amount it is wholly impossible to treat the moneys handed over to Kennedy as moneys paid to Norton.

I am therefore of opinion that the judgment of the court below ought to be reversed and the account taken upon the basis I have described—namely, that up to the amount which is due to Norton the appellant company are entitled to obtain their proportionate amounts of what is due under the bargain of 1888; and I move your lordships accordingly. The respondents, of course, must pay the costs both here and below.

My noble and learned friend, Lord Shand, who is not able to be present to-day, asks me to say that he concurs.

Lord HERSCHELL.—In the year 1888 Edward Joshua Walker had contracted to purchase the business and assets of the firm of Walkers, Parker, & Co. for the sum of £502,000, and was required to pay into court a deposit of £25,000 on account of such purchase.

By an agreement made on the 20th of June, 1888, between E. J. Walker of the one part, and Lord Henry Paulet, Sir John Willoughby, and Arthur Kennedy of the other part, E. J. Walker charged all his present and future interest in his purchase contract with the payment of the moneys subscribed by the persons named, and the bonuses thereon. and it was further provided that the subscribers should, as between themselves, rank rateably and pari passu as against the property thereby charged for the sum subscribed by them respectively and the bonuses thereon. The sum of £25 000 required for the deposit was paid by the subscribers upon the terms of the agreement, and was applied in payment of the deposit. The amount paid by Kennedy was £6,000, in respect of which he became entitled to the benefit of the agreement of the 20th of June, as a security for the repayment of that sum with a bonus of equal amount, making together £12,000.

The amount subscribed by Sir John Willoughby was £10,000, and by Lord Henry Paulet £9,000. The agreement provided that nothing therein contained should render E. J. Walker personally liable to repay to the subscribers the sum of £25,000 or the bonus thereon, and further, that it should not be in his power to resell the business and property referred to in the agreement otherwise than with the consent of the subscribers, provided that such consent should not be withheld if E. J. Walker could obtain the sum of £800,000, nor should it be competent for the subscribers to compel him to sell the business and property for a less sum than £650,000.

On the 21st of September, 1888, by an agreement of that date, Kennedy charged all his interest under the agreement referred to and the money and bonuses thereby secured with the payment to John Norton of sums amounting altogether to £6,200, and the agreement recited that in respect of a portion of that sum John Norton had other securities. Notice in writing of this charge was on the 24th of October, 1888, duly given to E. J. Walker, and acknowledged by him.

In the month of January, 1889, E. J. Walker sold the greater part of the property which he had contracted to purchase from the firm of Walkers, Parker, & Co., to a company called Walkers, Parker, & Co. (Limited), for the sum of £850,000, payable as to £550,000 in cash and as to £300,000 in shares of the Walker company of £10 each fully paid up.

In April, 1889, £5,122 was paid to Kennedy by the Walker company by the direction of E. J. Walker, and in June, 1890, certain property at Gillt, in Wales, of the value of £5,000, included in the original purchase, was conveyed to Kennedy. This payment and conveyance must be taken, as both courts below have held, to have been made and accepted without the knowledge and concurrence of Norton.

By a deed dated the 7th of August, 1890, Kennedy assigned all moneys receivable or recoverable by him under the agreement of the 20th of June, 1888, to Lord Windsor, upon certain trusts therein declared for securing the payment of all moneys then owing to him by Kennedy.

By two other deeds, dated the 20th of December, 1890, and the 18th of June, 1891, all the interest of Kennedy under the agreement of June, 1888, and the benefit of the deed of the 7th of August, 1890, became vested in Robert Forrest upon trust to apply all moneys received or realized from the property comprised in the agreement in payment of all moneys then owing by Kennedy to Lord Windsor, and to pay any surplus to Kennedy.

I come now to the deed, as to the effect of which the controversy between the parties has arisen. It was made between Forrest of the first part, Norton of the second part, Lord Windsor of the third part, the Capital Finance Co. of the fourth part, and the appellant company of the fifth part. It recited a contract for sale to the Capital Finance Co., at the price of £6,000 of certain property, including all the interest of Lord Windsor or of Norton in the premises comprised in and charged by the agreement of the 20th of June, 1888, and that this contract so far as regarded Norton's rights was entered into by Lord Windsor with his privity and approbation, and upon the terms that he should receive £1,000, part of the purchase-money of £6,000. It further recited a contract of sub-purchase by the appellant company from the Capital Finance Co. The deed witnessed that John Norton, "at the request of Lord Windsor, and in respect of his rights, powers, benefits, and interests under the said agreement of the 21st of September, 1888, and as mortgagee" thereby assigned and Lord Windsor and Forrest also assigned "all the estate and interest of the said Lord Windsor, John Norton, or Robert Forrest of and in the interest formerly of the said Arthur John Clarke Kennedy in and under the said agreement of the 20th of June, 1888, and the moneys and bonuses thereby secured to hold the same unto the said Liquidation Estates Purchase Co. (Limited) absolutely." It was declared by the deed that if Norton and Lord Windsor or either of them had a power of sale over the premises the deed should operate as a conveyance upon a sale in exercise of such power.

Before discussing the terms of this deed it will be convenient to state the circumstances under which this action has been brought. The respondent, Sir John Willoughby, in June, 1889, instituted an action against Lord Henry Paulet, Kennedy, and others to realize his security under the agreement of the 20th of June, 1888. John Norton was not a party to that action. Certain funds having been brought into court representing the proceeds of the property charged by the agreement, a distribution of such funds was ordered upon the footing of Kennedy having already received the sum of £10,122 on account of his share. Further sums were subsequently brought into court and the appellants, who until that time had had no notice of the action, obtained leave to attend the proceedings. The respondent, Sir John Willoughby, and the persons claiming under Lord Henry Paulet contended that such further funds belonged to them inasmuch as they had not received an amount equal to that received by Kennedy, if he were bound to bring into account the sum of £10,122.

It being considered incompetent for the appellants to enforce their rights as transferees of Norton's security in that action, the present action was instituted and the defendants in this action were enjoined from obtaining the transfer or payment of the funds in Willoughby v. Paulet until this action could be disposed of.

At the trial of the action North, J., came to a conclusion adverse to the appellants, and this judgment was affirmed by a majority of the Court of Appeal, Kay, L.J., dissenting.

In delivering the judgment of the majority of the court Lindley, L.J., said: "Why the other lenders are to suffer by reason of Walker's wrongful payments to Kennedy after notice of Norton's charge is by no means obvious. . . . I fail to understand how Norton could as against the other lenders claim more of the fund than Kennedy's share of it, after giving credit for the payments made to him. The other lenders had no notice of Norton's security, nor could they have prevented Walker from paying Kennedy. Under these circumstances the plaintiffs' contention that Norton had any such right as they allege does not commend itself to our sense of justice, nor to our notions of equity." Although the judgment of the Lords Justices was not founded on this point it is necessary in the view which I take of the case to deal with it, and the more so as it seems to me not to have been without its influence upon the Lords Justices when disposing of the other part of the case.

I find myself quite unable, with all deference, to concur with the view indicated by the Lords Justices in the part of the judgment which I have quoted. I do not understand what is meant by saying that Norton was not entitled to throw upon the other lenders any part of the loss sustained by him by reason of Walker's wrongful payments to Kennedy. Kennedy having assigned his interest to Norton and Norton having given notice of this assignment to Walker, any payment subsequently made by him to Kennedy could, as it seems to me, have no more effect as against Norton than if it had been made to a stranger. In that case I do not suppose that anyone would contend that such a payment could affect Norton or diminish in the least the sum which he was entitled to claim as his share of the payments to be made out of the purchase-money received by Walker. That sum was determined by the assignment by Kennedy to Norton of his entire charge upon the purchase-money as a security for £6,200. If any portion of the money charged was employed by Walker otherwise than in accordance with the rights which Norton or the lenders or their assignees possessed I fail to see how this can affect the respective claims of Norton and the other lenders. The notion that Norton's rights could be affected because a payment was wrongfully made to his mortgagor' does not appear to me to rest on any sound foundation. I can see nothing unjust or inequitable in holding that where a person in possession of a fund on which others have charges has received notice of an assignment of his rights by one of the persons entitled to a charge, and nevertheless makes payments to the assignor, the rights of the several persons entitled to the charge to what remains of the fund cannot in any way be affected by such payments. Indeed it seems to me that it would be quite unreasonable that the assignee of a charge who has given notice of the assignment should be held affected by transactions taking place behind his back with the assignor. To speak of Norton throwing on the other lenders the loss sustained by him by reason of Walker's wrongful payments assumes that the loss was Norton's. It is here that I differ. I do not think that it was, for I do not see how an assignee can be made responsible for a wrongful act of the assignor after notice of the assignment has been given.

Before considering the terms of the deed of the 17th of March, 1893, it will be well to point out what was the interest originally vested in Kennedy by the agreement of the 20th of June, 1888, and what were the rights which Norton possessed at the time of the execution of the deed which has to be construed, and also what were the rights which Lord Windsor and Forrest acquired under the assignment by Kennedy. I think this aspect of the case has a material bearing upon the construction of the deed, and has been somewhat lost sight of in the judgment of the Lords Justices. The right which Kennedy acquired by the original agreement was to receive £12,000 out of the surplus of the purchase-money coming to E. J. Walker beyond what was necessary to satisfy the original vendors. By the assignment to Norton he acquired this right to the extent of £6,200 or so much of that sum as from time to time remained unpaid. This was the right which he possessed when he executed the deed of March, 1893. For the reasons I have given I think his right was wholly unaffected by the payments wrongfully made to Kennedy. Lord Windsor, on the other hand, took from Kennedy by assignment on the 7th of August, 1890, all the moneys then receivable or recoverable by him under the original agreement. Kennedy having at that time received the £10,122 already referred to, the right which Lord Windsor acquired from Kennedy's assignment obviously extended only to such sums as Kennedy was entitled to receive from the fund charged after taking into account a receipt by him of £10,122.

Bearing in mind then that these were the respective rights of the parties to the deed who concurred in assigning their rights to the appellant company I pass to a consideration of the provisions of the deed. The terms of the assignment by Norton are unambiguous. In respect of his rights, powers, benefits, and interest under the agreement of the 21st of September, 1888, and as mortgagee he assigns to the appellants all his estate and interest of and in the interest formerly of Kennedy in or under the agreement of the 20th of June, 1888, and the moneys and bonuses thereby secured. These words are manifestly apt to vest in the appellant company the right which Norton then possessed, which was, as I have pointed out, to receive out of the fund charged so much as was necessary to satisfy the debt then due to Norton up to £6,200 pari passu with the other lenders under the original agreement, on the basis of no part of Kennedy's claim under it having been at that time satisfied. This is not denied. But the majority of the Lords Justices held that the interest transferred by Norton was transferred in order to be extinguished, so that the appellant company might obtain Kennedy's interest in the security of June, 1888, free from incumbrances. The Lords Justices thought that the intention of the parties to extinguish Norton's interest was to be found in the terms of the deed, and the circumstances under which it was executed, and they rested their decision on the law laid down by Jessel, M.R., in Adams v. Angell.

In that case the learned judge stated the effect of the doctrine originally enunciated in Toulmin v. Steere, that where the purchaser of an estate pays off an incumbrance upon it, the incumbrance paid off is merged unless the contrary intention appears, and he pointed out its application of the case of an owner in fee or in tail, or of a purchaser. It is to be observed that the doctrine referred to is founded on the principle of merger. The assignment of an incumbrance to an owner or purchaser of an estate does not transfer any new estate, it only frees from the incumbrance an estate already vested in him, or about to be vested in him by conveyance. Jessel, M.R., points out, the assignment to a purchaser of an estate of an equitable charge upon it really passes nothing. It may nevertheless be treated as remaining on foot for the purpose of protecting the purchaser against mesne incumbrances.

In view of the nature of the interests assigned by Norton and Lord Windsor respectively, to which I have called attention, I find it difficult to understand how the doctrine of merger, on which Toulmin v. Steere rested, can have any application to the present case. Assuming the appellant company to be purchasers from Lord Windsor, what was the nature of the so-called "property" which they purchased? It could be no more than this: The right which Kennedy possessed on the 7th of August, 1890, under the agreement of June, 1888. What was vested in Norton, and what he assigned was the right which Kennedy possessed on the 21st of September, 1888, under the agreement just referred to, to the amount of the debt due to Norton. How could the right which Norton thus assigned merge in what the appellants bought from Lord Windsor? It seems to me that it can only be necessary to show an intention to keep alive that which would otherwise cease to exist by reason of merger. In any other case, the assignment of itself vests the right assigned in the assignee, and it remains in him unextinguished. But, further, I am unable to see any ground for the conclusion that Norton's interest was transferred in order to be extinguished. There is, in my opinion, nothing on the face of the deed, or in the nature of the transaction, to show such an intention. If this had been the intention, I think, having regard to the nature of the interests possessed by the parties to the conveyance, the instrument would have been differently framed. Reliance was placed by the majority of the judges in the court below on what was called "the speculative character of Norton's claim against the other lenders," and in another part of the judgment it was said that "the opportunity of making a very doubtful claim against third parties" was not such a benefit as to give rise to the presumption of an intention to keep alive Norton's charge. I think these expressions indicate an erroneous view of the nature of Norton's right. In my opinion no claim of Norton against third parties, by which is meant the other lenders, is in question. Nor do I think his rights are open to any doubt. He was entitled to claim payment to the amount due to him out of the fund in Walker's hands in respect of Kennedy's original charge pari passu with the other lenders who had a charge on that fund. If a part of this fund had been improperly applied by Walker, and the fund thus diminished, Norton was entitled, in virtue of the assignment of Kennedy, to a rateable proportion of what remained pari passu with the other lenders. He was no more affected by its improper application than they were, and there is no more reason in point of law, or, as it seems to me, in point of justice or equity either, why the loss should fall on him rather than on them. For these reasons I am unable to see any ground for holding that the assignment to the appellant company by Norton of all his rights in Kennedy's interest under the agreement of the 20th of June, 1888, and the moneys and bonuses thereby secured, did not vest that entire interest in them and give them precisely the rights which he possessed at the time of the conveyance. If it were necessary to hold that Norton's right was kept alive under the conveyance of 1893, there appears to me ample reason for so holding, inasmuch as it would be obviously for the benefit of the appellant company to keep alive Norton's interest so that they might not be affected by any transactions of Kennedy, subsequent to his assignment to Norton, and prior to his assignment to Lord Windsor.

For these reasons I think the judgment of the court below ought to be reversed, and that the order made by North, J., on the 10th of July, 1895, should be varied by stating that the payments to Kennedy are not to be taken into account in ascertaining the amounts to which the plaintiffs are entitled in respect of Kennedy's interest under the agreement of the 20th of June, 1888, until the plaintiffs have received an amount equal to the sum which was on the 17th of March, 1893, due to Norton. I think the respondents must pay the costs in this House and in the courts below.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I am of the same opinion. In support of the judgment under appeal the respondents relied upon two grounds. Either of the two, if established, would serve to defeat the appellants' claim. In the first place they contended that Norton had not given due notice of the equitable assignment in his favour, and that consequently, as against them, Norton's assignees could not be heard to say that the payment to Kennedy was an improper payment. In the second place they argued that the deed of the 17th of March, 1893, by which Norton assigned his interest to the appellants, destroyed that interest and extinguished Norton's security altogether. In both the courts below the first ground was rejected; in both the second was held good, though Kay, L.J., dissented.

On the first point it is not necessary to say much. The assignment to Norton by Kennedy of the moneys coming to him from Walker was dated the 21st of September, 1888. It is not disputed that notice of the assignment was given to Walker on the 24th of October following. What more ought Norton to have done? It was said that notice might have been given to the company, who were the ultimate purchasers, and who were bound to pay Walker the balance of their purchase-money after satisfying the original vendors. But such a notice would not have prevented the company paying Walker what was due to him. It would not have made Norton's position more secure in the event of the company paying Walker, nor would it have thrown any liability on the company in the event of Walker misapplying the money. It might or might not have led the company to hold their hand for a time in order to give Norton an opportunity of intervening by some application to the court if he were so advised. But everybody concerned was anxious that the money should come to Walker's hands. Everybody looked to Walker as the paymaster. Then it was said that notice might have been given to Kennedy's associates, the other two subscribers. I do not say that under the circumstances that might not have been a prudent precaution. It might perhaps have prevented the particular misapplication of the fund which is now complained of. I am not sure that it would. But Norton was not bound to give such a notice. By his notice to Walker he did all that lay in his power to perfect his title, to use a common phrase. He did what he could to lay hold of the fund, and to convert Walker into a trustee for him of Kennedy's share to the extent of his interest therein. Payment to Kennedy after that notice was a payment which Norton, so long as he had an interest in the fund, was not bound to recognize. As far as he was concerned it was no payment at all. Walker might just as well have given the money to an utter stranger, or thrown it into the sea. The appellants have obtained an assignment of Norton's rights and interest. If they have not renounced those rights or destroyed that interest, surely they are entitled to take up the position which Norton would have occupied and to say what Norton might have said. They are not asking the other subscribers or those who derive title from them to refund. They only say, "You have received so much on account. We have received nothing as yet. Before you receive anything more, this inequality must be redressed. To the extent of our interest derived from Norton we are entitled to be paid rateably and pari passu." That was the agreement between the subscribers. I cannot see anything unjust or inequitable in the conduct of the appellants. They are merely endeavouring to enforce a bargain in which they have obtained a substantial interest. If the appellants are right in their facts, Walker as well as Kennedy wronged Norton and wronged the respondents too. The respondents were innocent of all blame; so was Norton; so are the appellants. There is no reason that I can see for altering the original arrangement to the advantage or detriment of the one party or of the other.

So much for the first point. I find more difficulty in dealing with the second, because I am not quite sure that I follow the reasoning on which the judgment of the Court of Appeal is founded. The judgment begins by stating the facts and circumstances which led up to the deed of assignment of March, 1893. Among other things, it refers to three instruments, Lord Windsor's title-deeds. "Under these instruments," says the Master of Rolls, "Forrest"—Forrest was trustee for Lord Windsor—"had a power of sale." I may observe in passing that all the judges in the Court of Appeal, following, I think, a statement by North, J., who, however, guards himself by saying that the deed had not been produced, take for granted that there was a power of sale in Lord Windsor's securities, and the argument at the bar proceeded on that assumption. I may also note that the deed of the 18th of June, 1891, which was one of Lord Windsor's three deeds, seems to have nothing to do with the interest assigned by Lord Windsor or Forrest to the appellants. The reference to it in the deed of the 17th of March, 1893, is, I think, a mistake.

After stating the facts the judgment under appeal goes on to deal with some of the more recent cases about the doctrines of equity as to the merger of securities. Those doctrines, however, appear to me to have little or no bearing on the question at issue. And then the following passage occurs: "The speculative character of Norton's claim against the other lenders, the absence of all allusion to the existence of any such claim, the absence of any assignment of his debt, the ignorance we are in even now of the amount due to him (for it is admitted that £6,200 is not), the recital of the agreement with Lord Windsor, and lastly, the unusual clauses which follow the habendum, lead us to the conclusion that it was intended to extinguish Norton's claim and not to keep it alive except in the event of the plaintiff's failing to obtain a good title under a valid power of sale. In that event, no doubt, as Kennedy would have a right to redeem, both Norton's and Lord Windsor's charges would have to be treated as subsisting. What the plaintiffs, however, wanted was to purchase Kennedy's interest free from incumbrances under a power of sale. The recitals show that the real transaction was a sale by Lord Windsor under his power; but £1,000 of the purchase-money was to be paid to Norton to get rid of his claim."

Now, I cannot help thinking that in dealing with the complicated facts before them the court has fallen into an error, an error which goes to the root of their decision. The charge in favour of Lord Windsor was in the form of a trust for realization and sale. It contains an assignment of the mortgaged property with a power of attorney in favour of the assignee. The trust is to receive the moneys receivable by Kennedy under the agreement of the 20th of June, 1888, and to receive and sell, or otherwise convert into money, all stocks, shares, and other things receivable or recoverable by Kennedy under that agreement. That, no doubt, is an authority to sell for the purpose of realization everything received or recovered under the agreement of June, 1888, not at the time in the shape of money. But it is not, as it seems to me, a power for the mortgagee to sell the mortgaged property before it comes into his hands. Lord Windsor could, of course, sell his security in any way he chose for any consideration he pleased, great or small, but without the mortgagor's concurrence such a sale as against the mortgagor would only be a transfer of the security, and not, as it is treated in the judgment, and as it was treated at the bar, a sale under a mortgagee's power of sale. This objection, if it is well founded, seems to me to dispose of the judgment of the Court of Appeal, or rather to convert it into a decision in favour of the appellants. But I must say I should have thought the judgment erroneous if Lord Windsor's securities had contained a special power of sale. "There is no doubt," says the Master of the Rolls in the judgment under appeal, "that this deed" (that is, the deed of March, 1893) "was intended to transfer to the plaintiffs all Norton's interest in the security of June, 1888, but the question is whether the interest so transferred was transferred in order to be extinguished so that the plaintiffs might obtain Kennedy's interest in the security of June, 1888, free from incumbrances, or whether Norton's interest was so transferred as to enable the plaintiffs to treat it as still subsisting so as to confer upon them rights against third parties which Lord Windsor and Forrest could not confer. The answer to this question depends upon the intention of the parties at the time, and that intention must be found from the terms of the deed and the circumstances under which it was executed."

To that proposition, as it seems to me, no exception can be taken. But what is the answer which the deed and the surrounding circumstances suggest? The best answer that can be given is, I think, to be found in the judgment of James, L.J., in a well-known case (Locking v. Parker, 21 W. R. 113, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 30). One Lysimachus Parker had been for forty years in possession of a mortgaged estate without any acknowledgment of the mortgagor's title. The mortgage was in fee and in the form of a trust for sale. After the mortgagor's death his devisees brought a suit for the execution of the trusts contained in the mortgage deed. The defence was twofold—(1) the transaction was nothing more than a mortgage; and (2) the defendant was entitled to the protection of two old mortgage terms which had not been surrendered when the mortgage in fee was executed. Lord Romilly, M.R., rejected both grounds of defence; he held that there was a trust which was an answer to the Statute of Limitations, and also that the terms had ceased to exist though not formally surrendered. They were, he said, "superseded by the provisions" of the mortgage in fee "which were inconsistent with the subsistence of those terms." The judgment, however, was reversed on both points in the Court of Appeal. As to the latter point, "It is quite clear," said James, L.J., "that in this deed there is no express surrender of the terms. They are not referred to as intended to be surrendered, and the gentleman who had the terms in him did not concur in conveying so as to merge them in the inheritance. It has been urged, however, that there is an implied surrender of them by virtue of the provisions of the deed. Now, it is always to be borne in mind that when the court implies from a deed anything that is not expressed in it, this is done for the purpose of getting rid of some technicality which interferes with what is obviously the plain intent and meaning of the parties to the transaction. Of course if we could see from the deed itself that it was the intention of the parties that the earlier securities should not be kept on foot we might give effect to that intention. To my mind Lysimachus

Parker would have been demented if he had surrendered his terms, and so lost the benefit of his old securities, all of which are referred to in this deed without any expression of an intention to merge. I am of opinion, therefore, that there was no surrender or merging of the existing terms, and that there was nothing in the deed which deprived the mortgagee under the earlier deed of his rights under them."

If in that case the court would have held Lysimachus Parker demented to have thrown away the benefit of his old securities, what would you say of the conduct of the appellants if they had deprived themselves of the advantage and protection of Norton's charge? What words would have adequately described such folly? Observe what they knew. They knew that the fund was £12,000 originally. So far as appears there were only two charges upon it, separated by an interval of nearly two years. Norton was content to take £1,000 for his security Lord Windsor asked no more for his though his debt was over £15,000. So that evidently somehow or other the fund had been melting away and there was all the more need for caution. They knew that charges of this sort rank according to priority of notice. For the deed recites the notice given by Norton with the particulars of its date and the acknowledgment of it by Walker—it is a separate recital apparently introduced for some purpose. Then the charge is duly assigned to the appellants. There was no reason for extinguishing it, there is no expression of any intention to extinguish it, and yet we are to presume that, without any reason, the appellants, who were paying £1,000 in hard cash, deliberately and intentionally threw their purchase away. I can understand the owner of an estate preferring to have it discharged from an incumbrance though the incumbrance be his own property, but I cannot understand a person entitled to several charges on a money fund, which must rank in priority according to date of notice, sweeping away the earlier charges and trusting to the last, though it might seem large enough to exhaust the fund and though there might be apparently nothing behind it.

Some stress was laid on the circumstance that Norton's debt is not assigned. There might, perhaps, be something in that point if the deed had contained an assignment of Lord Windsor's debt. There is no assignment of either the one or the other. They are both treated alike. I do not see why more weight should be given to the absence of an assignment in the one case than in the other. Some stress, too, was laid on the clauses at the end of the deed referring to the possible existence of a special power of sale in both or in one of the charges assigned. Those clauses are certainly unusual. I think they are nothing but a blunder. There was no power of sale in either charge. The draftsman of the deed does not seem to have thought there was really. There is no recital of any power of sale, nor do the assignors purport to assign under any power, nor is the assignment in the form which such a power would suggest. The assignment is only an assignment of the estate and interest of the incumbrancers. If the deed could operate as a conveyance under a power of sale in Norton's charge, the appellants would not be bound to bring into account the improper payments to Kennedy, so far as their interest derived from Norton is concerned. If it could operate as a conveyance on a sale under a power contained in Lord Windsor's charge, the sale could only take effect subject to the prior charge in favour of Norton, so that it would be just the same question over again. I do not think that these clauses have any bearing on the question at issue.

I am of opinion that the judgment under appeal must be reversed so far as it deprives the appellants of the benefit of Norton's charge, and I think that the respondents must pay the costs both here and below.

Lord MORRIS concurred.

Order appealed from reversed so far as it declared that the payments to Kennedy of £5,122 and £5,000 were good payments, with costs here and below: Cause remitted to the Chancery Division.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) — May 24, 25, 26; June 11.

In re PERKINS.
POYSER v. BEYFUS. (a.)

Lease—Assignment—Covenant to indemnify assignor—Bankruptcy of first assignee—Right to sue executors of deceased second assignee—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 20, 44, 50 (5), 56, 57, 168.

The lease of a house to A. contained a covenant that A. would pay rent and insure and perform other usual obligations. By deed A. subsequently assigned the lease to B., and B. subsequently assigned to C. Each assignment contained covenants by the assignees to perform the covenants contained in the original lease, and to indemnify the assignors. In June, 1895, C. died. On the 12*th of June,* 1897, B. was adjudicated a bankrupt, and D. was appointed his trustee. A. was called upon to pay, and did pay, the arrears of rent under the lease, and tendered a proof against B.'s estate for the amount actually paid and the estimated amount of his future liability under the lease. A compromise was then effected between A. and the trustee by a deed, whereby the trustee sold to A. the full benefit of the covenant on the part of C. in consideration of the sum of £5, and of his executing a release whereby A.'s proof against the estate of B. was withdrawn, and all claims and demands under or in respect of the covenants by B. with A. were released and discharged. Under this deed A. carried in a claim against C.'s estate for payment out of his assets of what A. had paid for rent and insurance and for future indemnity against liability under the covenants in the original lease.

Held, that the right of the trustee in bankruptcy to sue C. was property within the meaning of section 168 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and was assignable to A., and that the damages in an action by the trustee against C.'s executors would not be confined to the dividend payable to A. in respect of his proof against B.'s estate; and, (2) on the construction of the release, that, having regard to the terms of the deed and the release of B.'s estate, A. acquired a right to sue C.'s executors.

Appeal of the defendants from North, J.

By a lease dated the 5th of October 1891, a certain house was leased to the plaintiff for a term still unexpired, and by this lease the plaintiff covenanted to pay rent and to insure the house and perform certain other obligations usual in leases.

On the 8th of May, 1893, Poyser, the plaintiff, assigned this lease to Plaistowe, and on the 1st of April, 1895, Plaistowe assigned it to Perkins. Each of these assignments contained a covenant by the assignee with his assignor to pay the rent and perform the covenants reserved and contained in the lease of the 5th of October, 1891, and also to keep him, the assignor, indemnified against the same.

In June, 1895, Perkins died.

On the 12th of June, 1897, Plaistowe was adjudicated bankrupt, and Berry was appointed his trustee. The plaintiff Poyser was called on to pay, and did pay, the arrears of rent, which became due under the lease of the 5th of October, 1891, and he tendered a proof against Plaistowe's estate for £1,353, the amount paid by the plaintiff and the estimated amount of his liability under his covenants contained in such lease. Thereupon a compromise was agreed to between the plaintiff and the trustee in bankruptcy, and was carried out by a deed of the 31st of August, 1897, which gave rise to the present controversy. This deed was made between the trustee of the one part and the plaintiff of the other part. It recited the facts above stated, and then proceeded as follows: "Whereas the said Oscar Berry has, with the permission of the said committee of inspection, testified by a resolution passed at a meeting of the said committee of inspection, held the 31st day of August, 1897, at 8, Southwark-street, Borough, in the county of Surrey, and by way of compromise of the claim of the said E. J. Poyser against the estate of the said bankrupt, agreed to sell and dispose of to the said E. J. Poyser the full benefit of the said covenant on the part of the said G. F. Perkins with the rights and powers hereinafter assigned in consideration of the said E. J. Poyser paying to him the sum of £5, and executing such release as is hereinafter contained. Now this indenture witnesseth that, in pursuance of the said agreement and in consideration of the sum of £5 now paid by the said E. J. Poyser to the said Oscar Berry (the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged) and of the release hereinafter contained, the said O. Berry, as trustee, and with the permission testified as aforesaid of the said committee of inspection, doth hereby assign unto the said E. J. Poyser the full benefit of the covenants by the said G. F. Perkins with the said F. M. E. Plaistowe contained in the hereinafter recited indenture of the 1st of April, 1895, as aforesaid, with the right to recover and receive from the said G. F. Perkins, his heirs, executors, or administrators estate or effects, and to retain for the benefit of the said E. J. Poyser, his executors, administrators, and assigns all and every such damages, costs, or other sums of money, if any, and to enforce for the like benefit all such other relief by way of indemnity or otherwise as the said F. M. E. Plaistowe, his executors or administrators, but for his bankruptcy, or the said O. Berry or other the trustee for the time being in the bankruptcy might have been entitled now, or at any time or times hereafter to recover or to enforce for the benefit of the said F. M. E. Plaistowe or his estate for any breach or breaches committed or hereafter to be committed of the said covenants or any of them, or otherwise under or in respect of the liability of the said G. F. Perkins or his estate by virtue of such covenants or any of them, if these presents and the arrangement hereby entered into had not been executed or made and the right to bring, prosecute, carry, or compound, or release any action or proceeding for any such purpose, and all other rights, powers, privileges, and authorities which the said O. Berry, as such trustee, with such permission as aforesaid can lawfully transfer to the said E. J. Poyser in connection with the premises, to hold the premises unto the said E. J. Poyser, his executors, administrators, and assigns for his and their own benefit absolutely; and this indenture further witnesseth that in further pursuance of the said agreement and in consideration of the assignment hereinbefore contained the said E. J. Poyser hereby withdraws the said proof for the sum of £1,353 0s. 4d., and releases and discharges the estate of the said bankrupt and the said O. Berry as such trustee as aforesaid from all claims and demands under or in respect of the covenants by the said F. M. E. Plaistowe with the said E. J. Poyser contained in the hereinbefore recited indenture of the 8th of May, 1893, as aforesaid." Under this deed the plaintiff carried in a claim against Perkins's estate for payment out of his assets of what the plaintiff had paid for rent and insurance and for future indemnity against liability under the covenants contained in the lease of the 5th of October, 1891. It appeared that shortly after Plaistowe's bankruptcy Perkins's executors assigned the lease to a person named Jay, who, however, did not pay the rent or perform the covenants so as to relieve Perkins's estate from liability to Plaistowe, or, rather, to his trustee in bankruptcy.

The defendants were Perkins's executors, and they admitted assets.

North, J., made an order allowing the claim, and held the estate of Perkins, deceased, to be liable to the plaintiff in a sum of £215 4s. paid for rent and insurance, and to be liable to indemnify the plaintiff against future rent and insurance and damages for breaches of covenant contained in the lease.

The executors of Perkins appealed.

Everitt, Q.C., and Edward Ford, for the appellants.—A chose in action is assignable: Seear v. Lawson, 28 W. R. 929, 15 Ch. D. 426, 29 W. R. 45, 109, 16 Ch. D. 121; Gay v. Churchill, 37 W. R. 504, 40 Ch. D. 481. By section 50 (5) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, choses in action of the bankrupt shall be deemed to have been assigned to the trustee. Here the right of indemnity does not come within the definition of "property" in section 168 of the Act. It is merely a right to bring an action if something is not done. [LINDLEY, M.R., referred to Spark v. Heslop, 7 W. R. 312, 1 E. & B. 563.] The plaintiff could have proved in the bankruptcy for his indemnity: Hardy v. Fothergill, 37 W. R. 117, 13 App. Cas. 351. No right of action has arisen here, and even if Poyser had withdrawn his proof without any release, no damages could have been recovered by the trustee from Perkins.

They referred to the following cases: Carr v. Roberts, 5 B. & Ad. 78; Hill v. Smith, 12 M. & W. 618; Ashdown v. Ingamells, 5 Ex. D. 280, 28 W. R. Dig. 73; and In re Russell, Russell v. Shoolbred, 29 Ch. D. 254, 33 W. R. Dig. 170.

Vernon Smith, Q.C., and Wace, for the respondent.—The trustee in bankruptcy could have sued Perkins on his covenant. The fact that part of the consideration was a release is immaterial. The transaction, as a whole, must be looked at, and the covenantor is still liable on his covenant notwithstanding the release. The covenant was not merely a covenant to indemnify, it was a covenant to do certain things, such as pay rent and insurance. The covenant for indemnity does not control what preceded it: Saward v. Anstey, 2 Bing. 519; Lethbridge v. Mytton, 2 B. & Ad. 772; Carr v. Roberts. Poyser was to have whatever the trustee could recover from Perkins, and the whole document must be read together on that understanding. The clause cannot operate as an absolute release, and effect must be given to all its provisions: Heritage v. Paine, 2 Ch. D. 594, 24 W. R. Dig. 56. [LINDLEY, M.R., referred to Hodgson v. Wood, 2 H. & C. 649, 12 W. R. Dig. 44, 77, and Holmes v. Rhodes, 1 Bos. & P. E. 638.]

Cur. adv. vult.

June 11.—The judgment of the Court was delivered by

LINDLEY, M.R., who stated the facts as above, and continued: The appeal raises two questions—viz., (1) whether the rights vested by the Bankruptcy Act in Plaistowe's trustee could be assigned by him to the plaintiff; and (2) whether, having regard to the terms of the deed and the release of Plaistowe's estate, the plaintiff acquired any right to sue Perkins's executors. The first of these questions turns on the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. The material sections are 20, 44, 50 (clause 5), 56, 57, and 168, which defines "property." It is plain from sections 20, 44, 50 (clause 5), and 168, and from the decision in Hardy v. Fothergill that the plaintiff Poyser had a right of proof against Plaistowe's estate not only for the sums paid by the plaintiff for rent and fire insurance, but also in respect of Plaistowe's future liability under his own covenants with the plaintiff. It is also plain from sections 56 and 57 that it was competent for the trustee in bankruptcy to compromise the claim made by the plaintiff, and to assign to the plaintiff any assignable asset vested in the trustee upon the terms that the plaintiff should accept such asset in satisfaction of all demands against Plaistowe's remaining assets. It is also plain that the right of the trustees to sue Perkins upon Perkins's covenant was an asset—i.e., was property within the meaning of section 168, and was assignable to the plaintiff or to anyone else (see section 56 and Seear v. Lawson), and that the damages in an action by the trustee against Perkins's executors would not be confined to the dividend payable to the plaintiff in respect of his proof against Plaistowe's estate (see Cruse v. Paine). This disposes of the first ground of appeal. The second turns on the true effect of the release contained in the deed of August, 1897. If this release is to be construed as a release by the plaintiff of Plaistowe or of his estate from all liability under his covenants, then the effect will be to discharge Perkins's estate from all liability under his covenant to indemnify Plaistowe. A liability to indemnify against a liability which has no existence, and which can never arise, is a contradiction in terms. A distinction was attempted to be drawn between the covenant by Perkins to pay the rent and perform the covenant to insure on the one hand, and his covenant to indemnify Plaistowe on the other, and it was contended that although the release might extinguish all liability on the covenant to indemnify, it did not affect the covenant to pay the rent and to insure. Much time was spent in discussing these points and in examining such cases as Saward v. Anstey, Carr v. Roberts, and Ashdown v. Ingamells, and in considering the amount of damages which could be recovered if the distinction suggested could be drawn and had in fact to be made. But in the view we take of the true construction of the deed of the 31st of August, 1897, these questions do not arise. The release contained in the deed, although couched in very general terms, must, if possible, be so construed as not to defeat the object or purpose of the deed of which it forms part. The recitals and first witnessing part show that the release cannot be rationally construed as extending to all Plaistowe's estate, including the asset assigned to the plaintiff. The estate released must exclude that asset. Again, the claims and demands from which Plaistowe's estate is released cannot be rationally construed as all claims and demands in respect of Plaistowe's covenants. The claims and demands released must be confined to those against the released assets, and cannot be rationally held to include those the preservation of which is essential to the recovery by the plaintiff of the asset assigned to him, and which asset he is to take in satisfaction of all demands. In so construing the release the court is not departing from well-settled principles applicable to the construction of such documents. General words of release are always controlled by recitals and context which show that, unless the general words are restricted, the object and purpose of the document in which they occur must necessarily be frustrated. General words are always construed so as to give effect to, and not so as to destroy, the expressed intentions of those who use them. Good illustrations of this principle will be found in Payler v. Homersham, 4 M. & Sel. 423, and Lindo v. Lindo, 1 Beav. 496. In our opinion, therefore, the appeal fails on this ground also. It is to be observed that North, J., has merely given the plaintiff liberty to apply in respect of future breaches of covenant. He has not impounded assets to meet them, nor attempted to estimate damages in respect of them. The order is right both in substance and in form, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

HEAD v. GOULD. (a.)

Trustee—Breach of trust—Liability of retired trustees for breach committed by new trustees—Right of trustees to return of unauthorized investment on making good loss.

Retiring trustees cannot be held liable for a breach of trust by their successors unless the actual breach committed is not merely the outcome of the retirement and new appointment, but is contemplated by the retiring trustees when the retirement and new appointment takes place.

A trustee who makes an unauthorized investment is not entitled to a return of the investment on making good the loss to the trust estate as against a cestui que trust incompetent to assent to such investment.

By a settlement made on the marriage of Mr. Head (who died in 1881) and Mrs. Head property was settled on the wife and husband for their lives, with remainder to the children. There were now surviving three children, a son and daughter of age and a son an infant.

In December, 1893, Messrs. Houlditch and Clapp, then trustees of the marriage settlement, improperly applied £1,500, part of the trust funds, in paying off a mortgage debt due from Mrs. Head, then tenant for life of the settled estate, to a Mr. Jerred. This debt was secured by a mortgage of Mrs. Head's life interest and certain policies of assurance on her life, of which the trustees took a transfer. This transaction was effected at the request of Mrs. Head, who with her daughter, Miss Head, by a deed of indemnity of the 8th of December, 1893, covenanted to indemnify the trustees in respect thereof. Messrs.

(a.) Reported by C. C. HENSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Houlditch and Clapp were at this time also trustees of a settlement made in 1868, by which Mr. Head settled, inter alia, a house at Seaton, in Devon, known as No. 1, West Cliff-terrace, on Mrs. Head for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage.

By a deed of the 12th of November, 1894, Mrs. Head appointed a Mr. Gould, a solicitor's clerk, and Miss Head, who had recently attained twenty-one, trustees of the marriage settlement in place of Messrs. Houlditch and Clapp, who handed over to the new trustees, inter alia, the securities they had taken for the advance of £1,500. By another deed of the same date Messrs. Houlditch and Clapp appointed Gould and Miss Head trustees of the settlement of 1868, and the house No. 1, West Cliff-terrace, Seaton, was accordingly conveyed to the new trustees.

In 1895 and 1896 the new trustees surrendered the policies of assurance and sold the house at Seaton and dissipated the proceeds. This was an action brought by the infant child of the marriage by his next friend, to which the old trustees, the new trustees, and Mrs. Head were made defendants, asking (1) to have the trusts of the two settlements carried into effect; (2) for a declaration that the old trustees were jointly and severally liable for, and might be decreed to make good, all loss occasioned by their advancing the £1,500; (3) for a declaration that all the defendants might be declared liable for, and be decreed to make good, the moneys which had arisen from the sale of the house at Seaton; and also for accounts, the appointment of new trustees, and in the interim for a receiver. The principal question which arose was whether the old trustees could be held liable for the breach of trust committed by the new trustees in selling the house at Seaton.

It was alleged for the plaintiff that Miss Head and Gould were not fit persons to be appointed trustees. Miss Head was only just twenty-one, and it was said was under the influence of her mother, while Gould was a person of no means, and a letter of his of the 4th of November, 1894, to Messrs. Clapp and Houlditch urging them to misapply £10 odd of the trust funds then in their hands to relieve Mrs. Head's immediate necessities was relied on as showing that he was not a proper person to appoint. Two letters of Mr. Clapp's to Mrs. Head were also relied on for the plaintiff as tending to show that a breach of trust was in contemplation on the retirement of the old trustees. The first letter, in reply to a letter of Mrs. Head suggesting the raising of money out of Miss Head's share of the house at Seaton when sold, dated the 12th of September, 1894, was as follows: "Dear Mrs. Head,— . . . You must remember that any sale of the Seaton houses would so reduce your life interest as to prevent enough being forthcoming to meet the policy premiums, and to this we cannot consent. The only way we can assist you is by handing over the trust to others, as we are most desirous of doing. . . .—Yours, C. R. M. Clapp." The other letter, in reply to a letter of Mrs. Head's asking Mr. Clapp to show how a change of trustees would enable certain debts to be paid off, dated the 14th of September, 1894, was as follows: "Dear Mrs. Head,—By getting new trustees to help you in the way you ask us to do—advance your daughter more money—we decline the risk and responsibility. Others may be induced to accept it and to assist you. . . .—C. R. M. Clapp."

Messrs. Houlditch and Clapp, by their defence, alleged that Miss Head and Gould were proper persons to be appointed trustees; that Miss Head had received her third share of the settlement funds and was not beneficially interested, and that she was a woman of business capacity; and that with respect to Gould it was believed by them from inquiries made that his professional position was satisfactory. They denied that they were parties to any scheme by which in order to commit a breach of trust new trustees were to be appointed. The defendant Gould did not appear, and his defence had been ordered to be struck out. There were also two third-party notices, one by Miss Head, claiming to be indemnified by Gould against all liability on the ground that the loss (if any) was occasioned entirely by his acts and defaults, and that he assumed to act as solicitor to the trust estates and as sole trustee thereof, and exercised exclusive control thereof, and that whatever was done by Miss Head in connection with the trusts was at his direction and in reliance on his advice. The other third-party notice was by Messrs. Houlditch and Clapp, who claimed to be indemnified by Gould and Miss Head in respect of the trusts on the ground that the loss (if any) of the trust funds occurred after their retirement from the position of trustees, and were caused by Gould and Miss Head; they also claimed to be indemnified by Mrs. Head and Miss Head under the deed of indemnity of the 8th of October, 1893, with respect to the £1,500.

P. O. Lawrence, Q.C., and Methold, for the plaintiff.—As to the liability of the old trustees for the breach of trust committed by the new trustees, the authorities are: Webster v. Le Hunt, 8 W. R. 534, and on appeal 9 ib. 918; Palairet v. Carew, 11 W. R. 449, 32 Beav. 564, 568; Clark v. Hoskins, 15 W. R. 1161, 36 L. J. Ch. 689, and on appeal 16 W. R. 1159, 37 L. J. Ch. 561; Lewin on Trusts, 9th ed., p. 752.

Warrington, Q.C., and Rowden, for Houlditch and Clapp.—If we are held liable for the loss of the £1,500 we are entitled to the return of the securities on which we advanced it: In re Salmon, Priest v. Uppleby, 38 W. R. 150, 42 Ch. D. 351. We are not liable for the breach of trust committed by the new trustees.

They also referred to the authorities above mentioned.

G. M. Gover, for Mrs. and Miss Head.—Under the circumstances the court will not impound Mrs. Head's interest under the powers given it by section 45 of the Trustee Act, 1893. Miss Head asks for relief under the Judicial Trustee Act, 1896, s. 3. She ought to be indemnified by Gould: In re Turner, Barker v. Ivimey, 45 W. R. 495, [1897] 1 Ch. 536.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 24.—KEKEWICH, J.—It is beyond dispute and it is in truth not disputed that breaches of trust have been committed alike by the former and present trustees of the settlements of 1865 and 1868, and there is too much reason to fear that the infant plaintiff will be disappointed in a large measure of the provision intended to be made for him by those settlements. The main question falling for decision is to what extent the several defendants can be held responsible towards the plaintiff and as between themselves for the loss thus occasioned. It matters little in what order the points necessary to be determined for this purpose are taken, but there is some convenience in dealing first with the defendants who stand first on the record, and the logical though not chronological order of events points in the same direction. When the defendants George Donnett Gould and Adelaide Caroline Head were appointed trustees of the settlements in 1894, the trust property consisted of a house, No. 1, West Cliff-terrace, Seaton, £1,500 secured by policies on Mrs. Head's life (the premiums being payable out of her life income), and an interest by way of charge on another house, No. 6, West Cliff-terrace, Seaton. This property has wholly disappeared. What has happened to the third item has not been in any way explained and I must leave that to be ascertained, if it usefully can be, by inquiries to be directed by this judgment. The house No. 1, West Cliff-terrace has been sold, the policies have been surrendered, and the proceeds of such sale and surrender have been received by the trustees and dissipated. It may be that on prosecuting the inquiries some justification for the expenditure of some part of these moneys will be discovered, and I do not intend to preclude the trustees from availing themselves of any justification which the facts when ascertained permit, but for aught that yet appears they have been squandered on Mrs. and Miss Head, and at any rate they are gone and no account is forthcoming. Under these circumstances it is a matter of course to make the trustees G. D. Gould and A. C. Head liable as on breach of trust for the sale and surrender and for the proceeds which they have received. They must also be removed from the trust, though for the present at least there is no possible advantage in appointing new trustees in their place. It will be convenient here at once to deal with the claim made by Miss Head against her co-trustee Gould. [His lordship then considered the charge made by Miss Head in her third-party notice against Gould, and said that according to the principles laid down in Re Turner, Barker v. Ivimey, and Lockhart v. Reilly, 4 W. R. 438, 25 L. J. Ch. 697, the charge, if substantiated, would entitle her to be indemnified by him, but that there was no evidence before the court substantiating the charge and that her claim for relief therefore failed, and continued:] We may now approach the question of the liability of the former trustees, the defendants Houlditch and Clapp. It obviously divides itself into two parts entirely distinct in point of law and connected only by some facts common to both. Again, it is beyond dispute that a breach of trust was committed. It may be said that the application of £1,500, part of the trust property, in discharging Mrs. Head's debt to Jerred was of itself a breach of trust, but what is complained of is the advance of that sum on the security of policies of insurance and the life interest of Mrs. Head in the trust property. That this was not justified by the terms of the settlements is abundantly clear, and unless it can be defended on other grounds the trustees must account for this £1,500 as having been received by them and improperly applied. Any discharge which they can establish will necessarily come out on taking the accounts, and they will still have an opportunity of establishing any discharge not negatived by this judgment, but so far as points have been argued on facts not requiring further investigation, it is desirable in the interest of all parties concerned that I should dispose of them once for all. As already noticed, the policies have been surrendered and the property which yielded the income intended to maintain those policies has been disposed of, and it is urged that Messrs. Houlditch and Clapp cannot now in fairness be made liable for the £1,500 when the security for that sum which, on making the sum good they would be entitled to have transferred to themselves, is beyond reach. For this reference is made to In re Salmon, Priest v. Uppleby, and it is urged that the equity in favour of trustees, which was the ground of my decision, is not affected by the judgment of the Court of Appeal, depending as it did on the fact that the investment in question in that case was of an authorized character. Certainly Cotton and Fry, L.JJ., based their judgments on this fact and did not express any disagreement with my views if applied to unauthorized securities, and if that were all I should deem myself at liberty to apply those views to the present case. But can it be said that the equity referred to can properly be invoked to relieve a trustee as against one who has never assented to the improper investment or done anything to put it out of the power of the trustee to obtain the benefit of such investment if he makes the loss good to the trust estate? The plaintiff is an infant and has been incompetent to do one or the other. Put the case somewhat differently. As against a trustee who, on the accounts being taken, is shown to have improperly applied part of the trust estate, the right of a cestui que trust is to have those accounts set straight—that is, to compel the trustee to pay such a sum as will make them balance. Can it be an answer to his demand to say that some other persons or some other trustees have been parties to dealings with the trust estate which make it inequitable to enforce the claim? I am not deciding any point between the former trustees and other persons, but I hold that as against the infant plaintiff they are bound to make good so much of the trust property as appears on taking the accounts to have been improperly applied by them.

Before passing on to the other charge against Messrs. Houlditch and Clapp I may conveniently notice their request for directions that on taking their accounts they be allowed sums applied for the benefit of the infant plaintiff. I think Mr. Lawrence was right in insisting that no opinion should now be expressed on the question what ought to be allowed, but that this question should remain open on further consideration. I will, however, direct an inquiry couched in appropriate, but wide, terms, intended to bring out on the face of the certificate what, if any, sums have been from time to time applied by Messrs. Houlditch and Clapp, or either of them, for the benefit of the plaintiff. I pointed out during the argument that it was necessary to limit the inquiry to moneys applied by the trustees (which would, of course, include applications by their agents) so as to avoid any inference that money paid to Mrs. or Miss Head, though intended for the benefit of the plaintiff, would, without more, be regarded as attributable to the plaintiff's share of the estate. While on this subject I may as well mention that it will be right to extend this inquiry, or rather to make a like inquiry respecting applications by the present trustees. This was not asked for, and I do not know that it is likely to prove useful, but the direction may as well be given.

This brings me to the large and important question whether Messrs. Houlditch and Clapp can be held responsible for the breach of trust committed by the present trustees in selling the house, surrendering the policies, and spending, it matters not how, the produce of the two transactions. To the parties concerned the question is both large and important. As regards those not concerned in the particular case the amount involved is immaterial, but the alleged liability of the former trustees is of vast importance, affecting as it does not only the two large classes, to one or both of which most men belong—trustees and cestui que trustent—but also all members of the legal profession to which the positions and duties of trustees are a course of constant anxiety. The case made against Messrs. Houlditch and Clapp may be thus fairly stated. You had exhausted all the trust property except this house at Seaton and the policies. You knew that this remaining property was barely sufficient to provide the plaintiff's portion, even assuming that the policies were maintained, and you further knew that the income derived from the house was not more than sufficient to maintain those policies. You were urgently pressed to make further advances to Mrs. and Miss Head, and you asserted with perfect truth that no further advances could properly be made—that is to say, could not be made at all without a breach of trust far more serious in fact and in consequences than any that had yet been committed. In order to relieve yourselves and to indirectly assist Mrs. and Miss Head you suggested, or if you did not suggest, assented, to the appointment of new trustees who you knew would be more accommodating and contemplated, if they did not actually intend, that which you had properly declined to do. I have no doubt that if this charge can be regarded as proved against Messrs. Houlditch and Clapp the responsibility insisted on must follow, and that they must be held liable to make good the loss to the trust estate occasioned by the breach of trust which they did not themselves commit. This doctrine, to the authorities in support of which I will presently refer, is based, according to a passage in Lewin on Trusts, p. 752, on agency, and the retiring trustee is treated as actually doing what he does not do in person because his successor is treated as his agent for this purpose. This view is also taken by Stuart, V.C., in one of the cases to which I have to refer. Far be it from me to say that it is not a sound and satisfactory view, but I venture to think a different and equally satisfactory explanation of the doctrine can be given. It is the duty of trustees to protect the funds entrusted to their care and to distribute those funds themselves, or hand them over to their successors intact—that is, properly invested and without diminution, according to the terms of the mandate contained in the instrument of trust. This duty is imposed on them as long as they remain trustees, and must be their guide in every act done by them as trustees. On retiring from the trust and passing on the trust estate to their successors, and whether they appoint those successors or merely assign the property to the nominees of those who have the power of appointment, they are acting as trustees, and it is equally incumbent on them in this ultimate act of office to fulfil the duty imposed on them as at any other time. If, therefore, they neglect that duty and part with the property without due regard to it, they remain liable and will be held by the court responsible for the consequences traceable to that neglect. This explanation will, I think, be found consistent with all judicial utterances on the subject, and, haply aid to make them consistent with themselves.

It is strange that so little authority should be forthcoming on a point of such importance, especially as no one presumes to cast doubt on the doctrine which may be regarded as an integral part of legal lore. In former days when students learned law and practice not only by reading books and attending lectures (means, of course, which cannot safely be neglected), but at least equally as much from the precept and example of a master and an animated discussion in the pupil-room, doctrines such as this not calling for frequent practical application were passed from one generation to another and became engraved in the minds of practitioners without being formulated in reported cases unless a precise question was raised between litigants in a concrete form. This possibly explains why for a doctrine in substance undisputed there is so little authority to be found. It is right that I should say a word on the few cases cited which are admitted to be all that can be discovered in the books.

The case of Webster v. Le Hunt is of material use only by reason of a general statement of law by the Lord Chancellor (Lord Westbury). The judgment of Kindersley, V.C., may be regarded as valuable in applying the law to the particular facts before him, but it is to be observed that his judgment proceeded on the basis of an affidavit which had not been answered, and bearing in mind that this affidavit was entirely disbelieved by the Lord Chancellor, who reversed the decision of the court below, it would be dangerous to quote the judgment as illustrating any principle. One must, however, note the language of the Lord Chancellor which is expressed by him to be in agreement with the judge whom he was overruling. This is the passage in the report: "Trustees denuding themselves of trust funds if they did so under circumstances that warranted any reasonable belief of the insecurity of the trust funds in the hands of those to whom they committed them should not be considered in this court as having validly discharged themselves of the custody of the trust funds or released themselves from responsibility. About the principle of the court there would be no doubt." The next case in order of date is Palaird v. Carew, which would not at all be relevant to the matter in hand but for the observations of Lord Romilly. Having noticed that the defendant declined to accede to a certain request on the ground that if a trustee surrendered up a trust to a person who committed a breach of trust he might be made liable for the consequences arising from the misconduct of the new trustee, he adds: "That no doubt is correct to this extent: If a trustee is called upon to commit a breach of trust and refuses and his cestui que trust say, 'There is A. B. who will; will you resign and surrender your trust to him?' and the old trustee accede to that proposal and transfers the property to the new trustee for the purpose of enabling him to commit a breach of trust, in that case the old trustee would probably be visited very severely by the court."

The only remaining case is Clark v. Hoskins, reported before Stuart, V.C., and before the Lords Justices. This is a more useful case with reference to the one in hand because, as will be seen, there are passages in the judgments more nearly approaching to it, but it is to be observed that what was there charged against the trustees both past and present was deliberate fraud in the suppression of a document, and this goes to the foundation of the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, and renders a detailed examination of the facts unnecessary here. The Vice-Chancellor there laid down the law as follows: "Where a trustee entrusted with property for the benefit of others resigns the trusteeship after he has been requested to deal improperly with the property, and after he has refused to comply with that request because he knew that to have acceded to it would have been to commit a breach of trust, he is placed in a position of the gravest peril," and he gives as the reason for this that already mentioned to be stated in Lewin on Trusts. The Vice-Chancellor decided against the former trustees but the Lords Justices reversed him, and it is their statement, or, rather, the statement of Lord Hatherley (then Wood, L.J.), who delivered the judgment of the court, of the reasons for their conclusions which has a direct application to the present case. He notices the charge and says that the former trustees were charged with complicity in the scheme, and the advice that trustees should be found who would hand over the deeds to the defendant Hester Brown in order to enable her to perpetrate the fraud by suppressing the settlement and obtaining money on the property as if unaffected by the settlement. He says that was entirely denied by the former trustees and then proceeds to inquire whether the denial is well founded. I conclude from the language of the Lord Justice that he did not consider the former trustees to have acted wisely or prudently, but he takes special care to point out that he is dealing with questions of a different character. He speaks of them as acting unadvisedly in retiring from the trust and letting some other more accommodating trustees raise the money which was required in their place, but he adds that this had no similarity to the fraud which had been perpetrated. The little which I have said about the case will make intelligible the passage which follows these observations containing the gist of the decision: "These new trustees so appointed might do that which was very improper, and raise for her purposes moneys which they were not entitled to raise and give receipts to the intended mortgagees, but at the same time these trustees were not asked to assist in committing this fraud and I conceive it would go far beyond anything which has ever been done in this court to fix these gentlemen with the consequences when it was not in their contemplation that such a fraud was to be perpetrated; but it was in their contemplation simply that a sum was to be raised as against cestui que trustent which it would be improper for the trustees in the execution of their duty to raise." These being the authorities to guide me it will be as well first to inquire whether Messrs. Houlditch and Clapp can be brought within Lord Westbury's rule. Did they denude themselves of the trust funds under circumstances which warranted any reasonable belief of the insecurity of the trust funds in the hands of those to whom they committed them? Messrs. Houlditch and Clapp were anxious to be relieved of the trust. That can surprise no one who has studied even slightly the facts of this case and no possible objection could be taken to their retirement if it was properly effected. I do not see what they could do towards that end but appoint or concur in the appointment of new trustees in their place. There was nothing on which they could properly apply to the court, and at that time the appointment of a judicial trustee was unknown. There was, of course, great difficulty in finding new trustees, and this is a cogent factor in the solution of the question whether the appointment of G. D. Gould and Miss Head was justifiable. They ought to have avoided the appointment of Miss Head if possible, not merely because she was a beneficiary but because she was known to be under the influence of her mother, and mainly perhaps, and to some extent certainly by reason of that influence she had taken an active part in the importunities which had already led to a breach of trust, and in that breach of trust itself. But was it possible? They succeeded in finding, or rather Mrs. Head found a gentleman who was a solicitor ready to undertake the trust out of kindness to the family, to which he seems to have owed a debt of gratitude, and although their inquiries respecting him were perhaps somewhat slight having regard to the serious position of the trust I cannot say that they were not reasonably justified in approving him. It is urged that they could not completely discharge themselves without appointing two competent trustees. That may be admitted but I cannot hold Miss Head to be an incompetent trustee when linked with another whose professional position was of itself a security that the trust funds would be properly administered. I cannot blame Messrs. Houlditch and Clapp for the appointment which they made nor do I think that they had any reasonable ground for believing that the trust would be otherwise than secure in the hands of their successors. One suspicious fact however deserves special notice. There was in the hands of Messrs. Houlditch and Clapp a small balance of £10 6s. 7d. which ought to have been invested or applied in payment of costs or in some other manner conformable to the trusts of the settlements. At the request of G. D. Gould they used this sum to meet the urgent necessities of Mrs. Head. That of course was wrong and the sum must be charged against them in taking the trust accounts. But it would, I think, be giving this fact far too great weight if it induced me to say that from Mr. Gould's request made under such circumstances as I have mentioned the trustees ought to have concluded that he was likely to apply or contemplated applying the rest of the trust property in like manner. As regards the rule laid down by the Master of the Rolls in Palairet v. Carew, and supported, I think, in both judgments in Clark v. Hoskins, the case is still clearer in favour of Messrs. Houlditch and Clapp. What their successors did was to convert the whole remaining trust property and improperly to spend it. Messrs. Houlditch and Clapp knew that G. D. Gould was reflecting on some possible mode of assisting Mrs. Head, and he had told them that he was turning his attention to some means of doing this (see his letter of the 2nd of November, 1894). But apparently he was as conscious as Messrs. Houlditch and Clapp themselves of the difficulty of doing this, and he certainly never hinted at doing it in the manner ultimately adopted. On reflective study of the evidence and correspondence, and notwithstanding suspicious criticism of some unhappy expressions in Mr. Clapp's letters, I do not believe that Messrs. Houlditch and Clapp contemplated any breach of trust at all, and I am convinced that they never contemplated that actually committed. With the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Clark v. Hoskins before us, it is easy to understand the Master of the Rolls as meaning what he probably intended to express, that in order to make a retiring trustee liable for a breach of trust committed by his successor you must show, and show clearly, that the very breach of trust which was in fact committed was not merely the outcome of the retirement and new appointment but was contemplated by the former trustees when such retirement and appointment took place. That is clearly the doctrine of Clark v. Hoskins. It will not suffice to prove that the former trustees rendered easy or even intended a breach of trust if it was not in fact committed. They must be proved to be guilty as accessories before the fact of the impropriety actually perpetrated. There are two third-party notices, one of which, Miss Head's, has been already disposed of, and on that there will be no order. The other is that of Messrs. Houlditch and Clapp. So far as it relates to the alleged responsibility for the acts of their successors it falls to the ground, but it relates also to their own breach of trust concerning the £1,500, against which they claim to be indemnified by Mrs. and Miss Head under the deed of the 8th of December, 1893. To this they are clearly entitled, and if there should eventually be anything coming to either Mrs. or Miss Head out of the trust property it must be impounded to answer this indemnity, which, of course, will cover costs. It would be useless now to give detailed directions on this subject, but a declaration of right should be inserted in the judgment. Costs must now be dealt with. It is plain that but for the breach of trust of the present trustees G. D. Gould and Miss Head, this action would never have been commenced, and they must be ordered to pay the plaintiff's costs up to and including trial. There will be no order now respecting the costs of the former trustees Houlditch and Clapp, which must wait for further consideration. Whether I shall be able to allow them any costs out of any fund recovered is questionable, and it may be my duty to order them to pay some costs. But, while intending to preserve an open mind, I desire to approach this question, when ripe for decision, kindly. These gentlemen committed a breach of trust, and in the eye of the law they cannot be said to have acted reasonably; but they yielded to the importunity of two ladies backed by an appeal for assistance from the son of the one and the brother of the other and representations that the required advances were needed not so much to aid a struggle as to ensure comfort and a good position. And now they are attached in the name of the infant plaintiff, whose interests must, of course, be protected even as against these trustees, but really I have no doubt at the instigation of those whom they honestly though unwisely endeavoured to assist. Their liability ought not to be pushed beyond the limit which the law imperatively demands. On the subject of costs there is no more to be said on the present occasion. It had occurred to me to frame minutes of judgment, but having dealt with every point requiring to be noticed I may safely and properly leave the formal details in other hands, though, of course, I am ready to assist for that purpose or hear any suggestion or discussion. It is reasonably clear from the materials before me that the utmost practical result of the litigation will be to secure the plaintiff's share under the settlements, the other beneficiaries having apparently been paid in full. Nevertheless the judgment must in form be for the execution of the trusts of the settlements generally and for the ascertainment of proper enquiries and accounts of all the parties interested and their respective interests, and although I have found it convenient to speak of the settlements as if there were only one, the distinction between the two of 1865 and 1868 must be mentioned, and the judgment must proceed on that footing.

BOILEAU v. HEATH. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Part of the freehold—Chattels thrown in heaps upon the land—Intention—Mines and minerals—"Tap-cinder"—Artificial product.

Mounds of "tap-cinder," the refuse arising from the puddling of pig-iron, thrown upon land held on a tenancy by the tenant, with the intention of its once more forming part of the earth out of which it was produced, become part of the land and belong to the owner of the freehold.

In a lease of mines of coal and ironstone and "all mines, seams, veins, and beds as well opened as unopened, of all other minerals and clay lying within and under the lands from the surface down to" a certain mine named, these words do not include such mounds of tap-cinder as above mentioned.

Action.

This action was brought by Sir F. G. Manningham Boileau and others, the trustees of the Norwich Union Fund of the Norwich Union Life Insurance Society, and that society against Messrs. R. Heath, J. Heath, and A. H. Heath, the lessees of Clough Hall Ironworks and Collieries, in the county of Stafford, for an injunction to restrain the defendants from dealing with certain heaps or mounds of mineral refuse lying on the surface of the land leased by the defendants as aforesaid. The defendants claimed the mounds either as chattels which they had bought from the plaintiffs or as part of the mines which they were entitled to work under their lease. The plaintiffs were the owners of the Clough Hall property, and in June, 1888, they leased it to the Kidsgrove Steel, Iron, and Coal Co. (Limited). This company got into difficulties and was wound up. On the 16th of December, 1892, there being then rent in arrear, the plaintiffs obtained an order of the court for re-entry, and took possession on that date, and so the old lease to the company terminated. The mounds came into existence during the tenancy of the Kidsgrove Co., and were produced in the course of the ordinary working of the ironstone of the mine. The ironstone was worked as follows: It was first raised from the earth and then calcined by being placed in heaps and fired by means of a mixture of slack, this causing a considerable reduction in the weight. It was after this process that the weight was taken for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of the royalty payable to the landlords. The calcined ore was then liquefied in a blast furnace by means of coal and limestone, the metallic fluid sinking to the bottom and the cinders and refuse, which floated on the top, being drawn off and cast on spoil heaps as being of no value. These were not the heaps in question. The fluid was drawn off into moulds and formed pig-iron. The pigs were then put into puddling furnaces, and during the process of puddling large quantities of "tap-cinder" were produced, which were drawn off from the furnaces in small wagons and thrown into heaps on the ground, and in course of time made up the mounds now in dispute. This tap-cinder, of which there was said to be about 100,000 tons on the works, consisted chiefly of protoxide of iron and silica. When the plaintiffs re-entered the mounds were on the ground, and apparently no claim to them was made by the outgoing company. The plaintiffs, having re-entered, kept the mines going on their own account for a few weeks, and on the 11th of February, 1893, entered into an agreement for a lease of the premises to the defendants. By this agreement it was provided that a lease should forthwith be granted to the defendants "of the mines of coal and ironstone, and all other minerals and clay and lands usually known as the Clough Hall Ironworks and Collieries for a term of 42 years" at a minimum rent of £2,000 a year, that the royalties should be the same as those payable under the Kidsgrove lease, with the addition of 1d. per ton for slack, and that the lease "should include all mines comprised in the said lease of the 22nd of June, 1888, from the surface down to" (what was called) "the silver mine." It was, however, expressly provided that the defendants should not be bound to work the ironworks, it being expressed to be their intention to remove and dispose of "the plant and machinery connected therewith." By an agreement of even date the plaintiffs sold to the defendants "the plant and machinery" then on the premises for £25,000. The money was duly paid, and the defendants entered into possession on the 1st of February, 1893. They had since worked the mines, but only for coal, and therefore they had not added to the mounds of tap-cinder. The lease, which was not executed until the 28th of August, 1897, after the close of the pleadings, contained the demise set out in the judgment. Soon after the defendants had entered into possession the plaintiffs put forward a claim for nearly £3,000 for tools, stores, and other similar chattels on the premises when the defendants entered, and which, it was contended, did not pass under the sale of "plant and machinery," and cross-claims were made by the defendants. The claims formed the subject of a settlement, made in February, 1895, the terms of which were reduced into writing and provided, inter alia, that the defendants should pay the plaintiffs £1,000 in full and final settlement of all their claims to "stores and all other effects upon the premises." The tap-cinder had formerly been worthless, and his lordship held that it had been so as long as the Kidsgrove Co. occupied the property. In consequence, however, of certain scientific discoveries made since the date when the defendants entered into possession of the mines this refuse had become valuable and saleable. Consequently the defendants began to sell and remove the mounds, and had already sold about 20,000 tons of tap-cinder at from 4s. to 6s. per ton, and they claimed to be entitled to the whole mounds as their own property.

On the other hand the plaintiffs appear to have thought that they were entitled to a royalty from the defendants on the assumption that the mounds formed part of the leased mines. Subsequently, however, they thought that the defendants were not entitled to work those mounds at all, and they asked in the action for a declaration that they were entitled to them and not the defendants, and for an injunction to restrain the defendants removing or selling the said tap-cinder or any part thereof.

Warmington, Q.C., H. Terrell, Q.C., and Younger, for the plaintiffs.—The mounds of tap-cinder form part of the freehold, being deposited there with the intention of being permanently left there: Elwes v. Brigg Gas Co., 35 W. R. 192, 33 Ch. D. 562. They became part of the soil by their own weight just as a load of gravel or manure becomes so. Even if they were chattels they would belong to us as being left on our land, and not to the defendants, who are merely lessees. They are not "other minerals" mentioned in the lease, being artificial products: Glasgow (Provost of) v. Farie, 37 W. R. 327, 13 App. Cas. 657; Scott v. Midland Railway Co., 13 Times L. R. 398.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., R. Bray, Q.C., and P. S. Hokes, for the defendants.—The heaps were chattels thrown on the ground, and if they were not "plant and machinery" under the agreement of February, 1893, they were "stores and effects" under that of February, 1895. In any event they came under the lease which included "all mines from the surface down to the silver mine" and "all minerals" on the land.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 23.—BIGHAM, J.—[After holding that the heaps in question were not included in the term "stores and other effects":] The conclusion I have come to is that these mounds are not chattels at all. No doubt when the material was first formed it would have been competent for the Kidsgrove Co. to have treated it as their own, and to have sold it if they could for their own benefit. But they could not sell it, and did not want it, and when they piled it on the earth their intention was that it should once more form part of the earth out of which it was produced, and should no longer be of the nature of a chattel. These mounds are not chattels, and even if they are, the property in them never, in my opinion, passed to the defendants. The defendants began to work them in March, 1894. When the plaintiffs first heard of this they apparently thought that the defendants ought to pay a royalty on them as forming part of the leased mines. If, however, the defendants are entitled to work the mounds as part of the demised premises, I am of opinion that they may do so without paying any royalty. The royalties are payable only in respect of "calcined ironstone, coal slack, and cannel," and tap-cinder is, in my opinion, none of these. But are the defendants entitled under their lease to work the mounds at all? Mr. Cozens-Hardy says they are. His contention is that if the mounds are not chattels, but form part of the soil, they pass to the defendants under the lease, and may be removed by them for their own profit. I do not think this contention is sound. What is leased is, first, the coal, then the ironstone, then "all mines, seams, veins, and beds, as well opened as unopened, of all other minerals and clay lying and being within and under the lands from the surface down to and including the silver mine." In my opinion this description applies only to what may be called natural formations in and on the land, not to artificial formations such as these mounds. These mounds are not iron or ironstone, nor are they coal, slack, mines, seams, veins, or beds, either opened or unopened, or any other minerals within the meaning of the lease. For these reasons I give judgment for the plaintiffs, with costs.

WHITE (Respondent) v. THE ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE OF BRADFORD-ON-AVON (Appellants). (a.)

Poor law—Rating—"Tied" public-house—Market value above rent actually paid—Brewers as hypothetical tenants—Exclusion of personal contracts between publican and brewers—Parochial Assessment Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96), s. 1.

The occupier of a tied public-house appealed to quarter sessions against an increased assessment on his licensed premises.

The quarter sessions reduced the assessment subject to a case being stated, and the question raised was on what basis the tied house—the rent paid for which by the occupier to his brewers being admittedly less than the market value of the house—ought to be estimated at for the purposes of the poor rate.

Held, that the statute required the assessment to be based on the value of the hereditament itself, but that in estimating that value the quarter sessions were right in taking into consideration the fact that rival brewers would give a price in the market for the house above that which would support a rent given by a publican who merely took the premises for the purposes of his own retail trade as a yearly tenant; but that any special value which brewers might for reasons connected with their own brewery be willing to give for the premises ought to be excluded, since a publican had a right, like an ordinary tenant, to have his premises rated apart from any personal contract existing between himself and his landlord.

Special case stated by the quarter sessions of the county of Wilts on an appeal by the occupier against a rate on a public-house.

The ground of the appeal was that the premises were overrated, and the question for the decision of the High Court was whether the assessment committee were right in taking into consideration, in estimating the rateable value of the premises, the fact that brewers were willing to give a price or rent higher than the ordinary publican would be willing to pay as a yearly tenant in order to make a profit by letting the premises as a "tied" house.

The facts were these:

The respondent White was rated as occupier of a elements of a joint-stock company were more particularly contemplated by the Legislature, I should say these: First, the existence of a joint-stock or common property; secondly, the contributions of members as the source of such property; and thirdly, the holding of that property by numerous persons in transferable shares. All these ingredients exist in the constitution of the society; and although no doubt joint-stock companies are ordinarily formed for the purpose of profit, many institutions exist, which are not formed for that purpose, to which it is hard to deny the nature of a joint stock company.

Under the Companies Act of 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89, it appears to be clear that a joint-stock company may be formed for other purposes than those of profit. Section 6 of that Act provides that "any seven or more persons associated for any lawful purpose may, by subscribing their names to a memorandum of association and otherwise complying with the requisitions of this Act in respect of registration, form an incorporated company"; and section 21 provides that "no company formed for the purpose of promoting art, science, religion, charity, or any other like object, not involving the acquisition of gain by the company or by the individual members thereof shall" without certain sanction hold more than a certain quantity of land. Then in the Companies Act of 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), section 23, it is provided, "Where any association is about to be formed under the principal Act as a limited company, if it proves to the Board of Trade that it is formed for the purpose of promoting commerce, art, science, religion, charity, or any other useful object, and that it is the intention of such association to apply the profits, if any, or other income of the association in promoting its objects and to prohibit the payment of any dividend to the members of the association, the Board of Trade may by licence under the hand of any of the secretaries or assistant secretaries direct such association to be registered with limited liability without the addition of the word 'limited' to its name."

Now, section 4 of this Act of 1862 prohibits the formation of any company consisting of more than twenty persons for the purpose of carrying on any business that has for its object the acquisition of gain by the company or by the individual members thereof unless registered as a company under the Act. Upon this section it has been repeatedly held that associations of more than twenty persons may exist which do not require to be registered, and are not made illegal by the Act of 1862: see for example, Smith v. Anderson, 29 W. R. 21, 15 Ch. D. 247; Crowther v. Thorley, 32 W. R. 330; and In re Siddall, 33 W. R. 509, 29 Ch. D. 1; and yet it would be difficult, as I think, to deny to those associations the nature of joint-stock companies.

The Joint-Stock Companies Registration Act of 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 110) applies only to joint-stock companies established for the purpose of profit; and it was repeatedly held (see Reg. v. Whitmarsh, 15 Q. B. 600; Bear v. Bromley, 18 Q. B. 271; and Moore v. Rawlins, 6 C. B. N. S. 289, 7 W. R. C. L. Dig. 15) that associations which very closely resemble joint-stock companies did not require registration under that Act.

On behalf of the Attorney-General some observations of Kay, L.J. (then Kay, J.), in In re Bristol Athenæum, were properly relied on. The actual decision in that case was that the Bristol Athenæum, an association possessing a constitution somewhat similar to that of the Sheffield society, could not be wound up as an unregistered company under section 199 of the Companies Act, 1862. With that decision I do not differ. Incidentally, however, his lordship did express the opinion that the Bristol Athenæum was not a joint-stock company and not within the proviso of section 30 of the Act of 1854. No one can be more sensible than I am of the weight which is due to anything which fell from what the learned judge said; but I have, while preparing this judgment, been informed by North, J., that he has, in a case before him (In re The Russell Institution, [1898] 2 Ch. 72), independently arrived at a similar conclusion with regard to the construction of section 30 of the Act of 1854 to that which I have endeavoured to express. In my judgment, on the main question, the applicant is entitled to the order for which he asks.

There remains, however, a minor question, which is one entirely of form. By clause 24 it is provided that notice of every meeting of the members shall be given by advertisement in all the Sheffield newspapers. It is admitted that although notice has been given in all the morning Sheffield newspapers an evening paper was omitted and no notices were served. Having regard to the nature of the dealing with the property which is about to take place, it seems to me that this is a case in which I should require the rule to be strictly adhered to, and therefore I think before I make an order a meeting ought to be called properly in accordance with the directions in the rules.

Q. B. Div. (Kennedy, J.) June. 7.

MARSHALL v. MACKINTOSH. (a.)

Contract—Building agreement—Default of builder—Re-entry of landowner—Damages.

A builder having made default under a building agreement, the landowner exercised the right reserved to him in such a case by the agreement to re-enter and take possession of the land and premises, with all the buildings, plant, and materials thereon.

Held, that an action would lie at the suit of the landowner against the builder to recover damages for the builder's breach of the agreement.

Action to recover damages for breach of contract.

The defendant, who was a builder, by an agreement dated the 10th of June, 1896, with the plaintiff, undertook to pull down and re-erect "in carcase" before the 25th of December, 1896, a hotel in Dover-street, Piccadilly, and to take a lease of the hotel from the plaintiff for eighty years from the 10th of June, 1896, at a peppercorn rent for the first year, and at the rent of £1,100 for the second and every subsequent year of the term.

The material provisions of the agreement were as follows: "(2) The lessee will at his own cost take down and clear away the old buildings, and before the 25th of December, 1896, erect in carcase (that is to say, the walls built and structure roofed in, the timbers of the floors and partitions fixed, and all gutters, rain-water pipes, and drains completed and made good in communication with the common sewer), the new buildings. . . . And in default by the lessee of the stipulation contained in this clause he shall forfeit all benefit under this agreement, which shall thereupon cease and be determined, and all the materials and buildings on the said premises shall be forfeited to, and become the absolute property of, the lessor. (11) If the new buildings shall not be erected or completed within the time and in manner aforesaid before the 25th of December, 1896, or if the lessee shall fail to observe or perform any of the stipulations herein, . . . or if he shall not proceed with the works with proper diligence, then . . . the lessor shall be entitled to re-enter upon and to the immediate possession of the said piece of land and premises, with all the buildings, erections, plant, and materials therein without making to the lessee any allowance or compensation in respect thereof. . . ."

The defendant had possession of the site on the 10th of June, 1896, and removed from it materials worth £200, and commenced, but did not complete, the pulling down of the hotel, but did not rebuild it or any part, and, save as aforesaid, wholly neglected to perform the contract. In consequence of the default of the defendant the plaintiff took possession of the premises, and put an end to the contract on the 19th of January, 1897.

The action was tried by Kennedy, J., without a jury. The learned judge found there had been a breach of contract by the defendant and referred the case to an official referee to report what damage, if any, the plaintiff had sustained, having regard to all the facts, by reason of the defendant's breach of contract.

The official referee reported that the plaintiff after taking possession of the premises on the 19th of January, 1897, forthwith took every reasonable precaution to endeavour to relet without loss, and did relet for the best terms he could by an agreement of the 5th of May, 1897, for eighty years from the 24th of June, 1898, at a peppercorn rent for the first year, and at the rent of £900 for the second and subsequent years of the term; that the fair value at which to capitalize the rent was twenty-five years' purchase. The official referee found that the damages which the plaintiff sustained by reason of the defendant's breach of contract in this action were the loss of two year's rent of £1,100 from the 24th of June, 1897, to the 24th of June, 1899, amounting to £2,200, and the loss of £200 a year rent from the 24th of June, 1899, at twenty-five years' purchase, amounting to £5,000, making a total of £7,200. If the plaintiff was only entitled to recover damages caused by the removal of materials by the defendant and by the loss of possession from the 24th of June, 1896, to the 19th of January, 1897, then the official referee found that the amount of such damage was £200 and one years' rent of £900 from the 24th of June, 1896, to the 24th of June, 1897, the earliest date at which the plaintiff was able to relet the premises.

E. Morten, for the plaintiff.

G. A. Scott, for the defendant.

KENNEDY, J.—In this case the only point I have to decide is the question of damages which the plaintiff is entitled to recover. The damages assessed by the learned official referee under alternative heads are large, and, as Field, J., took occasion to say in the course of his judgment in Wigsell v. School for the Indigent Blind, 30 W. R. 474, 8 Q. B. D. 357, at p. 359, few questions as to the principle upon which damages ought to be assessed are free from difficulty.

The defendant, by an agreement in writing of the 10th of June, 1896, contracted with the plaintiff (in substance) to pull down and remove certain buildings numbered 47 and 48, Dover-street, Piccadilly, and to build on the site a new structure according to certain approved plans, elevations, sections, and specifications. The plaintiff contracted that the new structures should, before the 25th of December, 1896, be erected "in carcase" to the satisfaction of the plaintiff's architect. Upon this being done, the plaintiff contracted with the defendant to give him a lease of the land and buildings for a term of eighty years from the 24th of June, 1896, at a peppercorn rent for the first year, and thereafter at the yearly rent of £1,100. The only other provisions of the building agreement to which I need specially refer are the latter part of clause 2 and clause 11. [His lordship read these clauses.] By clause 13 the defendant had an option, subject to the terms of the agreement, during the first year of the term granted by the agreement, to purchase the fee simple at the price of £28,600. The defendant, as stated in the report of the official referee, got possession of the site on the said 10th day of June, the date of the agreement, but, except that he took down and removed £200 worth of materials from the old buildings, he did nothing whatever towards the fulfilment of the contract. The fact evidently was that he had entered upon the undertaking as a speculation without the means of fulfilling it. He frankly stated in his evidence before me that the terms of the agreement were such that he could not raise the money to build. He added that shortly before the plaintiff took possession he thought there was just a prospect, and a very good prospect, of his being able to sell the freehold. So far as I can see in the evidence no communication of such a prospect was ever made to the plaintiff.

Finding nothing beyond the removal of the £200 worth of materials had been done, and no prospect of anything being further done by the defendant, the plaintiff re-entered on the 19th of January, 1897. There can be no question of his right under the agreement to do so; and, apart from the express terms of that document, I think that upon the facts in evidence the defendant had not only broken the agreement, as he admits he did, but that the breach was of such a nature that the plaintiff would be reasonably justified in treating the defendant's conduct as showing an intention on the defendant's part not further to perform the contract.

It is clear, in my view, that the mere fact of re-entry and forfeiture does not in itself exonerate the defendant from the liability to damages for breach of contract prior to re-entry. If authority was wanted, Hartshorne v. Watson, 4 Bing. N. C. 178, appears to be an authority in point. I do not think Mr. Scott contended for the contrary view; but he did contend on behalf of the defendant that the effect of the latter part of clause 2 and clause 11, which I have read, do in this contract limit the plaintiff to such compensation as may be afforded to him by taking possession of the materials, plant, and buildings on the premises at the time of re-entry without any allowance or compensation to the defendant, and that he cannot claim damages beyond. I cannot accept this view. It appears to me that this would be to read into these clauses "as and for liquidated damages" or words to the same effect, and this, I conceive, I am not entitled to do. It is common enough to find the insertion of such words where there is an intention of the parties to agreements so to limit the liability for a breach of the contract. Instances of this are to be found in Reilly v. Jones, 1 Bing. 302; Lea v. Whitaker, 21 W. R. 230, L. R. 8 C. P. 70; and in Ex parte Newitt, In re Garrud, 29 W. R. 344, 16 Ch. D. 522, which was, like the present, the case of a building agreement. In the last cited case Brett, L.J., in the course of the argument at p. 529 says, "the words 'as and for liquidated damages' are inserted in favour of the builder; if they were not there the landowner would also bring an action for damages for the breach of the agreement." James,

L.J., on the same page says, "'liquidated damages only means that the things seized are to be taken in full satisfaction," and in the course of his judgment, at p. 531, he adds, in reference no doubt to the stipulation "as and for liquidated damages," "the building agreement provides in effect that in a certain event certain property of the builder may be taken by the landowner in full satisfaction of the agreement." It appears to me that in the absence of some such words as "as and for liquidated damages" I cannot construe clauses 2 and 11 as depriving the landowner of the right to prove, if he can, actual damages for the defendant's failure to perform the contract. I may add I do not think that the words in clause 11, "without making to the lessee any allowance or compensation in respect thereof" would operate to prevent the builder, if the landowner after a breach re-enters and claims damages, from having considered in the damages any value which might exist in buildings, plant, or material seized by the landowner when he re-enters. The damages must be assessed rebus sic stantibus, and it might be the case, for example, that if the structure at the time of re-entry though not entirely completed "in carcase" was nearly so, or if very valuable plant and material were on the land, the landowner would fail to prove any substantial damage at all to flow from the breach on which he sues, as he failed in the case of Oldershaw v. Holt, 12 A. & E. 590, where after re-entry he made an advantageous lease with a new contractor.

The remaining question is, what are the damages to which the plaintiff here is entitled for the breach which is committed before the plaintiff re-entered on the 19th of January? The learned official referee, to whom I referred the question of damage, has given two alternative assessments. [His lordship read the report of the official referee.] The damages must be assessed, in my judgment, upon well-known and well-recognized principles. They must be such as flow naturally, and, in the cirumstances of the case necessarily, from the breach of contract; further, they must be such damages as may reasonably and properly be taken to have been in contemplation of the parties when they entered into the contract; subject to this, at all events, the plaintiff is to borrow the language of Field, J., in Wigsell v. The School for Indigent Blind, 8 Q. B. D., at p. 364, "entitled to have his damages assessed at the pecuniary amount of the difference between the state of the plaintiff upon the breach of the contract, and what it would have been if the contract had been performed." Now, what would have been the state here, if the defendant's contract had been performed before the date of the re-entry on the 19th of January? There would have been a complete removal of the old buildings, and upon this important site the "carcase" completely erected of a valuable building. If this had been the case, it may, I think, fairly and properly be assumed that if the defendant failed to further complete his contract and take his lease, there would have been no difficulty in the plaintiff getting someone to take up the undertaking on at least as profitable terms. As it is, not only, after seven months, is there no new building erected, or even begun, but the old building is still on the ground and substantially as it was on the 10th of June, except so far as it had been made, I suppose, less valuable by its having had £200 worth of materials removed from it by the defendant. It is shown by evidence to the satisfaction of the referee that the plaintiff forthwith took every reasonable precaution to endeavour to relet without loss, and did relet for the best terms he could obtain. Those terms, as was stated in the official referee's report, involved the heavy loss of £7,200. Looking at the largeness of the amount, I have most carefully considered if there is any fault of principle in this assessment, and I can find none. It appears to me to be fair to assume that if the defendant had not broken his contract before the plaintiff re-entered on the 19th of January, 1897, the state of the plaintiff would have been that which he had under the contract with the defendant; he would have got the value of the contract either from the defendant, if he completed it, or from a new contractor, if the defendant after performing the contract so far had subsequently incurred a forfeiture. Oldershaw v. Holt, which is the case most in point, of which I am aware, has never been disapproved; and in that case it was held by the Court of Queen's Bench in a very similar case of re-entry upon breach of a building lease, the breach being, as here, the neglect to build, that the jury might properly give their verdict on an estimate of the plaintiff's real damage, taking into consideration an increased rent secured by the agreement, which had been made with a new lessee after the re-entry. Upon the same reasoning the official referee might, as it seems to me, properly consider here in getting at the plaintiff's real damage the fact of the reduced rent which the plaintiff was practically obliged to accept from a new contractor, and come to the conclusion which he has come to, that the difference between that rent and what the plaintiff would have received under his contract with the defendant fairly represents the damage which flowed naturally and necessarily from the defendant's breach of contract before the plaintiff re-entered, as, under this agreement with the dedefendant, he was entitled to do on the 19th of January.

As to the second or alternative assessment, it is only necessary to say that I do not think that the damages could, according to legal principle, be assessed upon that basis. I understood in the course of the argument that it was inserted in the report in deference to the wish of counsel, in order that this method of assessment might be before me on the hearing of the arguments.

again rated to a rate for highway expenses in respect of its occupation of the land.

Held, that the appellant company was not, by reason of the order made under section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862, exempted from liability to be rated for highway expenses, and that the question of the appellant company's liability was not res judicata by reason of the decision of the quarter sessions in 1881 that the rate then in question was invalid.

Special case stated by quarter sessions for the North Riding of the County of York upon the hearing of an appeal by the North-Eastern Railway Co. against a rate made for the relief of the poor in the parish of Dalton and for other purposes chargeable thereon, on the 7th of June, 1897.

Prior to the making of an order by the quarter sessions for the North Riding at Michaelmas, 1880, constituting the hamlet of Islebeck a separate highway parish, and annexing such parish to the Bridforth highway district, that hamlet formed part of the township of Bagby in the said district, and was a place in which all the highways were repairable by the occupiers of land ratione tenuræ, and in which no highway rates were leviable by reason of the exemption contained in section 33 of the Highway Act, 1835. Islebeck continued to form part of the township of Bagby until June, 1886.

The appellant company was at all material times in occupation of lands in Islebeck, and was, prior to the 11th of April, 1881, liable ratione tenuræ to repair part of a highway in Islebeck.

On the 11th of April, 1881, an order was made at petty sessions under section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862, whereby it was ordered that all the highways within Islebeck should become, and for ever thereafter be, parish highways and be repaired and maintained by the Bridforth Highway Board, and the sums to be paid by the respective occupiers of lands in Islebeck previously liable to repair the highways in full discharge of all claims thereafter in respect of the repair and maintenance of the highways were fixed. Such sums were duly paid in accordance with the order.

On the 22nd of August, 1881, the appellant company was rated and assessed in respect of its lands in Islebeck, to a rate for the expenses incurred by the Bridforth Highway Board in repairing and maintaining the highways in its district, including the highways in Islebeck, and for other expenses legally incurred by the board. Such rate was appealed against by the company to quarter sessions upon the ground that the company was exempt from liability to contribute towards the repair and maintenance of the said highways, and upon proof of the foregoing facts the appeal against the rate was allowed.

In 1886 the hamlet of Islebeck was detached from the township of Bagby and amalgamated with the township of Dalton in the Bridforth highway district.

On the 7th of June, 1897, a rate for the relief of the poor in the parish of Dalton was made, in which the appellant company was rated and assessed in respect of its occupation of its lands in Islebeck. Such rate was levied (inter alia) in respect of expenses incurred or to be incurred by the Rural District Council of Thirsk (the successor of the Bridforth Highway Board) in respect of the repair and maintenance of the highways within the said rural district, including the portion of the parish of Dalton which was comprised in Islebeck.

The appellant company appealed against this rate to quarter sessions.

On behalf of the appellant company it was contended:

(a) That it having been decided on the appeal to the quarter sessions in 1881 that the company was not liable to contribute towards the repair and maintenance of the highways in that portion of Dalton which was formerly the hamlet of Islebeck, the question was res judicata, and the court of quarter sessions was precluded from deciding otherwise in the present appeal;

(b) That the company having been liable to maintain the highways in the hamlet of Islebeck ratione tenuræ was exempted by section 33 of the Highway Act, 1835, from liability to rates levied in respect of the repair and maintenance of such highways, and had continued to be exempt ever since;

(c) That the company, having complied with the requirements of the order of quarter sessions of the 11th of April, 1881, was by section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862, discharged of all claims thereafter in respect of the repairs and maintenance of any highways in Islebeck, and was, therefore, not liable to pay the rate in question.

On behalf of the respondents it was contended:

(a) That the decision of quarter sessions in 1881 was final only for its proper purpose and object, which was that the company was not liable to pay the particular rate then in question, and that that decision was not conclusive evidence of the matters referred to in paragraphs (b) and (c) of the appellant's contentions, which matters only came (if at all) collaterally in question before the quarter sessions, or were only incidentally cognizable, or were at most only matters to be inferred by argument from that decision;

(b) That the exemption from the payment of highway rates conferred by section 33 of the Highway Act, 1835, continued only so long as the liability of the company to repair the highway ratione tenuræ lasted, and that, therefore, the exemption determined on the 11th of August, 1881, when, by virtue of the order of that date, the highway became a parish highway;

(c) That the order of the 11th of August, 1881, only operated to discharge the appellant company from all claims from that date by the Bridforth Highway Board or its successors in respect of the repairs and maintenance of the highway then ordered to be made repairable by the parish, and in no way affected the liability of the appellant company in respect of its occupation of property within the district of the Thirsk Rural District Council, and otherwise by law liable to be rated, from paying rates for expenses incurred by the council in respect of the repair and maintenance of highways within its district.

The court of quarter sessions held that the question was not res judicata, and that the court was not bound by the decision on the appeal to quarter sessions in 1881, and that the appellant company was not exempt from payment of any portion of the rate. Accordingly the appeal was dismissed.

The questions for the opinion of the court were:

(1) Was the court of quarter sessions precluded by its previous decision in 1881 from holding that the appellant company was liable to be rated in respect of its occupation of land within the hamlet of Islebeck for expenses incurred by the rural district council of Thirsk in relation to the highways within its district?

(2) Was the appellant company exempt from payment of so much of the said rates as was levied in respect of the repair and maintenance of the highways in the hamlet of Islebeck?

The Highway Act, 1862, s. 35: Where any person or corporation is liable by reason of tenure of lands or otherwise to repair any highway situate in a highway district, the person or corporation so liable may apply to any justice of the peace for the purpose of making such highway a highway to be repaired and maintained by the parish in which the same is situate; . . . and the justices at petty sessions . . . shall, if they think fit, make an order . . . that such highway shall thereafter be a highway to be thereafter repaired and maintained by the parish, and shall in such order fix a certain sum to be paid by such person or corporation to the highway board of the district in full discharge of all claims thereafter in respect of the repair and maintenance of such highway; . . . From and after the making of such order by the justices . . . such highway shall be repaired in like manner and at the like expense as highways which a parish is liable to repair.

The following cases were cited in the course of the arguments: Reg. v. Heath, 14 W. R. 388, L. R. 1 Q. B. 218; Heath v. Overseers of Weaverham, 42 W. R. 478, [1894] 2 Q. WILLS, J.—This case raises two questions—the first as to the construction of section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862, and the second as to the estoppel. The first question is whether the latter part of section 35 operates to discharge from all future liability for highway expenses the person previously liable ratione tenuræ, or whether the operation of the section is confined simply to the extra cost which would fall upon the person so liable as compared with the other ratepayers. I think that the governing words of the section are "The highway shall thereafter be repaired and maintained by the parish." It would have been easy to have said that the person, in respect of whom the liability to repair ratione tenuræ previously existed, should continue to enjoy the exemption; but that was not said in so many words, and some of the consequences, which would follow if such a construction were adopted, are so startling that in my opinion the respondents' construction of the section is the right one. In this particular place there were formerly no highways which were not repairable ratione tenuræ, and if the appellants' contention is right the result might be that, the sum to be paid by way of composition having to be fixed once for all, there would, if the expenses of repair increased in course of time, be no method of providing for the increase. In the same way, the contribution of an individual towards the highway expenses might be fixed at a sum which might in course of time become utterly inadequate to represent the burden of the liability to repair the particular highway from the burden of repairing which he had been discharged, or utterly inadequate to represent a fair proportionate share of the general highway expenses. Take for example the case of a person liable ratione tenuræ to repair a country lane. The sum to be paid by him under section 35 would be fixed with reference to the then existing state of things, and would consequently be moderate in amount; suppose he turned his property into a building estate and thereby caused the traffic to increase, if he had remained liable ratione tenuræ the increased expense of maintaining the road would have fallen on him, but if the sum to be paid by him had been fixed once for all he would derive a benefit at the expense of the community on whom the whole of the increase would fall.

It may be said that the respondents' construction of the section may operate harshly and may impose additional and even unjust burdens on individuals, but enactments of this kind are for the general benefit, and although there may be occasional injustice or hardship such cases would be rare. It seems to me that the more reasonable conclusion is that where the Legislature says that the highway shall hereafter be maintained and repaired by the parish, it means what it says, and a highway cannot be a highway repairable by the parish if some of the parishioners are exempt from contribution to the expense. If, as in the present case, the burden in the shape of highway rates cast upon the person liable ratione tenuræ by reason of the extinction of that liability is the same in amount as that previously existing, the sum to be paid by way of composition would be fixed at a nominal amount, and so no injustice would be done.

The second question was whether the judgment of the quarter sessions on the appeal in 1881 operated as an estoppel in the present case. Questions of estoppel often raise difficulties, not as to the principle, but as to the application of the principle. In Reg. v. Hutchings Lord Selborne, quoting from the Duchess of Kington's case, said: "'The judgment,' said Chief Justice De Grey, 'of a court of concurrent' (or of exclusive) 'jurisdiction, directly upon the point, is conclusive upon the same matter between the same parties coming incidentally in question in another court for a different purpose. But neither the judgment of a concurrent or exclusive jurisdiction is evidence' (that is, as I understand the meaning of the Chief Justice, conclusive evidence) 'of any matter which came collaterally in question, though within their jurisdiction; nor of any matter incidentally cognizable, nor of any matter to be inferred by argument from the judgment.'" The judgment of the quarter sessions in 1881 was that the rate then in question must be quashed. It followed that that rate was bad, and as between the same parties that question could not again be discussed; but the construction of section 35 of the Highway Act of 1862 was not one of the things necessarily involved in the judgment of the quarter sessions in 1881. It seems to me that Reg. v. Hutchings is very near this case. Mr. Bethune, who argued this case as well as it could be argued, contended that Reg. v. Hutchings was distinguishable on the ground that there is a difference between the judgment of a court of quarter sessions, which is a court of record, and a decision of a magistrate. That is so, no doubt, for some purposes, but the decision in Reg. v. Hutchings proceeded on no such ground as that, and there is nothing in that case to support the contention that in cases of estoppel there is any difference between a decision of a court of record and a court of summary jurisdiction.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the respondents are entitled to judgment.

KENNEDY, J.—I am of the same opinion, and on the same grounds.

LEICESTER COUNTY COUNCIL v. LEICESTER ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE. (a.)

Poor law—Rating—Exemption—Buildings occupied for police purposes—Chief constable's residence—43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 64.

By section 64 of the Local Government Act, 1888, the buildings used by the police at Leicester, then vested in the justices, became the property of the county council.

The chief constable for the county, on his appointment to that office, had to reside in a certain part of the police premises, and the assessment committee assessed that portion of the police buildings to the poor rate.

Held, that such rate should be quashed, because that part of the police premises occupied by the chief constable was occupied by him for the purposes of the police, and the fact that he was permitted to keep his wife and family there also rendered his occupation thereof none the less an exclusive occupation of that part of the building for the purpose of the county police.

Special case under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 11, after notice of appeal against a poor rate made on the chief constable's residence at Leicester. The question was whether a building used as the headquarters of the Leicester County Constabulary in the town of Leicester, part of which was used by the chief constable in his official capacity as a residence—the rest being admittedly occupied for ordinary police purposes—was liable to be rated.

In 1867 the police premises, including the chief constable's residence, had been assessed to the poor rate of St. Martin's Parish, Leicester. At that time the property was vested in the justices, and they appealed against the assessment, and a case (Reg. v. St. Martin's, Leicester, 15 W. R. 1036, L. R. 2 Q. B. 493) was stated for the opinion of the court of Queen's Bench, which court decided that the justices were not liable to poor rates for such premises. By virtue of the Local Government Act, 1888, the premises in question passed from the justices and vested in the county council. Since 1867 neither the justices nor the county council had been rated for the premises until in April, 1897, this rate was made in reference only to that part of the premises occupied rent-free by the chief constable, and it was not disputed that it was a condition of his appointment that he must reside there in his official capacity.

The defendants having made the rate, the Leicester County Council appealed to quarter sessions, and a case was stated for argument.

E. W. Garrett (S. Everard with him), for the appellants.—The question for the opinion of the court is whether this rate can be levied. We contend that no part of the building ought to be rated.

He referred to Reg. v. St. Martin's, Leicester, 15 W. R. 1036, L. R. 2 Q. B. 493.

Premises occupied for the purposes of the police are exempted, and quarters resided in by the chief constable come within that class of buildings. The fact that his wife and family live there also makes no difference: Reg. v. Stewart, 6 W. R. 35, 8 E. & B. 360; Gambier v. Lydford Justices, 2 W. R. 226, 3 E. & B. 346; Martin v. West Derby Assessment Committee, 31 W. R. 489, 11 Q. B. D. 145; and Reg. v. Lancashire Justices, 6 W. R. 74, 27 L. J. M. C. 220.

Hugo Young and C. B. Marriott, for the respondents.—The reason why the case was stated is that since the authorities that have been cited were decided the ownership of these premises has been transferred by virtue of section 64 of the Local Government Act, 1888, c. 41, from the justices to the Leicester County Council; and another fact that has altered the previous state of matters is that in two decisions in 1896 (County Council of Middlesex v. Assessment Committee of St. George's Union, 45 W. R. 215, [1897] 1 Q. B. 64, and Worcestershire County Council v. Assessment Committee of St. Nicholas, Worcester, 45 W. R. 309, [1897] 1 Q. B. 480) the Court of Appeal decided that the court in looking at a building used partly for Crown purposes and partly for county council purposes, might split up the building and consider whether a portion of it was rateable, although another portion of it was not. Prior to 1888 all these buildings were vested in the justices, who had always been regarded as the servants of the Crown. Now premises occupied by the county council for administrative purposes are liable to be rated, and the respondents claim that they are entitled to split up the building according to the purposes in respect of which each part was used by the county council, as had been done in other cases, such, for example, as the Shire-hall in the Worcester case. The question is whether this portion, used as a place of residence for the chief constable and his family, is exclusively occupied for Crown purposes. If it is not exclusively used for Crown purposes it is not exempt and the respondents' submission that part at any rate of it being used for the chief constable's private purposes is liable to the rate: Greig v. University of Edinburgh, L. R. 1 Sc. & Div. 348.

THE COURT allowed the appeal.

WILLS, J.—The case has been very clearly put by Mr. Young, and he has argued his point in the only way possible. It seems that this case is free from difficulty and it is very undesirable to encourage an attempt such as this to upset established authorities and privileges. The sole question raised is whether the occupation by the chief constable of the county is an occupation of that part of the police buildings exclusively for police purposes. The chief constable was required so soon as he was appointed to the office to live there in order that he might always be at hand and ready to discharge his duties. There is no doubt that the building generally was occupied by the police for the purposes of the police, and there is no doubt that premises so occupied are not liable to poor-rate. The only question was whether the residence of this officer being used by his family as well as himself could be treated as a part of the building set apart and used for private purposes—that is, for a purpose other than for the purposes of the police. Now, as he had to live there because it was the head office of the county constabulary and he, as the chief constable, was required to be there so as to be in immediate communication with all parts of his district, does it make a difference as to the rateability of this portion that his wife and family lived with him? It would be an absurdity to hold that it did. A wife and family have been held to be a kind of necessary appendage and must be provided for when a house or other quarters are allotted to a public servant. I appreciate the point taken that the old decisions have ceased to be conclusive authorities because of the change brought about by the Local Government Act, 1888, c. 41, and I feel that there may be cases in which premises formerly vested in the justices and then exempted from liability to rates may now when occupied by the county council no longer be exempted because by the changes brought about by the Act of 1888 a new principle of severing a building into portions for the purposes of levying rates has sprung up which before was never thought of. In this case, however, it seems to me clear that the building was occupied by the chief constable for police purposes, and that he occupied them none the less exclusively for police purposes because he was allowed to keep his wife and family there. My judgment must therefore be for the appellants with costs.

KENNEDY, J., concurred.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. } Admiralty. } Feb. 9.

"THE RIPON CITY" OR "SILVIA." (a.)

Ship—Possession—Sale of ship by majority owners—Judgment by consent—Agreed damages—Meaning of "such deductions as the interveners may be able in law to establish as proper from the respective shares and interests of the plaintiffs."

The owners of fifty-two sixty-fourth shares in a ship—the ship having been arrested in an action in rem for master's wages and disbursements—put in bail in the action and paid the amount found due by the court.

They subsequently, without the consent of the owners or mortgagees of the remaining shares in the ship, entered into a contract for the sale of the whole ship to a foreign purchaser, and delivered her to him, receiving the total purchase-money. The mortgagees of eight of the remaining twelve sixty-fourth shares in the ship and the sequestrator of the mortgagee of those shares then arrested the ship in an action of possession, and the owners of the fifty-two sixty-fourth shares having intervened in that action, agreed to settle the suit by paying to the plaintiffs eight sixty-fourth parts of the purchase-money they had received for the ship, less such deductions as the interveners might be able to establish as proper from the respective shares and interests of the plaintiffs.

Held, that a sum paid by the interveners for brokerage at 2½ per cent. was a deduction to be allowed within these words, but that the amount paid for wages and disbursements, and sums paid for cancelling an onerous charter-party entered into for the ship and for repairs to her not required by the purchasers, were not allowable deductions.

Motion by mortgagees in objection to registrar's report.

This was an action of possession carried on on behalf of Messrs. Green, Holland, & Co., the owners of one sixty-fourth share in the vessel Ripon City; of Thomas Ronaldson, the owner of one other sixty-fourth share in the same vessel; (and by amendment) of Elizabeth Balls and R. K. Donald, each the mortgagee of four sixty-fourth shares in her; and of T. McLintock, the sequestrator according to the Scotch law; and of M'Lean & Co., the mortgagors of the above last-mentioned mortgaged shares in the vessel against The Ripon City. The plaintiffs claimed in the action a declaration that a pretended sale of The Ripon City made by Sir Christopher Furness and Furness, Withy, & Co. (the owners of fifty-two sixty-fourth shares in her and her managing owners) on or about the 20th of April, 1897, to a foreign purchaser was null and void, a decree that possession of the ship should be given to the plaintiffs, and that all things might be done to give and restore to the plaintiffs a legal title to The Ripon City and their shares therein.

Sir Christopher Furness and Furness, Withy, & Co. appeared as interveners in the suit, and in their defence, after admitting that they had sold The Ripon City to Paolo Viale, an Italian subject, for £8,650, and that the British certificate of registry of the said vessel had been closed on the 20th of April, 1897, alleged that they had always been ready to account to the plaintiffs for their proportion of the said purchase-money, or alternatively to pay to the plaintiffs the fair market value of their shares, and brought into court the sum of £400 as sufficient to satisfy the claims of Messrs. Green, Holland, & Co. and Thomas Ronaldson in the action. This amount of money was taken out of court by the plaintiffs, Messrs. Green, Holland, & Co. and Thomas Ronaldson.

On the 7th of August, 1897, the action came on to be heard, and the court made a decree by consent of all parties that judgment should be entered for the remaining plaintiffs in one-eighth of £8,650, with interest thereon at 10 per cent. per annum from the 17th of April, 1897, to the 7th of August, 1897, and per cent. per annum on the amount of the judgment found due from the 7th of August, 1897, until payment, "less such deductions as the interveners might be able in law to establish as proper from the respective shares and interests of the plaintiffs; the question of such deductions to be referred to the registrar and merchants."

The registrar with regard to the deductions to be made in accordance with the above judgment reported as follows:

In the account filed by the interveners they claimed to deduct from the purchase-money various sums amounting in all to £6,943 1s. 8d., leaving a balance of only £1,490 13s. 4d., of which one-eighth would be payable to the plaintiffs. At the reference, however, this claim was reduced by the withdrawal of certain items to £5,541 7s. 11d. The deductions still claimed include a sum of £795 5s. which had been paid by the ship's broker before the sale of the vessel, £325 paid shortly before the sale to cancel a disadvantageous charter entered into by Neil M'Lean & Co. while the vessel was in their hands, and £400 which had been paid by Furness, Withy, & Co. to the master in settlement of an action of wages and disbursements instituted in his name against the vessel on the 17th of February, 1897. It was held by Barnes, J., at the trial of this action that this settlement of the action was illegal and void, and I do not see how the mortgagees can be held liable for any of the other payments above mentioned, none of which would confer a lien on the ship. As regards the plaintiff Elizabeth Balls, it was suggested that she, at least, had become liable as mortgagee in possession for the ships' liabilities at that time, and it is true that in one of the letters from her solicitors to the solicitors for the interveners dated the 11th of February, 1897, she was described as a mortgagee now in possession of four shares, but I think it was rightly contended by her counsel that she was not really a mortgagee in possession as nothing really had been done by her to take possession of the shares until she was joined as a plaintiff in this action on the 21st of July, 1897, and that she could not as a mere mortgagee be liable for a share of the expenses of working the ship or of cancelling a charter. The next deduction claimed was for a sum of £1,281 0s. 2d. found due to the master in his action against the ship for wages and disbursements, including his liability on certain bills of exchange which fell due and were dishonoured in August and October, 1896: see The Ripon City, [1897] P. 226, 45 W. R. Dig. 153. The amount was paid on behalf of Messrs. Furness, Withy, & Co. This was a debt for which there was an existing lien at the time of the sale of the ship in April, 1897, and it seems clear upon the authorities that it must take precedence of the mortgagees' claim. In fact it has been so decided by Barnes, J., in giving judgment in the master's action, where he said, "I may notice in passing that in the present case the eight sixty-fourth shares standing in the name of Neil M'Lean & Co., though mortgaged, are therefore subject to the plaintiffs' claim": The Ripon City, [1897] P. 226, at p. 244. This, I presume, will apply to the master's costs in the same action, but not to the costs of defending it. There remains the costs of the repairs which the vessel was undergoing at the time of her sale for which a total deduction is claimed of £2,171 18s. 2d. The general rule seems clear that a mortgagee not in possession is not liable for outlays incurred in improving the mortgaged property, but a question arises in this case on the following words in the contract for sale: "The sellers agree to complete No. 3 survey and hand certificate to purchaser." It was agreed on behalf of the managing owners that the contract price of the vessel was really not £8,650, but that sum less the cost of repairs, and that the plaintiffs are only entitled to one-eighth of the purchase-money after making that deduction. This would probably have been the case if, before commencing the repairs, the vessel had been sold in consideration of her being repaired by the vendors. But here the repairs had almost been completed before the date of the agreement for sale, and it did not even appear that they had been undertaken with a view to that particular sale. . . . It seems to me that the plaintiffs were entitled to one-eighth of the value of the vessel in her condition at the date of the agreement for sale, including so much of the repairs as had then been done, and it is evident from the dates that the cost of any repairs which then remained to be completed must have formed a very small portion of the total costs. The managing owners have claimed to deduct no less than £2,171 18s. 2d., including, it seems, the cost of repairing damage sustained by the vessel being on fire at Savannah during her last voyage. But the sum for which the contractors undertook to execute according to specification the necessary repairs for passing her No. 3 survey, the completion of which was a condition of the sale, was only £840, and there is nothing to show that the repairs still remaining to be done at the date of the contract for sale formed part of the classification repairs represented by that sum, nor that the costs of any such uncompleted repairs was not fully covered by insurance in respect of which it appears from the correspondence that the managing owners expected to recover about £1,400. In our judgment the managing owners have clearly failed to prove what, in our judgment, it clearly lay upon them to prove—namely, that any part of the cost of the repairs is properly chargeable to the mortgagees. The broker's commission of 2½ per cent. on the purchase-money appears to be a reasonable and proper deduction. I think the interveners ought to pay the costs of the reference.

Both the plaintiffs and interveners appealed against the report of the registrar, the plaintiffs asking that the report should be varied by the deduction of the 2½ per cent. brokerage made by the registrar being disallowed, and the interveners claiming that they were entitled to have the items disallowed by the registrar as above stated allowed them in account as deductions proper to be made under the decree in the action.

Jan. 17.—F. Laing, on behalf of the plaintiffs, brought on the appeal before the President (Sir F. Jeune) by way of motion, the hearing being continued on the 18th of January and the 19th of January.

Aspinall, Q.C., and Dawson Miller, appeared on behalf of the interveners.

The argument of counsel appear from the judgment.

The following authorities were cited as to equitable interests between owners and mortgagees of ships being recognized by the court and as to the power of the court to make a decree as to the plaintiffs' title: The Inneafallen, L. R. 1 Adm. & Ecc. 72, 14 W. R. Adm. Dig. 26; Batthyany v. Rouch, 29 W. R. 665, 44 L. T. Rep. 177; The Rose, 21 W. R. 511, L. R. 4 Adm. & Ecc. 6.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 9. — JEUNE, P. — The questions in this case arise on objections to a report made by the learned registrar in pursuance of a judgment of the court given by consent, and relate to the distribution of the proceeds of a vessel called The Ripon City, called at the time of the sale The Ripon City or Silvia.

The deductions now in question which were claimed in argument before the registrar and before me are, I think, divisible under four heads; first the sum of £216 5s. claimed as brokerage at 2½ per cent. on the purchase-money. This sum has been allowed by the registrar, and I think rightly. The effect of the decree by consent was, in my opinion, that Mrs. Balls and Mr. R. K. Donald, whom I will speak of as the plaintiffs, are to be treated as acquiescing in the sale as a sale, but with the reservation of all rights as to distribution of the proceeds; the gross sum realized being £8,650. It was argued before me that the plaintiffs as mortgagees could on a sale add their costs of it to their claim on the purchase-money, and should be permitted to do so now. No doubt the plaintiffs could do this as against their mortgagors but not as against the owners of other shares in the ship. Secondly, the most important question in this case arises with regard to the maritime liens on the ship which were cleared off by the interveners. The registrar has allowed the deduction of the amounts secured by lien which were paid by the interveners to Messrs. Cory in consequence of the decision of Barnes, J. (see The Ripon City, [1897] P. 226), and also of Messrs. Cory's costs on the ground that this lien was in existence at the time of the sale of The Ripon City to the Italian purchaser. But there appears to me to be no difference between the different maritime liens imposed by the conduct of Neil M'Lean & Co., and the case is the same as if the interveners had, instead of giving bail, then paid all such liens.

There is, then, but one question of law involved, and to this counsel for the interveners addressed their main argument. They contended that on the true construction of the transaction between the interveners and Messrs. Neil M'Lean & Co. the interveners ceased to be owners, and became either mortgagees, or at least unpaid vendors, with a security for payment of the purchase-money; that they took possession in order to enforce their security; that they could not enforce their security for sale without clearing off the maritime liens on the ship; and so, having not indeed relieved the mortgagees of the eight shares from personal liability, but having relieved their property from a prior incumbrance, fully-licensed house known as the Rising Sun Inn, Bradford-on-Avon.

Prior to March, 1897, the premises were rated at £18 15s. gross and rateable value at £15. In January of that year Messrs. Wilkins Brothers, brewers, purchased them at public auction for £2,810, and they were the present owners. The premises were let by them to White as a tied house on an annual tenancy of £27 10s., and he is at the present time their tenant.

In March, 1897, a new valuation list was made, and the gross rental and rateable value appeared as £85 and £70 respectively. In September of that year these assessments on appeal by White were reduced by the assessment committee to £70 and £58. White then appealed from that assessment to quarter sessions, and at the hearing evidence was given that in recent years there had been great competition among rival firms of brewers in the district for the purchase or renting on lease of licensed houses in order to sub-let them as tied houses, the brewers looking for a return on the capital not merely to the rent charged, but to the increased profits made by the sale of their beer to the tied tenant. It was proved that for this reason if the licensed premises had been in the market to be let on a tenancy for a term of years, brewers intending to convert them into a "tied" house would be willing to give a rent sufficiently high to support the assessment appealed against, but that if the house was let on a yearly tenancy as a free house brewers would probably give a rent higher by £10 or £15 a year than the rent of £27 10s. paid by White as an ordinary tenant, but that such an increased rent would not be sufficiently high to support the assessment appealed against.

The quarter sessions held that in arriving at the value for rating purposes of the premises it was the hereditament, independently of and without reference to any personal contract with the brewers, that had to be assessed, in fact the free house, not excluding the competition of brewers as hypothetical tenants, but excluding any personal contract made between the publican and his brewers. They therefore put the rateable value of the premises in question at £35.

The assessment committee appealed.

Foote, Q.C. (Radcliffe and T. H. Parr with him), for the appellants, contended that the net annual value of such licensed premises within the meaning of the Parochial Assessment Act, 1836, s. 1, was the full value to the owner and not their value to the tenant in fact occupying the same. The rent in the present instance was admittedly less than the market value of the premises: Reg. v. Wells, 15 W. R. 1059, L. R. 2 Q. B. 542.

T. T. Bucknill, Q.C., and Hon. H. L. Lopes, for the respondent, argued that the true test of the net annual value of such licensed premises was the rent that an ordinary tenant would give intending to occupy from year to year the premises as a "free" house for the purpose of carrying on there his own retail business as a publican; not what the brewers in competition with other brewers would give for the purpose of converting the premises into a "tied" house: Dodds v. The Assessment Committee of South Shields, 43 W. R. 532, [1895] 2 Q. B. 133 (see also London County Council v. City of London Breweries, [1898] 1 Q. B. 387, at p. 393, per Wright, J., as to principle laid down in Dodd's case).

Cur. adv. vult.

May 24.—RIDLEY, J., read the following judgment: This was a case stated by the quarter sessions for the county of Wilts upon an appeal by the occupier of a public-house in the parish of Bradford-on-Avon against the assessment of such house to the poor rate. The assessment committee had assessed the house at £85 gross estimated rental and £70 net rateable value, but the quarter sessions reduced the assessment to £35 gross estimated rental and £28 net rateable value. It was not contended before us that the value put on the house by the assessment committee could be maintained, but it was contended that the gross estimated rental should be £45, and not £35. The point arose in the following way: The house in January, 1897, was purchased by a firm of brewers for a large sum and by them let to the appellant as a tied house on a rental of £27 10s. per annum. It was not argued that this figure furnished the proper rental on which to base the rateable value, nor, since the decision of Overseers of the Poor of Sunderland-near-the-Sea v. Sunderland Poor Law Union, 13 W. R. 943, 34 L. J. M. C. 121, was it possible to do so with success. The rental must be estimated according to the statute 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, which statute requires it to be based on the corporeal hereditament, taking into account the more permanent elements of value to be found therein, but without allowing for the effect of temporary contracts and other such accidents. It is the rent at which the premises may reasonably be expected to let on a yearly tenancy, not that at which they may let when certain contracts of a personal nature affecting the rental are in existence between the landlord and tenant. The hypothetical tenant is to be a tenant supposed to take the hereditament as it stands and used as it is, so far as the nature of the premises goes—that is to say, as a public-house, as ironworks, or dwelling-house, as the case may be; but, while that is true, the value of the hereditament is not to be affected by contracts or conditions not directly bearing on the occupation or use of the property, but of a personal and collateral character. Now, in this present case the contention of the respondent is set out in paragraph 11 of the case as follows: "The true test was the rent an ordinary tenant intending to occupy the premises from year to year, as a 'free' house for the purpose of carrying on his own retail business as a publican would give, not what a brewer in competition with other brewers would give for the purpose of converting the premises into a tied house for the exclusive sale of his (the brewer's) beers, thereby increasing the profits of his own business." This appears to me to be correct according to the rules above stated. The "ordinary tenant intending to occupy the premises as a free house from year to year" is in the same position as the hypothetical tenant of the statute; he is willing to give the rent for the premises, not for the business carried on upon them. The rent so estimated is found by the case to be £30 to £35. What, on the other hand, was the contention of the appellants? It is set out in paragraph 12, and was that the net annual value of the premises was "their value to the owner, and not their value to the tenant in fact occupying the same, and that the premises should be assessed at the value at which they would let to a hypothetical tenant from year to year (all possible competitors who would be willing to take the premises from the owner being taken into account as possible hypothetical tenants), and that therefore the competition of brewers ought to be taken into consideration, although they did not in fact themselves intend to occupy the premises, and that the area of competition ought not to be restricted to such intending tenants as would themselves occupy the premises in question." This can hardly be understood without reference to paragraph 10, from which

by the House of Lords in Thorne v. Cann, [1896] A. C. 11, 43 W. R. Dig. 121. "Now, in a court of Equity it has always been held that the mere fact of a charge having been paid off does not decide the question whether it is extinguished. If a charge is paid off by a tenant for life without any expression of his intention, it is well established that he retains the benefit of it against the inheritance. Although he has not declared his intention of keeping it alive it is presumed that his intention was to keep it alive, but it is manifestly for his own benefit. On the other hand, when the owner of an estate in fee or in tort pays off a charge the presumption is the other way; but in either case the person paying off the charge can by expressly declaring his intention, either keep it alive or destroy it. If there is no reason for keeping it alive then, especially in the case of an owner in fee, equity will, in the absence of any declaration of his intention, destroy it, but if there is any reason for keeping it alive such as the existence of another incumbrance, equity will not destroy it." In the present case there was, no doubt, strong reason on the part of the interveners for keeping alive the charge enforceable by law, and no doubt also the interveners could have taken an assignment of the rights of the lien-holders when they paid off to a trustee or even perhaps to themselves. But is there enough or indeed anything beyond the fact of the payment off to show that the interveners, in giving bail, which I have treated as equivalent to paying off the maritime liens, intended to keep them alive for the purpose of maintaining a priority for such payment as against the mortgagees? I cannot think that there is. The interveners, when they gave bail, probably did not believe in the validity of the arrest; but in determining to put an end to it I think that their real object, or at least an obvious and sufficient object, was to keep the conduct of the sale of the ship in their own hands and so certainly obtain the brokerage and probably get a better price for the vessel instead of allowing her to run the risk of being condemned by the court and sold by auction, and they did this prudently enough for their own benefit partly as holders of at least fifty-two sixty-fourths of her, and partly as entitled to claim against Neil M'Lean & Co. anything their equity of redemption of the eight shares might produce. It would be, I think, a mere fiction to suppose that it was intended to keep the liens alive for any purpose, I can therefore discover no ground on which the interveners can claim a priority over the mortgagees for any of their payments in discharge of liens. Thirdly, when the interveners took possession of The Ripon City she was under a charter-party made by Neil M'Lean & Co. This charter-party was of an onerous kind, and accordingly the interveners on the 9th of April, 1897, paid £325 for its cancellation. It is contended that before that date both Mrs. Balls and Mr. R. K. Donald had become mortgagees in possession. This turns on certain correspondence which passed between the interveners, Mrs. Balls' solicitor, and Mrs. Balls herself. There is no doubt that in this correspondence Mrs. Balls' solicitor spoke of her as "mortgagee now in possession of four shares," and the interveners accepted that statement in their replies. But it is clear to me that on the side of Mrs. Balls there was misapprehension of the probable effect in law of the language employed, and on the side of the interveners there was misapprehension of the legal effect of Mrs. Balls becoming a mortgagee in possession, and on the whole I am of opinion that no act was done by or on behalf of Mrs. Balls which made her a mortgagee in possession. I come to the same conclusion as to Mr. Donald, the evidence with regard to his case being of the same character, but somewhat weaker than that with regard to Mrs. Balls. But whether they took possession or not neither Mrs. Balls nor Mr. Donald gave any express authority to pay anything for the cancellation of the charter, though Mrs. Balls was aware that the cancellation was intended and consented to it, and in the absence of any such authority I do not think that the interests of either of them can be held liable.

Fourthly, the remaining point turns on the claim to make deductions in respect of the repairs to the vessel. This clearly must be limited to the cost of any repairs done in consequence of the promise in the agreement for sale to the Italian purchaser. I think such costs should be deducted if it could be proved that they were incurred after and in pursuance of the agreement for sale. But I agree with the finding of the learned registrar that no such proof has been given, and I have no doubt that the repairs were practically completed before the agreement for sale.

I am of opinion, therefore, that the only deduction to be allowed is the claim for brokerage, and the account must be reformed accordingly. The plaintiffs, of course, cannot have more than the amount of their mortgages and interest. I think that the plaintiffs are entitled to the costs of the action, of the reference before the registrar, and of these objections.

LIQUIDATION ESTATES PURCHASE CO. v. WILLOUGHBY AND OTHERS. (a.)

Mortgage—Assignment of fund—Notice—Purchase of mortgaged property—Payment off of incumbrance—Intention to keep alive.

Where a person in possession of a fund on which others have charges has received notice of an assignment of his rights by one of the persons entitled to a charge, and nevertheless makes payments to the assignor, the rights of the several persons entitled to the charge, to what remains of the fund, cannot in any way be affected by such payments.

Where neither the deed nor the circumstances under which an assignment is executed shew an intention to extinguish an incumbrance paid off, such incumbrance will not merge, but be considered as still existing.

brewers might for reasons connected with their own business be willing to give were to be treated as the gross estimated rental of the premises because those sums might be got from brewers, then it was wrong. The decision of the quarter sessions was right in principle. They did not appear to have adopted that part of White's contention which was erroneous. They had not "excluded brewers as competitors," as they were invited to do, but they had for some purpose considered the effects of that competition. Their order must be affirmed.

MILLER v. JUSTICES OF DUDLEY. (a.)

Licensing Acts—Serving reputed prostitutes—Reasonable time for refreshments—Affirmative evidence of offence alone will support conviction—Licensing Act, 1872 (c. 94), s. 14—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (c. 49), s. 39.

M. was convicted under section 14 of the Licensing Act, 1872, of having permitted a reputed prostitute to remain on licensed premises longer than a reasonable time for the woman to take refreshments.

Held, that the conviction must be quashed because the evidence of the offence having been committed given by the prosecution was in fact circumstantial; and before a publican could be convicted affirmative evidence in every case must be given by the prosecution;

Held, also, that under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, s. 39, the onus of proving the offence rests on the prosecutor, and that the defendant was right in not calling evidence to rebut the charge.

Case stated by the justices for the county of Worcester.

The appellant, Mary Miller, had been convicted before the justices at sessions of an offence under section 14 of the Licensing Act, 1872, and the question for the decision of the court was whether that conviction ought to stand.

The appellant was the occupier of a beerhouse known as the "Mountain Ash," in the borough of Dudley, and was summoned for having on the 29th of September, 1897, permitted reputed prostitutes to frequent her licensed premises and remain there longer than was necessary for the obtaining of reasonable refeshments contrary to section 14 of the Licensing Act, 1872.

The facts proved before the magistrates were that a woman named Higgins of the unfortunate class on the night in question was found upon the appellant's premises by the informant, a police-constable. As soon as he entered the appellant spoke to the woman, who immediately left. No evidence was offered as to whether the woman had gone to the house for the purpose of obtaining refreshment or not, nor how long she had been upon the premises, and all that the case stated was that at the time the informant saw Higgins she was not partaking of any refreshment.

The appellant called no witnesses and contended that the evidence offered by the prosecution was not sufficient to justify a conviction under the section, since the prosecution was bound to prove, not only that the publican knowingly permitted reputed prostitutes to resort to his premises, but also that he allowed women of that class to remain there longer than was necessary for the purpose of refreshment—the mere serving of such persons being in itself no offence—and that the prosecution had offered no evidence at all to prove that she had allowed Higgins to remain on the premises longer than the woman was entitled to be there.

The majority of the magistrates were of opinion that upon the evidence the appeal should be dismissed with costs, subject to the decision of the High Court whether, on the facts, the conviction could be maintained.

Hon. A. Lyttelton (T. R. V. Merchant with him), for the appellant.—The onus of proving that an offence has been committed rests on the prosecution. It is not sufficient for the prosecution to state facts from which the inference may be drawn that an offence was committed. There is no evidence here that Higgins had been served with any refreshment, nor as to the length of time she was on the premises, or that the appellant knew she was there at all until, seeing the constable enter, she saw her for the first time and at once asked her to leave. [He was stopped.]

Horace Avory, for the justices.—The prosecution gave all such evidence as it was possible for them to put forward, and it rested on the defendant to show that the charge was ill-founded. Under the Act of 9 Geo. 4 it was an offence to permit such a person as Higgins to frequent licensed premises at all. Then case after case was decided in which if the reputed prostitute was merely supplied with refreshment and left so soon as she had partaken of it no penalty was imposed. This case law became statute law by the passing of this 14th section of the Act of 1872. It was true that the constable said he did not see the woman take any refreshment, and the inference was that either she had not gone there to get refreshment or, having finished whatever she had ordered, she had remained on after the time when she ought to have left. [WILLS, J.—There is a third inference. The time that the constable entered was the time that the woman ought to leave the premises.] When a charge was lodged against a person under a statute it was for the person accused to prove that he came within some exception in his favour under that statute, not for the prosecution to prove that the exception or proviso did not assist the defendant.

WILLS, J.—I think this conviction cannot be supported. I should be most reluctant indeed to give a decision which would throw any real difficulty in the way of administering the law under this section; I am bound to consider the evidence from both sides, and it is clear, whatever may be the real facts—and I admit I have a very strong suspicion of what they really were—that the evidence offered by the prosecution as stated in the case will not support the charge. There is no evidence to prove that the innkeeper knew Higgins was on the premises—she might have been there an hour, or she might have only just come in—or that Higgins went there except for refreshments, or had remained longer than a reasonable time to take refreshments. A conviction ought not to be obtained on mere suspicion, however strong the circumstantial evidence might appear to be. During the argument our attention was called to the changes the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879,

s. 39, has made in the procedure under the Act of 1872. It was contended that the onus of proving that reputed prostitutes had not remained beyond the time reasonably required for them to take refreshments now rested on the innkeeper. The charge, Mr. Avory contended, having been made against the defendant, the onus of disproving it rested on him. That, in my opinion, is a wrong contention. It rests with a prosecution in every case to prove the charge made. For the prosecution to succeed the party alleging the offence must make out an affirmative case. The appeal will therefore be allowed, and the conviction quashed.

KENNEDY, J., concurred.

Lyttelton.—Will your lordships allow the appeal with costs?

WILLS, J.—I think there should be no order for costs made against the justices, although they have opposed this appeal, since in doing so they have assisted the court very much.

HORTON & CO. (LIMITED) (Appellants) v. THE GUARDIANS OF WALSALL UNION (Respondents). (a.)

Poor rates—Gross estimated rental—Rateable value—Appeal against rateable value—Right of rating authority to adduce evidence to increase gross value in rate-book—Parochial Assessments Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96), s. 1.

On a ratepayer's appeal to quarter sessions against a poor rate on the ground that, though the estimated gross rental in the rate-book is correct, the rateable value is too high in consequence of a sufficient sum not having been allowed for deductions, the rating authority are bound to accept the gross value as appearing in the rate-book, and cannot, in order to show that the rateable value is not too high, give any evidence to show that in fact the gross estimated rental as appearing in the rate-book is too low.

Case stated by the court of quarter sessions for the County of Stafford.

Upon the hearing of an appeal by the quarter sessions on the 17th of November, 1897, against a poor rate whereby the appellants were rated in respect of certain premises known as the Alma Works occupied by the appellants, in which rate the appellants were described as the owners and occupiers of the premises, and in which rate the gross estimated rental was put down at £750, the rateable value at £600, and the amount of the rate was 2s. in the pound, it was ordered that the rateable value be reduced to £415, and the appeal allowed subject to this case.

The appellants were the owners and occupiers of premises which comprise an area of about four and a-half acres of land upon which are erected buildings, machinery, and fixed plant.

Upon objection by the appellants to the assessment committee of the Walsall Union the gross estimated rental was reduced to £725, and the rateable value to £544. The appellants appealed to the quarter sessions, thinking the reductions made by the assessment committee insufficient.

On the hearing of the appeal the appellants accepted the above gross estimated rental of £725 as correct, and claimed, in order to arrive at the correct net annual value, to deduct from the said sum of £725 the sum of £310 at the least, which the appellants alleged represented the average annual expenditure upon repairs, insurance, and other expenses necessary to maintain the premises in a state to command the rent at which the same might reasonably be expected to let from year to year.

The respondents having made a re-survey of the premises, admitted that the annual average sum of £310 at least was required for insurance, repairs, and other expenses necessary to maintain the premises in a state to command the rent at which the same might reasonably be expected to let from year to year, but they said that such rent was in fact more than that shown in the rate as the gross annual value.

The respondents for the purpose of satisfying the court that the true net annual or rateable value of the premises upon which the rate was made according to the statute of 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, section 1, was not less than £544, and that the appellants were not aggrieved by the gross estimated rental being underestimated in the rate, proposed to prove that the gross estimated rental and rateable value were in fact understated in the rate-book and valuation list, and for that purpose proposed to give evidence of the total present structural value of the buildings and such of the plant and machinery as was properly to be taken into account as enhancing the annual value, and to take a percentage upon such structural value which would give the true rateable value, and to such true rateable value the respondents agreed that the sum of not less than £310 should be added to arrive at the true estimated rental; and the respondents also proposed to show that the apparently insufficient deduction from the gross estimated rental to rateable value arose from both these items being considerably underestimated.

The respondents did not claim that either the gross estimated rental of £725, or the rateable value of £544, should be increased, but that the real point at issue was the net annual or rateable value of the premises, and they claimed the right to call the above evidence to show that the rate of £54 8s. (being the rate on the reduced rateable value of £544) was not made upon a higher sum than the true net annual value; and they also contended that in manufactories where the wear and tear of buildings and plant is great it is impracticable to enter a high gross estimated rental in the poor rate.

The appellants contended that the amount appearing in the valuation list as the gross estimated rental was conclusive, and that as that amount was admitted by the appellants the only question which the court had power to decide was what were the proper deductions and the amount thereof to be made from such gross estimated rental in order to arrive at the rateable value.

The respondents contended that, specifically disclaiming as they did any application to increase the gross estimated rental, they were entitled to adduce evidence which would show that the true net annual or rateable value of the premises had not been exceeded in the assessment, notwithstanding that they would thereby incidentally show that the gross estimated rental had been estimated at too low a figure.

The justices in quarter sessions were of opinion that the evidence offered by the respondents was, in the circumstances, and having regard to the admissions of the respondents, inadmissible, and they accordingly rejected the same, and ordered the rateable value to be reduced as aforesaid to £415, and allowed the appeal.

The question for the opinion of the court was: Whether in the circumstances aforesaid, and having regard to the admissions of the respondents, the justices rightly rejected the said evidence.

Alfred Young and G. C. Lewis, for the respondents.—The court of quarter sessions were wrong in rejecting the evidence tendered by the respondents. The real point at issue was the net annual or rateable value, and the evidence rejected was to show that the net rateable value was not too high. Admitting that the amount of the deductions was £310, we were still entitled to show that the gross and rateable values were understated, and that therefore, although the deduction of £310 was made, the net rateable value would not have been less than £544. In most cases it is impossible to arrive at the gross value first, but you must arrive at the rateable first and then from that get the gross. That was the procedure adopted by the respondents here, as the evidence was to show that the net value was not less than £544. That evidence was admissible, although the effect of it may have been to show that the gross value also ought to be increased: Reg. v. Wells, 15 W. R. 1059, L. R. 2 Q. B. 542; Reg. v. Fordham (Inhabitants of), 11 A. & E. 73; Reg. v. London School Board, 55 L. J. M. C. 33, at p. 37; Denaby and Cadeby Colliery Co. v. Assessment Committee of the Doncaster Union, 78 L. T. 388.

A. T. Lawrence, Q.C., and Disturnal, for the appellants.—The quarter sessions were right in excluding this evidence. The gross estimated rental of £725 was accepted by the appellants, and the quarter sessions were bound to take that figure as settled. The deduction of £310 was admitted by the respondents, and if that sum be taken from the gross of £725, which must be taken to be fixed, then the net rateable value would stand at £415 as settled by the quarter sessions. When the gross value has once been fixed, then all that has to be done to arrive at the net is to make the necessary deductions. Section 1 of the Act 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, shows how this is to be done. Under that section you have to consider what a hypothetical tenant from year to year would give for the premises; then that rent "free of all usual tenant's rates and taxes" is the gross estimated rental, and from that there has to be deducted the "probable average annual cost of the repairs," and the result would be the net or rateable value. The present case is really concluded by the decision of Day and Phillimore, JJ., in the case of The Denaby and Cadedy Colliery Co. v. Assessment Committee of the Doncaster Union.

Alfred Young in reply.

WILLS, J.—The difference in question in this case is small; it applies to only one rating, and any mistake may be corrected in the next rating. The question, however, is one of very considerable importance in the administration of the law as regards rating. Though the case is one of very considerable difficulty, and one on which much may be said on both sides, I have come to the conclusion that the view taken by the quarter sessions was right. The real substantial subject in dispute, and the thing that in almost every case is the only one that is of the slightest importance to the parties, is the net rateable value and what it ought to stand at. I am not in the least impressed by the argument urged for the appellants that if this decision were against them they would have lost an additional chance of disturbing this rate on the ground of inequality in the assessment of the gross rateable value. That is inevitable, but I confess that that hardship does not affect my mind in the least.

What I am impressed with is that the whole of this apparatus for rating and for appeals in respect of rating is statutory, and we have to look at the statutes alone to say what ought to be done or what ought not to be done. There are very elaborate provisions in these statutes for enabling the rating authorities to arrive at a just conclusion and to get their figures right. There are also elaborate provisions for enabling appellants to appeal, which may lead to many of the figures in the rate-book being altered upon an appeal; but, as it seems to me, there is no machinery by which the correct figure for the estimated gross value can be increased after the rate is once made up. No appellant will claim to be rated higher than he is rated; but if one could conceive such a case then it might fall within the section—namely, section 1 of 41 Geo. 3, c. 23, which would give power to amend it in such a case by raising it. I do not, however, think that the parish rating authority can ever claim the benefit of that section, which enables the quarter sessions to amend a rate instead of quashing it to get the figure amended by way of increase. The rating authorities, where there is an appeal against the rates, although it involves a question as to the gross rateable value, cannot, under that section, get the figure altered in their favour or for their benefit, because the power to give relief and save the rate from being quashed only applies in cases in which, but for the Act of Parliament, the rate would have been liable to be quashed. Therefore it does not apply in a case in which there is either no appeal against the gross rateable value, or in which, there having been an appeal, it has been dropped, and no question arises in respect of it, or indeed in any case in respect of the gross estimated value being too low, because the rate would not be quashed simply because that was not high enough. Therefore there was no power under the circumstances of this case to alter the figure of the gross estimated rental, and that figure in the rate-book consequently stands, and it would be wrong to say that the magistrates are to embark upon an inquiry which might lead to a second figure—namely, the net rateable value, being altered in such a way that the relations between these two figures of gross and net values would be disregarded and violated.

I think, therefore, that it is not within the functions of the court of quarter sessions to make such an alteration—that is to say, they cannot have power to alter a rate which they may know to be wrong; and if they cannot do so, they must be confined to seeing that the proper deductions are made and to bringing the net rateable value into harmonious relation with the initial figure of the gross estimated value. This view is in consonance with the view lately expressed in the case of the Denaby and Cadeby Colliery Co. v. Doncaster Union, which expression of opinion we think was right. I may also add that there is no machinery provided for doing that which would be necessary to be done in this case in order to make the rate an harmonious and consistent one, and it is obvious that there is great convenience in insisting upon the finality of figures which have once been entered in the rate-book. A case was put during the argument in which there might be a real wrong growing out of a contrary decision to that we are now giving, because it might be, and very likely would be, that an appellant who was satisfied with the gross estimated rental, but who was dissatisfied with the amount of the deductions, might come into court with a very good case as to the amount of the deductions, might and if he were then to be met with a wholly new case of which he had no notice, as to the gross estimated rental not being sufficient, it would involve either an adjournment of the case or his having to embark upon a long inquiry of an expensive kind for which he may not be prepared, and which, in many cases, he would never have accepted if he had known that the gross estimated rental itself was going to be attacked. The view we are expressing is more consonant than the contrary view would be with the language of the first section of this Act of Will. 4, which is the starting-point in all these matters. That section starts with the gross estimated value as the thing from which deductions are to be made in order to arrive at the net; and however the gross value is to be arrived at, the Act seems upon the whole to indicate, as was said in the Denaby and Cadeby Colliery Co. v. Doncaster Union, that the gross value is the starting-point, and that the deductions are to be made from that. I think the court of quarter sessions were right in refusing to embark upon this inquiry, and that this appeal, therefore, must be dismissed.

LONDON TRAMWAYS CO. v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL. (a.)

House of Lords—Decision on question of law final.

A decision of the House of Lords once given upon a question of law is conclusive upon the House afterwards.

This was an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal affirming that of the Queen's Bench Division, whereby an application of the appellants that a certain award of Sir Frederick Bramwell made in an arbitration between the parties should be set aside or remitted to the arbitrator for further consideration was dismissed with costs.

The question before the House involved a reconsideration of previous decisions of this House—viz., Edinburgh Street Tramways Co. v. Lord Provost and Magistrates of Edinburgh, [1894] A. C. 456, and London Street Tramways Co. v. London County Council, [1894] A. C. 489, 43 W. R. Dig. 182.

Sir R. T. Reid, Q.C., and Seward Brice, Q.C. (J. R. Paget with them), for the appellants.

Freeman, Q.C., and A. T. Lyttelton, for the respondents, were not heard.

EARL OF HALSBURY, L.C.—I think your lordships are very much indebted to Sir Robert Reid and his learned junior for the candour with which this question has been raised. It would undoubtedly have been extremely inconvenient if, after hearing the case argued for a considerable time, the fact had been pointed out to us that there was a decision of this House which was conclusive upon the point. By the candour of the learned counsel, who very properly raised the question in the first instance, it has now been admitted that there is upon this very question a decision of this House.

For my own part I am prepared to say that I adhere in terms to what has been said by Lord Campbell and assented to by Lord Wensleydale, Lord Cranworth, Lord Chelmsford, and others, that a decision of this House once given upon a point of law is conclusive upon this House afterwards, and that it is impossible to raise that question again as if it was res integra, and could be re-argued, and so the House be asked to reverse its own decision. That is a principle which has been, I believe, without any real decision to the contrary, established now for some centuries, and I am therefore of opinion that in this case it is not competent for us to re-hear, and for counsel to re-argue, a question which has been recently decided.

The only trace of authority for the proposition submitted to us by the learned counsel is that of Lord St. Leonards, and I give full effect to the argument of the learned counsel when I say no doubt that Lord St. Leonards did in the most unqualified manner lay down the proposition for which he contends. Whether that noble and learned lord was altogether satisfied with his own reasoning, I am not prepared to say. When I find the proposition coupled with such qualifications and such a preamble as Lord St. Leonards has introduced in his judgment, I entertain some doubt whether the noble and learned lord was perfectly satisfied in his own mind as to the logic of his reasoning. Whether he was or was not, the main point is that this House has on more than one occasion acted upon the principle to which I have referred. No more conspicuous case could arise, I think, than what occurred in the case of Beamish v. Beamish, 9 H. L. Cas. 274, 10 W. R. H. L. Dig. 3. In that case some of the learned lords were of opinion that Reg. v. Millis 10 Cl. & F. 534 (in error) was wrongly decided, but nevertheless they acquiesced in that decision; that is to say, they held themselves bound by that decision in the subsequent case of Beamish v. Beamish, and treated that decision of your lordships' House as conclusive upon the question then under appeal.

It is totally impossible, as it appears to me, to disregard the whole current of authority upon this subject, and to suppose that what some people call an "extraordinary case," an "unusual case," a case somewhat different from the common, in the opinion of each litigant in turn is sufficient to justify the re-hearing and re-arguing before the final Court of Appeal of a question which has been already decided. Of course I do not deny that cases of individual hardship may arise, and there may be a current of opinion in the profession that such and such a judgment was erroneous; but what is that occasional interference with what is, perhaps, abstract justice, as compared with the inconvenience—the disastrous inconvenience—of having each question subject to being re-argued, and the dealings of mankind rendered doubtful by reason of different decisions, so that in truth and in fact there would be no real final Court of Appeal. It is interest rei publicæ that there should be finis litium at some time, and there could be no finis litium if it were possible to suggest in each case that it might be re-argued, because it is "not an ordinary case," whatever that may mean. Under these circumstances I am of opinion that we ought not to allow this question to be re-argued.

I only wish to say one word in answer to a very ingenious argument which the learned counsel set before your lordships. It is said that this House might have omitted to notice an Act of Parliament or might have acted upon an Act of Parliament which was afterwards found to have been repealed. It seems to me that the answer to that ingenious suggestion is a very manifest one—namely, that that would be a case of a mistake of fact. If the House were under the impression that there was an Act when there was not such an Act as was suggested, of course they would not be bound when the fact was ascertained that there was not such an Act, or that the Act had been repealed, to proceed upon the hypothesis that the Act existed. They would then have ascertained whether it existed or not as a matter of fact, and in a subsequent case they would act upon the law as they then found it to be, although before they had been under the impression, on the hypothesis I have put, either on the one hand that an Act of Parliament did not exist, or, on the other hand, that an Act had not been repealed (either case might be taken as an example) and acted accordingly. But what relation has that proposition to the question, whether the same question of law can be re-argued on the ground that it was not argued or not sufficiently argued, or that the decision of law upon the argument was wrong? It has no application at all.

Under these circumstances, it appears to me that your lordships would do well to act upon that which has been universally assumed in the profession, so far as I know, to be the principle—namely, that a decision of this House upon a question of law is conclusive, and that nothing but an Act of Parliament can set right that which is alleged to be wrong in a judgment of this House. For these reasons, I move your lordships that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

WARD v. MAYOR, ALDERMEN, AND BURGESSES OF PORTSMOUTH. (a.)

Burial—New burial-ground—Addition to an old burial-ground—Approval of Secretary of State—Burial Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 85), ss. 25, 26, 28—Burial Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 134), ss. 1, 6.

Under the Burial Act, 1852, a burial board can buy land or appropriate parish land, or accept a gift of land, for the purpose of a burial-ground without the preliminary sanction of a Secretary of State.

The restriction contained in section 6 of the Burial Act, 1853, as to the opening of any new burial-ground without the consent of a Secretary of State applies only to the "provision and user" of such burial-ground, and not to its acquisition by a burial board.

Consequently it is intra vires of a burial board, or their statutory successors, to acquire ground adjacent to their existing burial-ground as an addition to it without obtaining the approval of a Secretary of State.

So held by the Court of Appeal, reversing the decision of Byrne, J.

This was an action against a municipal corporation upon a contract to purchase a piece of land to be used as an addition to a burial-ground already existing, the approval of the Home Secretary not having been obtained.

In August, 1889, the plaintiff, William Ward, agreed to sell, and the burial board for the parish of Portsmouth agreed to purchase, certain land at Portsea, adjoining a burial-ground vested in the corporation, and intended to be used as an addition to or enlargement of the existing burial-ground. The purchase-money was £6,270, of which £100 was paid upon the signing of the contract, and the residue was to be paid upon completion, the date of which was fixed for the 24th of June, 1896. The vendor was to remain in possession in the meantime, and to be at liberty to work the land as a brickfield. The approval of the vestry had previously been obtained.

In January, 1895, the Corporation of Portsmouth, acting as an urban sanitary authority, passed a resolution in conformity with section 62 of the Local Government Act, 1894, whereby the powers, duties, property, and liabilities of the burial board were transferred to the corporation, who became their successors as from the 11th of June, 1896.

In 1854 an order in council was made under section 1 of the Burial Act, 1853, restraining the opening of any new burial-ground in Portsmouth without the previous approval of a secretary of state. The corporation in consequence applied to the Home Secretary for his approval to the land agreed to be purchased being used as a burial-ground, but the Secretary declined to accede to the application upon the ground that the land being within 100 yards of dwelling-houses the case came within the prohibition of section 9 of the Burial Act, 1855. Thereupon the corporation refused to complete the purchase of the land, and the vendor brought this action for specific performance of the agreement, or in the alternative for damages for its breach.

The following sections of the Burial Acts are the material ones:

Burial Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 85), s. 25.—Every burial board shall, with all convenient speed, proceed to provide a burial-ground for the parish or parishes for which they are appointed to act, and to make arrangements for facilitating interments therein; and in providing such burial-ground the board shall have reference to the convenience of access thereto from the parish or parishes for which the same is provided; and any such burial-ground may be provided either within or without the limits of the parish, or all or any of the parishes for which the same is provided; but [no ground not already used as or appropriated for a cemetery shall be appropriated as a burial-ground, or as an addition to a burial-ground, under this Act, nearer than 200 yards to any dwelling-house without the consent in writing of the owner, lessee, and occupier of such dwelling-house]. (The words in brackets have been repealed.)

Section 26.—For the providing such burial-ground it shall be lawful for the burial board, with the approval of the vestry or vestries of the parish or respective parishes, to contract for and purchase any lands for the purpose of forming a burial-ground, or for making additions to any burial-ground to be formed or purchased under this Act, as such board may think fit. . . .

Section 28.—It shall be lawful for any such board, with the approval of the vestry, to sell and dispose of any lands purchased by them under this Act, or any part thereof, in which no interment shall have taken place, and which it may appear to the board may be properly sold or disposed of. . . .

Burial Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 134), s. 1.—In case it appear to her Majesty in council, upon the representation of one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, that for the protection of the public health the opening of any new burial-ground in any city or town, or within any other limits, save with the previous approval of one of such secretaries of state, should be prohibited, or that burials in any city or town, or within any other limits, or in any burial-grounds or places of burial, should be wholly discontinued, or should be discontinued subject to any exception or qualification, it shall be lawful for her Majesty, by and with the advice of her privy council, to order that no new burial-ground shall be opened in such city or town, or within such limits, without such previous approval, or (as the case may require) that after a time mentioned in the order burials in such city or town, or within such limits, or in such burial-grounds or places of burial, shall be discontinued wholly, or subject to any exceptions or qualifications mentioned in such order, and so from time to time as circumstances may require. . . .

Section 6.—Where by any such order in council as aforesaid it is ordered that no new burial-ground shall be opened in any city or town, or within any limits therein mentioned, without the previous approval of one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, no new burial-ground or cemetery (parochial or non-parochial) shall be provided and used in such a city or town, or within such limits, without such previous approval.

Burial Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 128), s. 9.—So much of the said Act of the 15th and 16th years of her Majesty as enacts that "No ground . . . such dwelling house," shall be repealed; but no ground not already used as or appropriated for a cemetery shall be used for burials under the said Act or this Act, or either of them, within the distance of one hundred yards from any dwelling-house, without such consent as aforesaid.

Warmington, Q.C., Astbury, Q.C. and Methold, for the plaintiff.—The only thing prohibited is a new burial-ground. There is no prohibition of the enlargement of an existing one, which is all that is proposed to be done here. The approval of the secretary of state is not then necessary, and the contract is not ultra vires, and the defendants are bound to complete. In the Burial Act, 1852, s. 25, an addition to a burial-ground is mentioned as something distinct from a new burial-ground, and so in section 26. When, therefore, we find no mention of an addition in section 6 of the Burial Act, 1853, we must suppose the section was not intended to apply to such a case. In any case there is nothing ultra vires in the burial board making the contract, or the corporation taking it over. The prohibition only extends to actually using the land as a burial-ground: Cowley (Lord) v. Byas, 26 W. R. 1, 5 Ch. D. 944. They can sell it again if they choose (see Burial Act, 1852, s. 28).

Eve, Q.C., Macmorran, Q.C., and George Williamson, for the defendants.—A piece of land bought for a burial-ground is not the less a new burial-ground because it adjoins an existing one. Suppose the old ground was full, would not further land be a new ground? New ground means any ground used for the first time for the purpose. On the plaintiff's contention you may extend the old cemetery to any extent, but you may not add a single acre across the road. The contract was consequently ultra vires. The burial board could only acquire land for the specific purpose, and they had not the approval of the board which was requisite under the Burial Act, 1855: Stevens v. Gourley, 8 W. R. 85, 7 C. B. N. S. 99.

BYRNE, J.—In this case the plaintiff, on the 1st of August, 1889, entered into a contract with the burial board for the sale of certain property. The land was wanted by the board for use as a burial-ground, and was adjacent to a burial-ground which the board already had, and it was wanted to make, what I may call without prejudice to the question I have to decide, "an addition" to the old burial-ground. The contract was not to be complete until after the lapse of a term of years, and in the meantime the plaintiff was to have a certain use of the property. The term has elapsed, and the plaintiff now asks for specific performance against the corporation of Portsmouth, who are the transferees under statute of the burial board; and the case may be treated as against them as if it were a case against the burial board.

The question arises upon the construction of certain Burial Acts. The first of these is the Burial Act of 1852, which provides, by section 25, that "Every burial board"—[His lordship read the section, and continued:] The latter part of the section containing the provision beginning with the words "But no ground" has since been repealed and a new provision substituted to which I need not refer. But it is legitimate to refer to this latter part of section 25 for the purpose of ascertaining whether other provisions, to which I shall have to refer, relate to property wanted (as in the present case) as an addition to a burial-ground. It has been pointed out that while the first part of the section speaks of "a burial-ground," the latter part speaks of "a burial-ground" and of "an addition to a burial-ground," as though the latter was something different from a burial-ground.

Then by section 26; "For the providing of such burial-ground it shall be lawful for the burial board, with the approval of the vestry or vestries of the parish or respective parishes, to contract for and purchase any lands for the purpose of forming a burial-ground, or for making additions to any burial-ground to be formed or purchased under this Act, as such board may think fit." Then follows a provision whereby the burial board may for the same objects purchase an existing cemetery or cemeteries or parts subject to certain existing rights. The rest of the section is immaterial for the present purpose. Section 28 provides, "It shall be lawful"—[His lordship read the section down to "disposed of"]. Then follow provisions for carrying out the earlier part of the section. Now, without referring at present to the Burial Act of 1853, what is the true meaning of section 25? A duty is imposed on the board with all convenient speed to provide—not a new burial-ground, but—a burial-ground. This burial-ground may or may not be new, because the board may acquire, and acquire only, an already existing burial-ground. Or again, they may acquire an existing burial-ground, and in addition to it other land to be used with it. Or thirdly, they may provide fresh land only. In the latter part of this section 25 we find a provision inserted for the protection of occupiers of lands near the burial-ground, that no ground not already so used shall be appropriated as a burial-ground or as an addition to a burial-ground nearer than the distance mentioned without the consent of those occupiers. Thus, this part of the section contemplates the possibility of the board acquiring an already existing burial-ground. If the words "or as an addition to a burial-ground" had been omitted, it would have been open to the contention that if an existing burial-ground had been acquired, and some extra ground was required to be used with it, the two together would constitute ground "already used or appropriated as a cemetery." Whether such a contention would have succeeded or not I do not know, but it appears to me that the words "or as an addition to a burial-ground" were probably inserted to avoid the possibility of such a contention. At that date the Legislature were not dealing with the case of the intervention by a secretary of state in pursuance of an order in council, and the only safeguard was (under section 28) the necessity of obtaining the approval of the vestry before purchasing. No question of this kind arises in the case before me, as this condition has been complied with. Coming to the Act of 1853, we find that by section 6 "Where by any order in council as there mentioned"—and such an order was passed before the contract in this case—"it is ordered"—[His lordship read the section].

On the one hand it is urged that, notwithstanding such an order in council, where there is an existing burial-ground, and it is only required to obtain an addition to it, the consent of the secretary of state is not required before entering into a contract for the purchase of land for such additional accommodation. I do not think that this is the right construction to place on the Act. I bear in mind the argument that has been addressed to me on section 1 of this same Act of 1853, but I think that what was meant was, that after the passing of the order no new burial-ground, whether to be used alone or as an addition to an already existing one, is to be "provided and used" without the previous approval of a secretary of state. Where you have ambiguous expressions in an Act of Parliament, and have to choose between two constructions, it is legitimate to test the meaning by the probable results. Now, on the other construction it has been pointed out that where the secretary of state has authorized a small burial-ground, say of one or two acres in extent, in a particular part of the town, he may have taken into consideration the accompanying circumstances, as the nature of the soil, the way in which the surrounding property was occupied, and other conditions, and yet it might be that if they were so minded, the moment after he had given his consent the burial board might acquire 100 or 150 acres more, so long as these 100 or 150 acres formed an addition to the other ground, without any such consent or approval. On the other hand, it is said that the Legislature may have well thought that when a burial board had been constituted, and a new burial-ground provided, it might be fairly left to the board to consider whether or not an addition should be made. But if so, I do not see why the board should not have been trusted to open an altogether new ground without further consent. I think, therefore, that section 6 applies to a new burial-ground which is an addition to an existing one as well as to a burial-ground which is not an addition.

Judgment for the defendants.

Warmington, Q.C., Astbury, Q.C., and Methold, for the appellant, used the same arguments as in the court below, and cited Eastern Counties Railway Co. v. Hawkes, 3 W. R. 609, 5 H. L. Robson, Q.C., Eve, Q.C., and George Williamson, for the respondents.

LINDLEY, M.R.—The facts of this case are not really in dispute. I will state them very shortly. [His lordship stated the facts, and continued:] Hence this litigation; and what we have to consider is the question whether the sanction of the Secretary of State ought to have been obtained by the burial board in or before August, 1889, when the burial board entered into this contract? If the sanction of the Secretary of State was essential to the validity of the contract, of course the decision appealed from was right. If, on the other hand, it was not necessary to the validity of the contract, if the necessity of obtaining the sanction of the Secretary of State arose afterwards, then, whatever defence there might be to an action for specific performance, there would be none to an action for damages. That raises the next question whether the sanction of the Secretary of State is necessary in order to render the contract sued upon a valid contract. That turns upon the various Burial Acts which have been called to our attention, and in particular it turns upon the meaning and effect of section 6 of the Burial Act of 1853, which I will read. [His lordship read the section, and continued:] Now, in order to understand the meaning of that Act of 1853, which extends the Burial Act of 1852, and extends it, with some modifications, to the whole of England and Wales, it is absolutely necessary to understand the principal Act, which is the Act of 1852. We must understand not only the objects of it but the machinery provided by it; and I proceed therefore to address myself to the Act of 1852, and see if we can ascertain the meaning of a similar prohibition which is to be found there. Sections 2-8 provide for closing burial-grounds where the continued use of them may be injurious to public health. This part of the Act introduces the Secretary of State and orders in council. Sections 9-32 relate to the provision of new burial-grounds. By section 9 no new burial-ground can be "provided and used"—these are the words which occur and with which we have to deal—"without the sanction of the Secretary of State." The effect of that prohibition on the rest of the Act of 1852, which introduces the machinery for providing new burial-grounds, cannot be understood without examining a great variety of other sections. In order to provide a new burial-ground it is, first of all, necessary to constitute some authority to provide it, and that is done by sections 10, 11, and 24. The first step is to convene a meeting to consider whether a burial-ground shall be provided, and, if it is resolved to provide one, a copy of the resolution shall be sent to the Secretary of State. That is by section 10; but no approval by him of the proceedings is required, and if the resolution is passed, then a burial board is to be formed.

Now, pausing there, we have had an argument addressed to us as to the object of transmitting to the Secretary of State a copy of that resolution. I daresay the object of it is that he may be informed of what is going on. At all events the Act of Parliament does not say a word about what is to be done on that. That was complied with. When the burial board is formed under section 11, then it is incorporated by section 24. Then, as soon as the burial board is formed, it is to provide a burial-ground. I am obliged to lay emphasis on the word "provide" because that is the word with which we have to deal. That is contained in section 25 of the Act of 1852. This provision necessarily involves obtaining or appropriating land for the purpose, and section 24 authorizes the board to take and hold land for the purpose. That section, therefore, enables the board to accept a gift of land from anyone who would be willing to make such a gift whether by deed or will. But the Act further empowers the board, with the consent of the vestry, to buy land for providing a burial-ground (that is, section 26) and with the consent of the vestry and the guardians, to appropriate parish land for the purpose of a burial-ground. That is section 29. Further the board is empowered to lay out and embellish any burial-ground provided by the board—that is, by section 30—and to build a chapel on any land purchased or appropriated for a burial-ground, and such burial-ground may be consecrated when in a fit and proper condition for interment. That is all in section 30. Then comes a proviso which is worth referring to: "And in providing any burial-ground the board is required to set apart a portion which shall not be consecrated." Supposing all this to be done, the land does not become the burial-ground of the parish until the bishop has consecrated it, or, if no consecration is necessary, has fixed a time for its becoming such burial-ground. That is section 32. When all that is done—when land is acquired, when it is made fit for the purpose, and when it is consecrated—then, and before, you get a complete burial-ground. One of the problems we have to solve is this, What do the words "providing land for a burial-ground" mean? I pass that over for the present. Provision is made by section 23 for providing burial-grounds for several parishes, and by section 20 for borrowing money with the sanction of the vestry and the Treasury for providing and laying out burial-grounds and building chapels upon them. Then by section 28 the board is empowered, with the approval of the vestry, to sell land purchased by the board under the Act, in which no interment has been made, and which the board may consider proper to be sold. That is the scheme of the Act of 1852. There are other sections. It is rather a long Act, but those are all, I think, which we need consider on the present occasion. I now come back to the prohibition contained in section 9. The word "providing" as applied to new burial-grounds clearly in some cases includes purchase. It must include that under section 20, which is the borrowing section; and so in section 25, as regards access the word "providing" means to include buying. "Buying" and "providing" do not appear to me to be synonymous expressions. "Providing" may include "buying" but it must include acquiring; you cannot provide a thing before you have got it; but a burial-ground may be acquired without buying. The words "in providing" which occur in the proviso in section 30, to which I have already alluded, can hardly mean buying or acquiring. They point to a later stage in the process of rendering the land referred to fit for a burial-ground. The process of providing a parochial burial-ground naturally begins with acquiring and ends with its consecration or the appointment by the bishop of a time fixed. Now section 26, which is the providing section which we have to consider, clearly authorizes the purchase of land out of the metropolis and the two miles' limit without the consent of the Secretary of State. The question is whether the consent of the Secretary of State is necessary for the purchase of land within those limits. I must say I do not think it is. If Mr. Robson could make out that it was, I think he would be successful, but I cannot come myself to that conclusion. Now when we turn to section 9, the language of which I have commented upon, it is to be observed that the prohibition is not a prohibition against acquiring land, and I do not find the the word "provide" used with reference to the acquisition of land. The word "provide" in this Act of Parliament is applied to providing burial-grounds, and it looks to me as if that word indicated something which was to take place after the acquisition and not before. If you put upon the word "provide" the sense contended for by Mr. Robson, that is to say, if you say it includes all the steps, including the first and the last, for obtaining a site for use as a burial-ground for the parish, then unquestionably these defendants have not provided in that sense. What they have done, and all they have done at present, is to take the first step and to acquire land with a view to providing. I do not think myself that in common parlance the defendants or rather the burial board who entered into this contract provided the land for the purpose of burial when they bought it considering that it was part of the bargain that the land should for the first six or seven years be used as a brickfield. The provision of the burial-ground did not arise so early, but it arose at some later date. I feel a difficulty in saying when exactly the provision begins, but feeling that difficulty I am not prepared to say on this Act of Parliament that it begins so early as acquiring land, whether it is by gift, or by appropriation, or by purchase. Now Bryne, J., felt this difficulty, and I feel it the same. He was impressed by the difficulty that unless the prohibition contained in the prohibitory section includes acquiring, that prohibition might just as well have been confined to using. I feel the full force of that, but, great as that difficulty is, I feel still greater difficulty in cutting down what appears to me to be the plain language of sections 26 and 29 which are addressed specifically to the first step in providing a burial-ground, namely, buying the land or setting apart parochial land for the purpose. Upon the Act of 1852, which is the Act on which the difficulty really arises, the only conclusion at which I can arrive is, that a burial board can buy land or appropriate parish land or accept a gift of land for the purpose of a burial-ground without the preliminary sanction of the Secretary of State, and whatever "providing" means in section 9 the prohibition there contained does not extend to the acquisition by purchase or otherwise of land for a burial-ground. The prohibition, be it observed, is not against "acquiring" but it is against "providing and using," an expression which is not without significance. So much for the Act of 1852.

Now I pass on to the Act of 1853, which extended the Act of 1852 to places to which that Act did not apply. The prohibition contained in section 6 of the Burial Act, 1853, is a mere repetition of, and is open to the same observations as, section 9 of the earlier Act. I say it is a mere repetition, although it is not exactly worded like it, but it is obvious that all the observations I have made on the earlier section apply to this. It is urged before us that section 6 of the Act of 1853 did not apply to new additions to burial-grounds as distinguished from new burial-grounds. Having studied the Act of 1852 and the Act of 1853 together, I am unable to assent to that argument. I think that if the plaintiff's case turned on that, and that alone, he would fail. Now, as regards the Burial Act of 1855, which we also have to consider; that amends the two former Acts, but I do not think it throws much light on the construction of the prohibitory sections contained in them. The end of section 6 of the Act of 1855 tends to show that the consent of the Secretary of State is not wanted for purchasing if they do not want to borrow under section 30; and section 17 of the Act of 1855, which enables burial boards with the sanction of the Secretary of State to let land purchased for burial purposes and not consecrated, and in which no interment has taken place, shows that land may be purchased before being consecrated or used. That really exhausts the difficulties of this case. I have looked at the case rather narrowly in order to discover, if I could, the meaning of the expression "provided and used," but when we look at it more broadly it appears to me that the defect in the view of the defendants is this. It is obvious, I think, from these Acts of Parliament, that the Secretary of State is brought in for the protection of the public health, and not for financial reasons at all. The financial part is left to the Treasury when the board wants to borrow money, and although the Secretary of State is brought in by the section in the Act of 1855 as to letting, there are indications, I think, in the Act of 1855 itself which show it was never supposed that his control was required for the expenditure of money. That is not his affair.

The check that is put by this Act of Parliament upon the expenditure of money for purchasing is the consent of the vestry; and the Secretary of State, to my mind, has nothing whatever to do with it. If the broad view is that his sanction is rendered necessary by Parliament for the purpose of protecting the public health, full effect can be given to that by holding that the prohibition does not apply so early as the acquisition of land, especially when, as in this case, an opportunity may occur for acquiring land for burial purposes, although you do not want to use it for some years. I cannot suppose for a moment that if the burial board in this case had applied to the Secretary of State for his sanction to the purchase of a burial-ground seven years hence he would have entertained it for a moment. He would say: "Do not come to me now; come to me when you want it; I have to look after the public health; I cannot tell what may be necessary seven years hence for the protection of the public health." It does not at all follow, to my mind, that the burial board, with the consent of the vestry, may not acquire the land for the purpose of providing a burial-ground when the proper time shall arrive. That really disposes of that controversy, because, if I am right, it means this, that there is nothing to invalidate the contract of purchase, and there is nothing which the vendor need trouble himself about in looking to the title, or the power of the purchaser to pay the money and complete the contract for the purchase of land for the purpose of making a burial-ground, and does not obtain the sanction of the Secretary of State at the time; the risk of not getting it must be run, but it must be run by the purchaser, and not by the vendor. I think Mr. Warmington in his observations upon that was right. Now as regards the remedy, if the plaintiff here pressed for specific performance, it appears to me that would require some consideration, because, although the contract is valid enough, there are practical difficulties which arise, and inasmuch as the present defendants were not the contracting parties there might be some little difficulty about that; but, however, the plaintiff does not insist upon specific performance, but says he is content with damages. If he is content with damages, it appears to me he is entitled to damages. The result, therefore, is that the appeal must be allowed with costs here and below, and there must be an inquiry what damages the plaintiff has sustained by reason of the breach of the contract by the defendants, and an order for the payment of those damages to the plaintiff when ascertained.

CHITTY, L.J.—The question on this appeal is whether the contract of 1889 is void as being beyond the powers of the burial board which entered into it, who were a corporation constituted by Act of Parliament with limited powers. After the careful analysis that the Master of the Rolls has presented of the Acts of Parliament, I shall not consider it incumbent on me to go through the sections again. I shall rest content with adding a few words upon those which appear to me to be the principal points in this case. It is stated that the approval of the Secretary of State is required ex post facto to validate this contract, and that, inasmuch as his approval had not been obtained under the 6th section of the Act of 1853, the contract not only cannot be enforced by specific performance, but is altogether void. The 26th section of the Act of 1852 is clear as it stands by itself. It gives power to a burial board to contract for the purchase of land for the purpose of providing a burial-ground, and there is one condition only in that section imposed, which is, obtaining the approval of the vestry before the contract is entered into. That approval has been obtained; consequently there is a clear and clean power conferred upon the burial board by this 26th section. After carefully considering the case, it seems to me that there is no other condition imposed with which this power to purchase is clogged. I accept what the Master of the Rolls has stated as being the two leading ideas in this Act of Parliament, and I still express myself quite shortly, and without any reference to detail, that the one is finance and the other is public health. I am not speaking of some of the smaller details, but the Secretary of State is invoked for the purpose of protecting the public health; but, speaking again without reference to any particular details of the Act of Parliament, the question of finance is not left to him. On reverting to the 26th section the question of finance is left to the vestry, whose approval is required. Now, it is plain that under the 28th section the burial board has power to sell without the sanction of the Secretary of State any land that is purchased with the approval of the vestry. They are the persons to whom the power of sale is confided, so that it follows that the Secretary of State is not called in here, and there is no ground for saying that he can interfere in the matter at all. There is a fetter imposed by this section 28 which is quite immaterial for the purpose for which I am dealing with it. I speak generally. Until the land has been consecrated or until the land has been actually used for the purpose of interment, a power of sale corresponding to the power of purchase is vested in the same body with the same approval. That, I think, goes a long way in explaining the force and effect of the 26th section. And, as ancillary to this, I refer to the later Act of 1855, which contains a power of letting; that, I think, is a subordinate matter, but it shows that the burial board can make use of this land for other purposes than merely for simple interment.

There might be danger in confiding to a body such as this is—a burial board—a power to speculate in land, and, if it had been shown that they bought this land merely as a speculation, I think the case would have stood very differently. But, so far from that being the case, it is shown that they bought it with a view to converting it into a burial-ground; and it is of advantage to bodies thus placed, and particularly in districts where the population is increasing—and, so far as can be seen, rapidly increasing—that they should have some power of making provision beforehand for that which they, acting reasonably, see will be likely to occur—namely, that the existing burial-ground, as in this particular case, will become too small for its requirements. When that is stated, it is obviously the case, and it is equally obvious that a body (whatever may be the view of this 26th section) such as a burial board can never buy exactly the number of poles or roods they require for the immediate purpose of converting it into a burial-ground. Of course, ex hypothesi, they must have ground unused. Then, I think, on the general construction of the Act, there comes in, with still greater force, the various sections and provisions that I have referred to. The result is this—that they can buy beforehand, with a view to proper economy, in the execution of the duties that are entrusted to them. In my opinion they would not go, in the ordinary reasonable course, to the Secretary of State, as, according to the case for the defendants, they ought to have done, and ask for the consent of the Secretary of State under the 6th section of the Act of 1853, at the time the contract was entered into. Had they gone to the Secretary of State, I do not presume to say what the Secretary of State would do, but I take it that he would act at least reasonably, and that his answer would be: "No, I cannot tell now what will be the state of things with regard to health six or seven years hence, and I will approve of some limited area being dedicated to the burial-ground now; but as for saying I will do this six or seven years hence, it may not then be a matter for me at all; it may be a matter possibly for my successor and not for me to consider." As has been pointed out, and it assists the main argument, a burial board may accept gifts of ground, and it is quite plain that the Secretary of State's sanction is in no way required for the acceptance of such gifts. The argument has largely turned on the meaning of the words "provide and use" in the 6th section. After hearing the arguments, and devoting my utmost attention to the various and numerous places in which the term "provide" occurs throughout these Acts of Parliament, I am by no means satisfied that the Legislature has used that term in any strict or technical sense. There is a want of uniformity in the various phrases; and I think I am at liberty to say, after that observation, that I have not an absolutely clear view of what is meant by "provide," but I can get near it, and I think sufficiently near for the purposes of this case. It is, at least, this, in my opinion—it is doing something to the land after the contract of purchase; how much, whether it is forming, or converting, or laying out, or some other operation, or in some cases the consecration—which, no doubt, is required in some parts—it is not necessary to say; but I am satisfied that the word "providing" in the 6th section is not equivalent to purchasing by contract. As I think I said, probably the term "opening" is a fairly rough mode of describing what is meant—the opening of the ground. I do not say that that is so, but it is not necessary to say exactly what is meant.

It is necessary, however, to say that it is not equivalent to purchasing under the 26th section. Purchasing is, no doubt, the first step. Mr. Robson, in his very able argument, and I think Mr. Eve supported the same proposition, spoke of "providing" as consisting of a series of steps. I think there are a series of steps before you can get a ground provided, but the first ordinary step, not the absolutely necessary first step, because gifts may also be made, would be the purchase by the board itself. Upon these general grounds, and acceding as I do to the analysis which the Master of the Rolls has carefully presented with reference to the clauses of the Act of Parliament themselves, it appears to me that the right conclusion is that this contract was not ultra vires when it was entered into; and there is no question raised, as I understand, in regard to the liability of the defendants, who are the successors of the board who entered into it; and consequently I agree with what the Master of the Rolls has said with reference to the result of this appeal. I do not understand that the defendants make any objection to damages in lieu of specific performance; but by the position they occupy as successors, although our attention has not been called to the Act of Parliament, for all practical purposes in this suit they are in the same position as the burial board was in which entered into the contract.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. After the elaborate and complete examination which the statute has received at the hands of my brethren, I propose to add very few words—in fact, I should say nothing but for the fact that we are differing from the very careful and elaborate judgment of the learned judge in the court below. Now, arguments, no doubt, may be derived from a minute examination of the wording of each of the several sections in these Acts of Parliament, but those arguments are, at the best, inconclusive, and many of them are two-edged; and, therefore, what one has got to do in dealing with this matter is to see, if one can, what is the broad principle lying at the bottom of these enactments. I gather that this is the object of these provisions. It is clear, I think, from the preamble of the Act that the paramount consideration is health. There is a recital which is obviously based on considerations of health, and it is in terms stated to be so. And, following on that, come provisions for closing existing burial-grounds, and for dealing with those which are hereafter to be opened. We had in existence at the date of the Act the old common law body, the vestry, and that vestry, composed of ratepayers, was capable of looking after its own financial interest, and I have no reason to suppose that the Legislature in the scheme of this legislation desired so superadd any additional restrictions upon their financial operations. Then I find in the scheme of the Act a provision (I need not go through the sections in detail) for a meeting of the vestry being called and a resolution of the vestry being passed that it is desirable that a burial-ground shall be provided. Then I find by the 26th section an absolute provision for enabling the burial board, with the approval of the vestry—there is no other condition imposed—to contract for the purchase of land for the purpose of a burial-ground. So far there is an absolute power vested in the burial board to contract with the consent of the vestry. But it is said that the power has been controlled by a fetter put upon it which imposes, as a condition precedent to the making of any contract, the consent of the Secretary of State. That provision is in the 6th section of the Act of 1853, which extends to the area now in question the prior provision in section 9 of the Act of 1852, which is: "No new burial-ground or cemetery shall be provided and used in the metropolis or within two miles of any part thereof without the previous approval of one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state." The words are "provided and used," and we are asked to say that, under those words, it is a condition precedent to the contracting for and purchasing the site of a proposed burial-ground that the sanction of the Secretary of State shall be obtained. I cannot find it in the words because the words are "provided and used." The thing done is the contract to buy. I cannot find it in the words, and I do not find it in the sense, or in the supposed purpose of the Legislature. As I have pointed out, what the Legislature is providing for is not the financial arrangements, which are alone concerned in the purchase, but for the sanitary arrangements which are in jeopardy when and not until it is proposed to open land which has been bought and turn it into a burial-ground. Then the sanitary considerations come in. But it was argued that we must suppose that the Legislature intended the Secretary of State to supervise the financial as well as the sanitary arrangements. I think one argument, if indeed one more were needed, is conclusive that that is not the case, because, as was pointed out by Mr. Robson, who made the point, this provision making the consent of the Secretary of State a condition precedent does not apply, even on his own argument, when the proposed purchase is outside the limits named in the section—namely, "in the metropolis or within two miles of any part thereof." If the object of the Legislature was to safeguard the financial arrangements of the vestry, why should they not have safeguarded them as much outside the metropolis as in it? No reason can be suggested why. The financial considerations are the same, but the sanitary considerations are different; and therefore, to the sanitary considerations and to those alone, in my judgment, the Legislature has addressed this section. Now let me say a few words as to whether what was done in this case is that which we may deem the Legislature to have contemplated. I gather from more than one section (I need not refer to them in detail) that the Act did contemplate a burial board acquiring land more than sufficient for their needs for the time being. There are two sections which can be pointed to at once which show that that is necessarily so. There are the provisions in the 28th section empowering them to sell lands which have been acquired, but which have not been used, for the purpose of interments; there is also the 17th section in the later Act which provides for their letting, with the sanction of the Secretary of State, lands not for the time being required for the purposes of a burial-ground. Therefore the Legislature does contemplate their being in possession, through the machinery of the Act, of land more than sufficient for the purposes of interment. Now, is it reasonable to insist that on each occasion when the vestry or the burial board has a favourable opportunity they should limit the purchase to so much land only as for the time being is required, and to that, and that only, they should direct the consideration of the Secretary of State? It seems to me that that would be an obvious inconvenience, a practical inconvenience so great that I cannot conceive that the Legislature could have intended it. Let me take a case which is a common one. There is in the market a piece of land which is admittedly eligible for the purpose of a burial-ground, but it is larger than is required for present needs, and there is no possibility of buying only a part of it—it must be all bought or none. It may be an exceedingly useful and prudent thing for the burial board to secure it; but, if the assent of the Secretary of State is a condition precedent to the acquisition of that land, he would be obliged, at the time when it is contemplated to purchase, to determine whether on sanitary considerations it is desirable that it should now be opened or that his approval should be given. I may point out that if he has once given his consent to it, the provisions for closing burial-grounds under the Burial Acts no longer apply to that area; that is enacted by the 7th section, and it bars the closing of any new burial-ground provided with the approval of the Secretary of State.

There may be other means of dealing with it, but the short, simple, and summary means on sanitary grounds of closing burial-grounds do not apply when he has once given his approval. It would be so large a responsibility to impose on the Secretary of State, to forecast as to whether in future it may or may not be advisable that burials should go on in that place, that he would be practically bound to limit his assent to cases only where just a sufficient amount of land for the immediate requirements of the board was contemplated in the proposed purchase. I think that would be so great a public inconvenience that if it existed it would have to be remedied, and I find no words in the Act that point to it, but I find other words which clearly contemplate that the burial board may find itself in possession of more land than it wants, and leave is given to let or to sell it. I cannot doubt that the course taken by the burial board in this case is one that comes within the general scheme of the Legislature. That being so, it seems to me there is clear specific authority given to them to purchase with the consent of the vestry. But when I look at the supposed condition which fetters that, it does not in terms constitute a condition precedent to the purchase, and cannot be supposed to be intended to do so. When I look at the principle, and when I look at the words of this section and test it by a test suggested in argument—namely, if criminal proceedings were taken under this 9th section against a burial board which had "provided" but had not "used" without the consent of the Secretary of State a burial-ground, could it be contended for a moment that an indictment based on that section, leaving out the word "used," could be sustained? It seems to me clearly it could not. That is only one way of testing the question whether or not the governing word in that section is "used," or merely something antecedent both to provision and user—namely, the purchase. I agree it is partly embraced in the word "provided"; but, as was pointed out by Chitty, L.J., although it is an essential part, it does not exhaust the provision, and, not exhausting it, it cannot be said that the person who has purchased has "provided." I entirely agree, therefore, with the reasons that have already been given.

KOTCHIE AND OUSEY v. GOLDEN SOVEREIGNS (LIMITED).
BRIGHT AND OTHERS (Claimants). (a.)

Practice—Interpleader—Sheriff's interpleader—Claim to goods seized in execution—Claimant ordered to pay value of goods into court—Withdrawal of sheriff—Second execution—Liability of claimant to make further payment into court.

Where a claimant of goods seized by the sheriff in execution has paid into court the value of the goods and the amount of the sheriff's charges as a security for the execution pending the hearing of an interpleader issue, and before the hearing a second execution has been levied on the same goods, and the claimant has claimed the goods again, he may be ordered, as a condition to the sheriff being directed to withdraw, to pay into court again the value of the goods and the sheriff's charges as a security for the second execution creditor.

Appeal from an order of Grantham, J., on an interpleader summons.

A judgment having been obtained by Messrs. Smythe & Sons against the Golden Sovereigns (Limited), a writ of execution was issued, and goods in the possession of the execution debtors were seized by the sheriff. A claim was made to the goods by one Bright, and on an interpleader summons it was ordered that, on Bright paying into court the sum of £137 to abide the result of an interpleader issue, the sheriff should withdraw. The sum of £137 represented the value of the goods and the sheriff's charges, and was less than the amount of the judgment.

Bright failed to pay the money into court, and a claim was then made to the goods by the Credit Assurance Corporation. A similar order was made with regard to the Credit Assurance Corporation, and on their complying with it the sheriff withdrew. Before the interpleader issue between the Credit Assurance Corporation and Smythe & Sons was tried, the sheriff again seized the goods under a writ of execution issued by Messrs. Kotchie and Ousey on a judgment for £159 obtained by them against the Golden Sovereigns (Limited). The goods were then again claimed by Bright and the Credit Assurance Corporation, and on an interpleader summons it was ordered by the master that, on Bright paying into court the sum of £137 and on the Credit Assurance Corporation paying into court the sum of £10, to abide the event of an interpleader issue, the sheriff should withdraw. The sum of £10 represented the amount of the sheriff's charges in respect of the second execution.

Grantham, J., varied the master's order by directing that the claimants should only pay into court the sum of £10.

The execution creditors, Kotchie and Ousey, appealed.

Carrington, for the execution creditors.

Boxall, for the claimants.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—Smythe & Co. obtained a judgment against the defendants and put in an execution on their goods. Bright claimed the goods as his, and he was ordered to pay into court the full value of the goods and charges to abide the decision of the judge on his claim. He did not pay the money into court, and then the Credit Assurance Co. came forward and made a claim to the goods. An order was made that on their paying into court the value of the goods, the goods should not be sold, and the money should remain in court to abide the decision of the judge. Now, what effect had the order so made on the goods taken by the sheriff? I am satisfied now, after reading the case of Haddow v. Morton, [1894] 1 Q. B. 565, that upon payment into court of the value of the goods by the claimant, the goods are free goods, they are taken out of the hands of the sheriff, and they are free in the hands of the execution debtor. Then came forward a second execution creditor—viz., Kotchie and Ousey, the present plaintiffs, who had a judgment for £159. The sheriff was again put in, and again there came forward the Credit Assurance Co. and Bright. An order was made by the master that £147 should be paid into court by the claimants. On appeal Grantham, J., held that that order was wrong, and that the claimants need only pay into court £10. Kotchie and Ousey now appeal and contend that they are entitled to have in court as security for their judgment the full value of the goods which they seized in execution. I think that Haddow v. Morton shows that the goods just before the second execution were free goods in the hands of the execution debtors, and that therefore the view of the appellants is correct. The appeal must be allowed, and the order of the master must be restored.

CHITTY, L.J.—It was settled in Haddow v. Morton that payment into court by a claimant of the value of the goods claimed by him is not a purchase by him of them. The money paid into court remains in court as security for the execution creditor, and the goods remain free goods. If the claimants' claim is defeated, the execution creditor takes the money, and cannot have recourse to the goods again. When a second execution creditor comes forward and the goods are seized again, and are claimed again, the same course of reasoning applies. The result therefore is this, that the order which ought to be made in the second case is an order which gives money security to the second execution creditor, for whose execution the goods would be available if there were no claim. The order of the master is right, and that of the judge cannot be supported.

LINDLEY, M.R., after examining the evidence, and coming to the conclusion that Hesketh was clearly shown to have been a promoter of the company, within the meaning of section 10 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, proceeded: Although there was a great deal that was discreditable in the getting up of the company, and although Hesketh appears to have known more about it than it was at all desirable that he should know, yet I fail to discover any obligation on him to account to the company for this money, or to inform the company what persons were to be paid by the vendor for promoting the company. Of course, when the company found out that their directors had been bribed, the company had a very good case against the directors; but Hesketh was not in a position which made it incumbent upon him to inform the company what remuneration he had received. The money was not money received by him to the use of the company, and no amount of ingenuity can, I think, substantiate the contention that it was. If that is so, the company never had a right to call upon him to account for that money.

I am not prepared to put a narrow construction on section 10 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, which enacts that "where in the course of the winding up of a company under the Companies Acts it appears that any person who has taken part in the formation or promotion of the company . . . has misapplied or retained, or become liable or accountable for, any moneys or property of the company," the court may "compel him to repay any moneys or restore any property so misapplied, . . . or to contribute such sums of money to the assets of the company by way of compensation in respect of such misapplication, retainer," &c., "as the court thinks just." I cannot help thinking that any money which ought to be treated, whether on legal or on equitable grounds, as received by any promoter to the use of the company, falls within that description. I think the words "moneys or property of the company" are used in a popular sense. This is not a section which is concerned with drawing accurate lines between ownership and non-ownership; and I think it would be a very narrow construction of this part of the section to confine its operation to moneys which were the property of the company before they reached the pocket of the man whom it is sought to make accountable for them. But, putting on those words the wider construction which I think one ought to put on them, I look in vain for any obligation on Hesketh's part to hand over this money to the company.

A great deal was said during the argument, and in the court below, about fraud, and about the Statutes of Limitations. In the view I take those statutes have nothing at all to do with the matter. The company had no right to an account of this money. Section 10 of the Act of 1890 does not say a word about fraud, and it is not necessary for the liquidator to use the word in his summons. In this case it is sought to make Hesketh accountable for a sum of £250. When the Statutes of Limitations are set up as an answer to that claim it will be time enough to talk about fraud.

I think, therefore, that the appeal must be allowed, and that the summons, as against Hesketh, must be dismissed.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, but I expressly found my judgment on the nature of the claim that was made, and I certainly am not satisfied that another claim might not have been made which would have succeeded.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion.

From Q. B. Div. (A. L. Smith and Collins, L.JJ.) March 9.

BAGSHAWES (LIMITED) v. DEACON. (a.)

Sheriff — Execution — Fieri facias — Abandonment of possession of goods — Temporary withdrawal from premises.

The question whether a sheriff by withdrawing for a time from premises on which he has seized goods under a writ of fieri facias has abandoned possession of the goods is a question of fact.

Appeal from the judgment of Ridley, J., in an interpleader issue.

On the 8th of July, 1897, Deacon, the defendant in the issue, obtained judgment by default in an action which he had brought against Arthur Bagshawe, who carried on business as a dealer in cycles and cycle accessories, to recover £159 for goods sold and delivered.

On the 10th of July execution was levied on the goods at Arthur Bagshawe's business premises under a writ of fi. fa.

Arthur Bagshawe was at that time in negotiation for the sale of his business to a limited company—viz., Bagshawes (Limited), the plaintiffs in the issue; and, in order to prevent such sale being prejudiced by the presence of a man in possession, he paid the sheriff's officer £80 on account, with a promise to pay the balance the following week, and signed a document requesting the officer to withdraw from possession and undertaking that he should be at liberty to re-enter at any time until the action was settled. The officer withdrew accordingly.

On the 12th of July a deed of assignment was executed by Arthur Bagshawe purporting to convey the business to the company as from the 25th of March, 1897.

On the 15th of July, the sheriff's officer having again entered under the writ of fi. fa., notice was given to him by the solicitors to the company that the goods did not belong to Arthur Bagshawe but to Bagshawes (Limited).

The sheriff thereupon interpleaded, and this interpleader issue was directed to be tried.

At the trial of the issue Ridley, J., gave judgment for the plaintiffs.

The defendant appealed.

Atherley Jones, Q.C. (R. J. Willis with him), for the defendant.—The learned judge thought that in point of law there had been an abandonment of the goods by the sheriff. There is, however, no authority showing that the mere fact of the sheriff temporarily quitting physical possession of the goods constitutes abandonment. The question of abandonment has been held to be one of fact: Ackland v. Paynter, 8 Price, 95; see also Blades v. Arundale, 1 M. & Sel. 711. The sheriff by going out under the circumstances of this case did not lose his right to re-enter.

Bosanquet, Q.C. (Morton Smith with him), for the plaintiffs.—The sheriff did not go out by reason of any necessity; he went out merely to assist the debtor. The effect was that the goods ceased to be in custodia legis. He cited Crowder v. Long, 8 B. & C. 598.

The following cases were also cited: Swann v. Earl of Falmouth, 8 B. & C. 456; Eldridge v. Stacey, 12 W. R. 51, 15 C. B. N. S. 458.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—Why did the sheriff go out of possession in this case? He went out because it would have been inconvenient to Arthur Bagshawe that he should remain in. This is not the case of a sheriff's man going out of possession for some temporary necessity, such as to get food or to see a doctor. The sheriff withdrew merely to assist the execution debtor and to enable the sale of the business to the limited company to be carried out. The cases of Ackland v. Paynter and Blades v. Arundale show that the question whether a sheriff has abandoned possession is a question of fact; and I agree with the learned judge's decision in this case that the sheriff did abandon possession.

COLLINS, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

RUNDLE v. HEARLE. (a.)

Highways—Public footway—Stile—Liability of occupier to repair ratione tenuræ*—Evidence of liability.*

The defendant was the yearly tenant of a farm through which ran a public pathway at a certain point of which was a stile with stone steps. The steps being out of repair, the plaintiff in crossing fell and was injured, and he brought an action for the injuries against the defendant, as being liable ratione tenuræ to repair the stile. There was no evidence that the parish had ever repaired, or had ever required the defendant or any prior occupier to repair, but there was evidence that the defendant's predecessor, who was also owner, had done repairs to the path and stile; there was also some evidence that previous occupiers had repaired, and a witness stated that he had done some repairs at the defendant's instance. The repairs were all small and inconsiderable, and they were done on the defendant's own land.

Held, that evidence of such small repairs, done by the occupier on his own land and possibly for his own benefit, was not sufficient to show that the defendant was bound to repair ratione tenuræ.

Quære, whether an action will lie at the instance of a private person against one liable ratione tenuræ to repair.

Appeal by the defendant from a judgment of his Honour Judge Granger, sitting at the Falmouth County Court of Cornwall.

The plaintiff brought his action against the defendant to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by him in crossing over a stile in a public footpath, which ran through a farm in the occupation of the defendant, and he claimed on the ground that the stile was out of repair and that the defendant was liable ratione tenuræ to repair the same.

The facts are fully set out in the written judgment of the court.

The learned county court judge gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant now appealed.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 23.—The judgment of the court was read by

Lord RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J.—This is an appeal by the defendant from the judgment of his Honour Judge Granger. The plaintiff sued the defendant under these circumstances. The defendant is the yearly tenant of a farm through which is a public pathway. At one point in its course is a stone stile with stone steps, some of which have been worn away by time and user. In crossing it the plaintiff slipped from one of these steps, fell, and broke his leg. He thereupon sued the defendant for damages, alleging that he was liable ratione tenuræ to repair the stile and that he had suffered by its want of repair. The learned county judge took this view and awarded him damages. It appears that the plaintiff was aged 67 years and that as far back as 1891 he had had a "seizure." He was described by his medical attendant, who was called by him, as being, when the accident happened, in a decrepit state, and as never having had the complete use of his legs since the "seizure." He added he did not think it was safe for him to cross the stile in question and that it was a difficult stile. The learned county court judge, however, who heard the witnesses, has not thought it proper to find contributory negligence, and we do not dwell further on this point, and we proceed to consider the ground on which he did act. If it were necessary to consider and determine the point whether an action will lie at the instance of a private person against one liable ratione tenuræ to repair we should desire to hear further argument upon it. There is, so far as we are aware, no record of any such case in the books, although the circumstances giving rise to such an action must have been of frequent occurrence. Baron Martin expressed considerable doubt upon the point in the case of Young v. Davis 10 W. R. 524, 7 H. & N. 760, at p. 773, where he says: "I should have been surprised if any case had been found in which it was determined that an action for non-repair was maintainable against a person bound to repair ratione tenuræ. The case in the Year Book, 11 Hen. 4, 82, 83"—set out in a note at p. 766—"which was supposed to be an authority for that position, on being examined will be found not to be so. That was an action by a lord of a manor who relied on a prescription that he, and all those whose estate he had in the manor, had a right to have a bridge kept in repair by the owner of a mill. That is totally different from an obligation towards all the Queen's subjects passing along a highway."

We do not, however, decide this case on the view taken by this learned judge, for we are of opinion that there was in this case no sufficient evidence to warrant the learned county court judge in coming to the conclusion that the defendant was under the obligation to repair ratione tenuræ. There was the usual conflict as to the past and existing state of the stile and what had been done to it in the way of repairs. One of the plaintiff's witnesses stated that the stile was at the time of the accident in the same state it was in forty years ago, and the defendant and his witnesses denied that the defendant had in fact repaired the stile. We must, however, assume that the learned county court judge gave effect to the other evidence on the part of the plaintiff and proceed to examine it. There was no evidence that the parish had ever repaired or had ever required the defendant or any prior occupier to repair, but there was evidence that the defendant's predecessor in possession, who was, however, proved also to be the owner, had done repairs to the path and stile. Another witness stated that previous occupiers had repaired, and finally a man formerly in the defendant's employment stated that he had done some repairs. In no case do the repairs seem to have been considerable. The fact that a person has done repairs to a way may certainly be some evidence of such liability. For instance, in Reg. v. Blakemore, 2 Den. C. C. 410, 16 Jur. 154, where the defendant was so held liable, the evidence was that his predecessor had been convicted of not repairing the high road in question in the year 1801, and had subsequently done repairs to it; and in Reg. v. Barker, 25 Q. B. D. 213, 38 W. R. Dig. 85, the defendant and his predecessors had repaired the high road, for the non-repair of which he was indicted, from time immemorial, and on that evidence was found liable. But in each of those cases the road was a road for carriages and horses, which is a widely different thing from a foot-path through fields and over stiles. The one requires repairs on a system, and at certain intervals, from the nature of the user, while the other does not; and on the contrary may never, except on isolated occasions, receive any repairs at all.

Such a path may be dedicated subject to the right of ploughing (Mercer v. Woodgate, 18 W. R. 116, L. R. 5 Q. B. 26), although the plough would for the time destroy all traces of the path, and after the plough has passed, the path is in common experience trodden out afresh by passers by, not made by repair or of hard material, for that would be inconsistent with the passage of the plough at the next season. So it may be that in dedicating to the public such a pathway through his fields the farmer may do so without any obligation to repair resting on himself or on anybody. It is a path on which people may pass if they choose to do so, but they must pass along it as they find it, and must take it (to use the words of Cockburn, C.J., in the case just quoted) subject to any condition which the owner imposes. Blackburn, J., in the same case, said, "If this right is inconsistent with a grant of a right of way to the public, then there was no dedication at all, and the present owner has a right to stop up the pathway altogether and so prevent the parish from repairing the path in such a way as to interfere with his ploughing." As the user for which the path is dedicated does not necessitate repairs, we see no objection in law to a dedication of the path without placing on anyone the obligation to do them. In the present instance the evidence on which the learned county court judge has acted is very slight, considering that the path is an immemorial one, and it is quite consistent with such small repairs as were done, that they were done by the occupier for his own benefit. They were done on his own land. It is not as if they had been done outside his own land, or as if he had done the repairs under threat of legal proceedings or had admitted that in doing them he was discharging a legal obligation.

We think that the case is like Hudson v. Tabor, 24 W. R. 579, 25 W. R. 740, 1 Q. B. D. 225, 2 Q. B. Div. 290. There an action was brought for not maintaining a sea-wall on the defendant's land, where it adjoined that of the plaintiff, whereby the plaintiff's land became flooded. And it was shown, in order to prove the liability of the defendant, that he and his predecessors had from time immemorial repaired the wall where his land fronted the sea. The jury found for the plaintiff, but the Court of Queen's Bench and the Court of Appeal held that there was no evidence of liability, and Lord Coleridge, in giving judgment, said, "The mere repair of a man's own fence for his own benefit, however often done, and during however long a period of time, will not, per se, although a man's neighbour may in fact benefit by such repair, impose on a man the duty of continuing such repair for his neighbour's benefit, when he ceases to care to do it for his own." So here the acts relied on were at the least ambiguous, and we think constitute no sufficient evidence of liability—see also per Baron Hullock, in Rex v. Allanson, Lewin's C. C. 158. In the words of the learned Baron, "An adjoining occupier occasionally doing repairs for his own convenience to go and come is no more like that sort of repair which makes a man liable ratione tenuræ than the repair by an individual of a road close to his door is to the repair or the road outside his gate." We, therefore, think the defendant entitled to judgment. The appeal must therefore be allowed.

COPPEN v. MOORE. (a.)

Sale of goods—False trade description—Criminal liability of master for acts of servant—Absence of mens rea—Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), ss. 1, 2, 5.

A salesman and an assistant employed by the appellant in his business of a provision dealer sold as a Scotch ham (stating it on the invoice to be such) a ham which was in fact an American ham. The sale was effected in the absence and without the knowledge of the appellant, who had directed the persons employed in his business not to sell hams under any specific name of place or origin.

Held, that the appellant was properly convicted of selling goods to which a false trade description was applied.

Case stated by justices of the borough of Richmond, Surrey.

The appellant was summarily convicted of an offence against section 2, sub-section (2), of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, for having unlawfully sold certain goods—to wit, an American ham—to which a false trade description—to wit, "Scotch ham"—was applied.

The facts found by the justices and the material enactments of the Merchandise Marks Act are stated in the judgment of the court.

The case was argued before Wright and Darling, JJ., on the 25th of March, when they held that there had been a sale of an article to which a false trade description was applied; but they reserved for argument before a full court the question whether the appellant could be convicted under the circumstances of this case, the sale having been effected by the servant of the appellant without the knowledge and contrary to the express instructions of the appellant.

The case was re-argued before Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., Sir Francis Jeune, P., Chitty, L.J., and Wright, Darling, and Channell, JJ., on the 4th of April.

Asquith, Q.C., and Bonsey, for the appellant.—The conviction cannot be sustained. It is contrary to the general principle of law that a master is not criminally responsible for the acts of his servant in the absence of any guilty knowledge or connivance on the part of the master. Here such knowledge or connivance is expressly negatived; the appellant had expressly forbidden his servants to sell hams under any specific name of place or origin. There is nothing in the Merchandise Marks Act showing any intention to exclude the application of the general rule of law to offences created by that Act.

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

They referred to Reg. v. Stephens, 14 W. R. 859, L. R. 1 Q. B. 702; Mullins v. Collins, 22 W. R. 297, L. R. 9 Q. B. 292; Reg. v. Holbrook, 26 W. R. 144, 3 Q. B. Jelf, Q.C., and A. J. David, for the respondent.—The conviction was right. This offence is an exception to the general rule that mens rea is a necessary ingredient of every offence. By section 2 (2) of the Merchandise Marks Act the burden of proving his innocence is thrown on the defendant. The appellant has not discharged this burden; the magistrates have expressly found that he did not take all reasonable precautions against the commission of an offence under the Act.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 14.—The judgment of the COURT was delivered by Lord RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J.—This is a case stated by justices who summarily convicted the appellant of an offence against the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28). The appellant was charged under section 1, sub-section (2), with having sold goods to which a "false trade description" was applied. The facts were as follows: On the 4th of September, 1897, the respondent, at the London Supply Stores, 42, George-street, Richmond (one of several places of business of the appellant), asked the salesman at the door of the shop for a small English ham. The salesman pointed to a number of hams on a shelf, and said they were Scotch hams. In fact they were long-cut American hams. The salesman stated the price, 8½d. per lb., and the respondent said he would take one, which was then produced. The salesman then passed the ham selected through the open window to a shop assistant inside, saying, "Weigh up, Scotch ham, 8½d." The respondent, before paying, asked the assistant to make him out an account, and put on it "Scotch ham," "as he had bought it as such." The assistant at first handed the respondent an invoice without the word "Scotch," on it. The respondent did not accept it so written, but told the assistant to put the word "Scotch," "as he had bought it as such." The assistant then did so, and handed the invoice to the respondent, who then paid the price, 4s. 5½d. Upon this being done, the respondent asked the assistant whether he still said it was a Scotch ham, whereupon the assistant admitted it was not, but was an American ham. The salesman, in like manner, was asked, and he at once admitted it was an American ham.

On the part of the appellant evidence was given that he had sent out a notice to all his branch places of business, including that in question, in the following terms:

"Marsham-street, Feb. 25th, 1897.

"Most important.

"Please instruct your assistants most explicitly that the hams described in the list must not be sold under any specific name of place or origin—that is to say, they must not be described as 'Bristol,' 'Bath,' 'Wiltshire,' or any such title, but simply as breakfast hams.

"To Mr. Bedford, Richmond.

"Please sign and return.

"H. W. COPPEN."

The ham in question would come within the category of breakfast hams. Evidence was given that the terms of this notice were communicated to the manager and assistants, and the appellant stated that he had no reason to believe that his instructions were not being carried out.

It is now necessary to consider the statute in question and its application to the facts proved. Section 2 is the important section. Sub-section (1) deals with the forging of any trade-mark and with the false application to goods of any such mark or of any false trade description, and enacts that, subject to the provisions of the Act, an offence shall have been committed by such forging or application unless the party charged proves that he acted without intent to defraud. Sub-section (2) enacts (omitting words immaterial in this case) that every person who sells any goods to which any false trade description is applied shall be guilty of an offence against the Act unless he proves—(a) that having taken all reasonable precautions he had no reason to suspect the genuineness of the trade description; and (b) that on demand duly made he gave all information in his power with respect to the persons from whom he obtained such goods; or (c) that otherwise he had acted innocently.

By section 3 it is enacted that "trade description" shall mean any description, statement, or any indication, direct or indirect, as to (amongst other things) the place or country in which any goods were made or produced. Later in such section it is enacted that the expression "false trade description" shall mean a trade description false in any material sense as regards the goods to which it is applied.

By section 5, sub-section (1), it is enacted that a person shall be deemed to have applied a trade description to goods who applies it to the goods themselves or uses a trade description in any manner calculated to lead to the belief that the goods in connection with which it is used are designated or described by that trade description.

In Budd v. Lucas it was decided that where certain casks of beer were delivered accompanied by an invoice in which the casks were falsely described as "barrels" (which word had acquired the character of a trade description) it was held that an offence under section 2, sub-section (1), of the Act in question had been committed, although the invoice containing the false description was not physically attached to the casks. I think this case was well decided; in other words, I think that it is not necessary to constitute the offence that there shall be any physical connection between the false trade description and the goods to which it is applied.

It was admitted that the description "Scotch ham" was a trade description, and it was found that it was applied to the ham sold by the appellant's employés, and it was admittedly false. It was not contended that it was not material. In these circumstances it is clear than an offence against the Act was committed by the salesman and by the assistant of the appellant. But the question which the court is now called upon to decide is whether the appellant also is not personally liable to be convicted. This was the question argued before us.

The appellant's contention was that the charge here preferred was a criminal charge and that the general principle of law applied—nemo reus est nisi mens sit rea. There is no doubt that this is the general rule, but it is subject to exceptions, and the question here is whether the present case falls within the rule or within the exception.

Apart from statute exceptions have been engrafted upon the rule; for example, in the case of Reg. v. Stephens the defendant was held liable on indictment for obstructing navigation by throwing rubbish into a river from a quarry owned by the defendant but managed by his son, although it was proved that the men employed at the quarry had been by order prohibited from doing the acts complained of. No doubt in that case the fact that the proceedings were only in form criminal was adverted to by the judges who decided it, but the fact remains that the defendant was criminally indicted.

But by far the greater number of exceptions engrafted upon the general rule are cases in which it has been decided that by various statutes criminal responsibility has been put upon masters for the acts of their servants. Amongst such cases are Mullins v. Collins, where a licensed victualler was convicted of an offence under the 16th section of the Licensing Act of 1872 for supplying liquor to a constable on duty, although this was done by his servant without the knowledge of his master. Again in Bond v. Evans, a licensed victualler was convicted of an offence against the 17th section of the same Act where gaming had been allowed in the licensed premises by the servant in charge of the premises, although without the knowledge of his master.

The decisions in these and in other like cases were based upon the construction of the statutes in question. The court, in fact, came to the conclusion that, having regard to the language, scope, and object of those Acts, the Legislature intended to fix criminal responsibility upon the master for acts done by his servant in the course of his employment, although such acts were not authorized by the master and may even have been expressly prohibited by him.

The question, then, in this case comes to be narrowed to the simple point, whether upon the true construction of the statute here in question the master was intended to be made criminally responsible for acts done by his servant in contravention of the Act, where such acts were done, as in this case, within the scope or in the course of their employment. In my judgment it was clearly the intention of the Legislature to make the master criminally liable for such acts, unless he was able to rebut the primâ facie presumption of guilt by one or other of the methods pointed out in the Act.

Take the facts here and apply the Act to them.

To begin with, it cannot be doubted that the appellant sold the ham in question although the transaction was carried out by his servants. In other words, he was the seller although not the actual salesman. It is clear also, as already stated, that the ham was sold with a "false trade description," which was material. If so, there is evidence establishing a primâ facie case of an offence against the Act having been committed by the appellant. But it is only a primâ facie case. The burthen of proof is shifted upon the appellant, and he might meet successfully that primâ facie case if he is able, where the charge is under the first sub-section of section 1, to prove that he acted without intent to defraud; or, where the charge is under sub-section 2 of section 1, if he is able to prove (a) that he had taken all reasonable precautions against committing an offence against the Act and had no reason to suspect the genuineness of the trade description in question, and (b) that on demand he had given full information, or (c) if he is able to prove that otherwise he acted innocently. It seems clear that clauses (a) and (b) of sub-section 2 apply to cases where the goods in question are in the possession of the accused for sale or are sold with the forged trade-mark or false trade description already stamped upon them or otherwise applied to them, and not to a case like the present, where the false trade description is applied upon the occasion and as part of the terms of sale; and in the latter case the accused must rely for his exculpation upon clause (c)—namely, by showing that he had acted innocently.

In the present case there was ample evidence to justify the conclusion of the magistrates that the appellant was primâ facie guilty of the offence charged, and that primâ facie case has not been met in the manner required by the Act. The magistrates, indeed, have affirmatively found—in the terms of clause (a)—that the appellant had not, in fact, taken all reasonable precautions against committing an offence against the Act, but I have already pointed out that that clause does not directly apply to the facts of this case. This finding is, therefore, not strictly relevant, although it suggests an important element in determining whether the accused is innocent; but what is material to note is that the magistrates do not appear to have been asked to find, and certainly they do not in fact find, that the appellant acted innocently within the meaning of clause (c). There was evidence before them that the American hams in question were dressed so as to deceive the public; and this probably explains the reason of the affirmative finding to which I have adverted and the absence of the finding that the appellant had acted innocently within the meaning of clause (c).

In answer, then, to the question which alone is put to us—namely, whether, upon the facts stated, the decision of the magistrates convicting the appellant was in point of law correct—my answer is that, in my judgment, it was. When the scope and object of the Act are borne in mind, any other conclusion would, to a large extent, render the Act ineffective for its avowed purposes. The circumstances of the present case afford a convenient illustration of this. The appellant, under the style of the "London Supply Stores," carries on an extensive business as grocer and provision dealer, having, it appears, six shops or branch establishments, and having also a wholesale warehouse. It is obvious that, if sales with false trade descriptions could be carried out in these establishments with impunity so far as the principal is concerned, the Act would, to a large extent, be nugatory. I conceive the effect of the Act to be to make the master or principal liable criminally (as he is already by law civilly) for the acts of his agents and servants in all cases within the sections with which we are dealing, where the conduct constituting the offence was pursued by such servants and agents within the scope or in the course of their employment, subject to this—that the master or principal may be relieved from criminal responsibility where he can prove that he had acted in good faith and had done all that it was reasonably possible to do to prevent the commission by his agents and servants of offences against the Act.

The result, therefore, is that the conviction will be affirmed, and with costs.

I wish to add that the form in which this case is stated is not satisfactory. It does not throughout clearly distinguish between what was merely evidence and what was proved to the satisfaction of the magistrates. It is important that it should be borne in mind that when a case is submitted to the court it ought to state clearly what the facts proved were, and not merely what the evidence was.

Conviction affirmed.

LANCASTER v. BARNES URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL. (a.)

Local government—Public health—Nuisance—"Single private drain"—Notice to execute works addressed to owners collectively—Work done different from work specified in notice—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 41—Public Health Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 19.

Three houses belonging to A. and two belonging to B. were connected by a single private drain with a public sewer. The drain was complained of as a nuisance, and the surveyor of the local sanitary authority opened a part of the drain situated at the back of B.'s two houses and one of A.'s houses, and found it there choked with sewage. The local authority then, under section 41 of the Public Health Act, 1875, served a notice on both A. and B., addressed to them jointly, requiring them to relay the whole drain. A. and B. having neglected to comply, the local authority themselves repaired the whole drain, and also lowered the level of it in relaying it. They then sued A. under section 19 of the Public Health Act, 1890, for his proportion, as apportioned by their surveyor, of the expenses so incurred. The apportionment was not disputed by A.

Held, (1) that the fact that the notice to repair was in form a joint notice to A. and B. did not render it invalid; (2) that it was not necessary that the whole of the drain should have been previously examined; and (3) that if the work done in respect of which the expenses were sought to be recovered was not substantially the same as that specified in the notice, the expenses incurred were not recoverable.

Special case stated by justices on the hearing of a summons taken out by the Barnes Urban District Council to recover from one Lancaster the sum of £12 16s. 3d., being his share of the costs incurred by the council in repairing the drain hereinafter described.

The drain was a single private drain serving the houses Nos. 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, Park-terrace in the respondents' district. It began opposite the back of No. 10, and after passing along the back of the other houses was connected with a public sewer beyond No. 6. Of these houses Nos. 8, 9, and 10 belonged to the appellant, the other two belonging to one Baker.

On the 23rd of March, 1897, the respondents having received a complaint in writing as to the condition of this drain, passed a resolution pursuant to section 41 of the Public Health Act, 1875, empowering their surveyor to examine the drain. On the following day their surveyor opened the ground at the rear of Nos. 6, 7, and 8 and found the connections therewith broken and choked with sewage. No evidence was given that the drain was inspected at the rear of Nos. 9 and 10.

The next day (the 25th of March) notice was given to Lancaster and to Baker, which, after reciting that they were the owners of the respective premises, continued thus: "Notice is hereby given you that I, the said surveyor for and on behalf of the Urban District Council of Barnes, require you to commence the necessary works within forty-eight hours from the service of this notice, and to be completed within the space of ten days from the date of such service, and to remedy the above defect—that is to say, that you relay the said drain with an intercepting trap at No. 6, Park-terrace, aforesaid, and place a ventilator at the head of the drain at No. 10, Park-terrace aforesaid, with proper connections to each of the said houses, the said work to be done to my satisfaction. And further, take notice that if this notice is not complied with you will be liable to a penalty. . . . And the Urban District Council of Barnes may, if they think fit, themselves execute the said works, and may recover from the owners the expenses thereof in such shares and proportions as shall be settled by me as their surveyor or (in case of dispute) by a court of summary jurisdiction, or the said council may by order declare the same to be private improvement expenses."

The owners failed to comply with the notice, and the respondents repaired and cleansed the portion of the drain belonging to and in rear of Nos. 6, 7, 8, and 9; and further, to secure a better fall to the public sewer, re-laid it at a lower level.

The surveyor served due notice of apportionment on the appellant, which was not disputed, within three months.

On behalf of the appellant it was contended that the notice requiring him to do the work was bad, on the ground that only a part of the drain ordered to be repaired had been examined, whereas inspection under the section was a condition precedent to the giving of such a notice by the surveyor; that to do part of the work ordered the appellant must necessarily trespass on another person's premises; that the respondents, in so altering the level of the drain, thereby made a new drain and did work which they did not by their notice require the appellant to do, and could not therefore charge him with the costs.

The justices overruled these objections, and ordered the appellant to pay the sum apportioned to him.

The appellant appealed.

Courthope-Munroe, for the appellant.—The questions for the decision of the court are: (1) Was the notice given to Lancaster and Baker bad on the ground that, as to Lancaster's part of the drain, at rear of No. 10, there was no previous examination? Under section 41 of the Public Health Act, 1875, a previous examination of a drain alleged to be a nuisance is a condition precedent to the service of a notice to repair the drain. These proceedings were taken under section 19 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, which authorizes local authorities to recover expenses from the owners of houses in such shares and proportions as shall be settled by their surveyor or a court of summary jurisdiction for work which section 41 of the Act of 1875 gives power to be done. If the respondents' contention is right, then an examination of a drain at the rear of one house would be a sufficient "examination" to serve notice on the owners of the rest of the houses in a whole street. Particulars of the work to be done must be set out in the notice to each owner, and this cannot be done unless there has been an inspection. (2) I say the order is bad, because a man should not be liable to penalties for failure to comply with a notice the carrying out of which would compel him to commit a trespass: Scarborough Corporation v. Scarborough Union, 1 Ex. D. 344, 25 W. R. Dig. 166; Reg. v. Trimble, 36 L. T. Rep. 508, 25 W. R. Dig. 167. (3) The respondents cannot in this case recover their costs, because the notice was to relay the drain; it said nothing about alteration of the level. The council have not relaid the drain merely, but have substantially substituted a new drain at a different level for the old one.

Macmorran, Q.C., and E. U. Bullen, for respondent council.—The section treats the drain as one entire thing and provides that if the drain is complained of as being a nuisance and on examination is found to be defective, then the owners after notice must put the drain right or pay for the work being done by the local authority. The liability is not on each owner for his particular separate bit of the drain, but upon the owners generally for the drain as a whole. There is no hardship in that if the nuisance is due to the negligence of one owner the surveyor can apportion a merely nominal sum or nothing upon the others. Notice must necessarily be given to the owners collectively. It is only following the common procedure under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875. The point taken that the order is bad because there is a penalty under section 41 of the Act of 1875 is ill-founded since the penal provisions are not incorporated with section 19 of the Act of 1890, and cannot be read as applying in the case of proceedings under that section: Parker v. Inge, 17 Q. B. D. 584, 35 W. R. Dig. 141. Lastly, the case has not found that the work done differed from the work specified to be done in the notice. To relay a drain means to relay it in such a manner that it will be effectual, and that may very well involve some alteration of level.

WILLS, J.—The first point which arises here is whether there is power under section 19 of the Public Health Act, 1890, on the part of the local authority to give notice to the owners of the premises affected generally, or whether it is necessary to give each individual owner a separate notice as to the work to be done by him, or to couple with the general notice a notice as to the work to be done by each individual. Mr. Courthope-Munroe contended that a man could not be ordered to do work which would involve his trespassing on the premises of another person. If disobedience to the order would have involved a penalty there might have been substance in that argument, but no penalty is provided. There is no substantial difference between the language of section 19 of the Act of 1890 and that of section 150 of the Act of 1875, under which it is well-known that the notice to execute repairs is always framed generally. In practice, moreover, we know that the difficulties in the way of the execution of combined work of the kind in question by different owners are such that it is never done by them, but the work is left to be done by the local authority; and I think it would be wrong to hold that a notice in that form is invalid.

Then it was argued that, as the local authority only opened the drain opposite three out of the five houses, they could not give notice with respect to the other houses. In my opinion that is not so. I think it is enough to make a sufficient examination to discover that the drain is out of order; and that was done in this case, and the drain and connections was found to be broken and choked with sewage. Then the notice was given, and the local authority having done the work seek to be repaid. In my opinion the provision that the expenses are in that case to be apportioned by the surveyor, or in case of dispute by a court of summary jurisdiction, renders the enactment quite reasonable, and removes the grievance of that owner whose particular portions of the drain are not defective and did not contribute to the nuisance. I agree that, if it were not for the provision as to apportionment, it would be hard that such an owner should be called upon to pay a substantial part of the expenses of abating the nuisance. But the surveyor, or the justices on appeal from him, can direct that the person not in fault ought not to be called upon to pay anything substantial, or perhaps that he ought to pay nothing at all. It is clear, therefore, that the whole proceedings are not made wrong because the notice is addressed to persons who have not substantially contributed to the nuisance. The order was to relay the drain, and the justices have found that the drain was "relaid at a lower level." That may mean something merely trivial, or it may mean something substantial, and as we have not the materials to decide whether this is so or not the case must go back to the justices. If the justices should find that the work done was substantially different from that directed to be done in the notice, then the respondents cannot recover the expenses so incurred by them in doing work never ordered in fact to be done by the owner of the premises; and in that case this appeal must be allowed with costs. If this question is decided adversely to the appellant, then this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

KENNEDY, J.—I am of the same opinion. The last point is the really important point in the decision of this appeal. I agree that a local authority cannot order one kind of work to be done, do another kind of work themselves, and charge the owners with the costs of the latter. For the reason my brother Wills has pointed out, the case must go back for the justices to decide this question of fact.

Case remitted accordingly.

GEEN v. NEWINGTON VESTRY. (a.)

Metropolis management—Nuisance—Sewer or drain—Drain for drainage by combined operation—Evidence of order of vestry—Unauthorized connection between drains—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 74, 250.

A metropolitan vestry produced from their records a plan submitted in 1874 by the present appellant for drainage of a group of houses belonging to him by means of a single pipe, bearing on it an application by the owner of the houses to the vestry for their sanction to the proposed work, and evidence was given that the plan was carried out under the superintendence of the officer of the vestry. At a subsequent date the owner of adjoining premises, without authority and without the knowledge of the parties to this appeal, connected with the pipe for the draining by a combined operation the appellant's houses in question, a pipe to carry off sewage from his stables. The drainage became defective and the question was whether the appellant or the vestry was to abate the nuisance.

Held, that there was evidence upon which it might be inferred that the houses had been drained by a combined operation by an order of the vestry within the meaning of section 74 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and therefore if the drain had been used only for the purposes for which it was originally made the vestry would not have been responsible for the repairs now necessary. The connection, however, of a drain from other premises, although unauthorized, rendered the original "drain" a "sewer" within section 250 of that Act, and it was therefore now repairable by the vestry.

Holland v. Lazarus, 66 L. J. Q. B. 285, 45 W. R. Dig. 99, considered and approved.

Case stated by A. A. Hopkins, Esq., a Metropolitan police magistrate.

The appellant, as owner of four adjoining houses in Clandon-street in the respondents' parish, was summoned by them under section 2 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, in respect of a nuisance existing upon his premises arising from defective drainage. The appellant admitted the nuisance, and the only question for the determination of the court was whether the appellant or the vestry were liable to abate it.

The case stated the following facts:

In 1874 the four houses in question were owned by one Gant, who in June of that year deposited with the respondents a plan showing the proposed drainage for these houses, and bearing on it an application to the respondents in these terms: "I hereby apply for leave, at my own expense, to lay, in accordance with the regulations of the vestry, and as shown by the plan and references below, with glazed stoneware pipe drain 9 in. and 6 in. in diameter from the premises known as 6, 5, 4, 3, Clandon-street into the sewer in Clandon-street."

The plan showed that the drainage of these houses was to be conveyed into the main sewer by a single pipe with which the drain from each house respectively was to be connected, and subsequently the work was carried out in accordance with the plan and not otherwise, and the nuisance now complained of arose from the defective state of that drainage.

At the hearing before the magistrate, the respondents produced from the office of their surveyor a book containing the plan above mentioned, upon which was a note initialed by their surveyor in these terms: "Viewed by Goatman and found to be laid satisfactorily." Goatman gave evidence before the learned magistrate, that as foreman under the vestry's surveyor he had superintended the work in accordance with his orders. No minute of the respondents or of any of their committees could be found having any reference to the matter.

The appellant contended that there was no evidence of any order by the respondents sanctioning the combined drainage operation. The learned magistrate decided otherwise, and held that, if as a matter of law he might be satisfied by the evidence, he was satisfied thereby that the respondents had then sanctioned the combined drainage operation. He found as a fact that the combined drainage operation was carried out by Gant according to the plan, and not otherwise, under the superintendence of the respondents' then surveyor, and that the drainage operation when completed was then a combined drainage operation by which the four houses, and no other premises, were drained.

At the hearing before the magistrate it was proved that a connection existed at the time that the present proceedings were taken between the combined drainage of the four houses and the drains of the stables of No. 1, Clandon-street, and that by means of such connection the stables were drained into and through the combined drainage of the four houses. It was further proved that this connection had existed for the past fourteen years at least, but had not been made by, or by any authority of, the appellant, or to his knowledge. It was not proved how or when or by whom or under what circumstances the connection was made, nor whether or not No. 1, Clandon-street or its stables had at any time since 1874 been in the same ownership as the four houses, and the only fact the magistrate was able to find as to the making of the connection was that it had been made without the knowledge of the respondents at some time subsequent to the completion of the combined drainage by which the four houses only and no other premises were then drained.

The learned magistrate made an order upon the appellant on these facts to abate the nuisance.

The questions for the opinion of the court were: (1) whether there was any evidence by which the magistrate might be satisfied that the four houses were drained by a combined operation under the order of the respondents; and (2) whether, assuming the first question to be answered in the affirmative, the learned magistrate was right in holding the appellant to be liable to abate the nuisance.

English Harrison and A. C. Glen for the appellant.—The question is whether this pipe which conveys the drainage of the four houses and of the stable of a fifth is a "drain" or a "sewer" within the Metropolis Management Acts. If it is a drain then the order is right, but if it is a sewer then the order is wrong. Since it became vested in the respondents by section 68 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and under section 69 of that Act the respondents are responsible for its proper maintenance. This pipe from the first was a sewer unless it was constructed under an order of the vestry for combined drainage, the vestry having power under section 74 to make such an order. And the onus of showing such an order was made is upon the respondents: Reg. v. Vestry of St. Matthew's, Bethnal Green, 44 W. R. 559, [1896] 2 Q. B. 697, affirmed in the House of Lords under the name of Vestry of St. Matthew's, Bethnal Green v. School Board for London, ante, p. 353, [1898] A. C. 190; Kershaw v. Taylor, 44 W. R. 28, [1895] 2 Q. B. 471. That onus the respondents have failed to discharge, and the magistrate was wrong in the conclusion he come to. Bateman v. Poplar District Board, 33 Ch. D. 360, 35 W. R. Dig. 131, shows that approval by the vestry may be equivalent to an order, but there a minute of the district board was produced in evidence recording their approval. That is not the evidence here. If the vestry did give their approval that is not of itself sufficient, since their approval was equally necessary having regard to sections 47, 64 and 88 of the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862, whether the pipe was laid as a combined drain or a sewer. If it is held that the pipe was originally laid under an order of the vestry for combined drainage, i.e., was a "drain," the connection of the stable drain made it a "sewer," for the order, if it existed at all was not one for the drainage of the four houses plus that of the stable, and the fact that the stable drain was connected thereto without their authority or knowledge makes no difference: Holland v. Lazarus, 66 L. J. Q. B. 285, 45 W. R. Dig. 99.

Macmorran, Q.C., for the respondents.—The rule is laid down in Bateman v. Poplar District Board that approval by vestry is equivalent to an order. The evidence shows the vestry's approval was given in this case. [He was stopped on this point.] On the second point, whether the connection with the pipe in question of the drain from the stables made the drain a sewer, I admit the case of Holland v. Lazarus, the facts of which are on all fours with this case, is indistinguishable, but that was a decision at nisi prius, and is not binding on this court. It is unfair that the vestry should be saddled with the responsibility for a drain by a wholly unlawful act which, having no knowledge that it was being committed, they were unable to prevent.

WILLS, J.—The facts of this case appear to me to be fairly clear. There is evidence in my opinion for holding that originally this contrivance for drainage was constructed with a view of its draining these four houses only by a combined operation. The plan for the drainage was deposited by the then owner with the vestry, and it was found upon their plan book, which was produced before the magistrate. It is proved by the evidence of Goatman that the work was carried out under the supervision of the surveyor to the vestry and in accordance with his orders, and it is signed by the proper officer, and there is a note upon it by that officer's foreman. On such evidence as that is it an unreasonable conclusion to come to that the matter at the time had received the attention of the vestry, and that they had sanctioned what was then done? So far I am in accord with the view taken by the magistrate. But another point, the really substantial one as it seems to me, was taken by the appellant that by the subsequent connecting of the stable drain it became a sewer, if it was not a sewer before. We have therefore to decide whether, after that date and as the matter is now, this contrivance as I will call it, used for the double purpose of draining the four houses, plus the stable, is a "drain" or a "sewer."

The Act says "any drain for draining any group or block of houses by a combined operation under the order of any vestry or district board" is a drain. As matters stand now, however, there is something beyond that. There is a combined system which would be a drain if it stood by itself and drained merely the appellant's block of four houses, but the fact that it drains the stables belonging to other premises, I think, clearly takes it out of the definition of a "drain," and makes it come within that of a "sewer." Our attention was called by Mr. Macmorran to what North, J., said in his judgment in Bateman v. Poplar District Board, which case appears not to have been cited in Holland v. Lazarus. Speaking of a drain laid under order of a district board for the drainage of a row of houses by a combined operation, with which another drain had been connected, he says: "I am not at present prepared to hold that the unlawful act of a stranger done without the consent of the owner of the block of houses could affect his ownership of the 9 in. drain, or the liability of the district board, by vesting the drain in them, and thus throwing the responsibility for it upon them." I quite appreciate that North, J., declined to decide the point when it was not necessary to decide it. My experience has fully convinced me of the wisdom of refraining from deciding a point which does not require to be determined in order to decide the question actually before the court. In this case that question has to be decided, and I feel no doubt as to the answer.

I do not see how the terms of the definition clause can be got out of; this is de facto a sewer, because it is now used to take the drainage from more than one house, and not being within the exception—not being a drain for draining a block of houses alone by a combined operation, although constructed under an order of the vestry—it must be a sewer, and as such vested in the respondents under section 68, and consequently is repairable by them under section 69. The question of responsibility does not depend upon the consideration of hardship, but upon whether we ought to hold this contrivance, which is not within the definition of a "drain," nevertheless to be a drain at the present time and not a sewer. I think the appeal must be allowed, and the magistrates' order quashed.

KENNEDY, J., delivered judgment to the same effect.

Appeal allowed; order quashed.

From Q. B. Div. (A. L. Smith, Chitty, and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — May 16.

STROUD v. LAWSON. (a.)

Practice — Parties — Joinder of plaintiffs — Separate causes of action—Right to relief arising out of same transaction—Ord. 16, r. 1.

In an action by a shareholder in a limited company against the directors, the company being joined as a defendant, the plaintiff claimed damages from the directors for having induced him by deceit and fraud to buy shares in the company, one of the particulars of deceit and fraud being the payment of a dividend out of capital. The plaintiff also claimed on behalf of himself and all the other shareholders a declaration that the payment of the said dividend was ultra vires and illegal, and that the directors were liable to repay to the company the money so paid by them.

Held, that the plaintiff, suing in two different capacities, could not join the two separate causes of action in one action, inasmuch as they did not arise out of the same transaction, or series of transactions, within the meaning of ord. 16, r. 1.

Appeal from the refusal of Darling, J., to strike out a statement of claim as embarrassing.

The plaintiff was a shareholder in the Beeston Pneumatic Tyre Co. The defendants were the three directors of the company and the company itself.

The plaintiff alleged that the defendants other than the company had by means of deceit and fraud induced him to purchase shares in the company at a price far above their real value. One of the particulars of the alleged deceit and fraud was the declaration and payment of a dividend otherwise than out of the profits of the company. The plaintiff also alleged on behalf of himself and all the other shareholders that the payment of the said dividend was ultra vires and illegal.

The plaintiff claimed—first on his own behalf, damages for the said deceit and fraud; secondly, on behalf of himself and all the other shareholders, a declaration that the said dividend was ultra vires and illegal, and that the defendants other than the company were jointly and severally liable to make good to the company all moneys paid by them out of the company's assets in respect of the said dividend.

An application by the defendants that the statement of claim should be struck out as embarrassing, unless the plaintiff elected on which of the two causes of action he would proceed, was dismissed by Darling, J., at chambers.

The defendants appealed.

Brooke-Little, for the defendants.—The case must be treated as if there were two several plaintiffs; for the plaintiff sues in two several capacities, the one personal, the other representative. It is therefore governed by ord. 16, r. 1, which enacts that "all persons may be joined in one action as plaintiffs, in whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same transaction or series of transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally, or in the alternative, where, if such persons brought separate actions, any common question of law or fact would arise." The plaintiff's alleged right to relief in respect of the first cause of action does not arise out of the same transaction or series of transactions as his alleged right to right to relief in respect of the second cause of action. The two causes of action therefore cannot rightly be joined in one action, and the plaintiff ought to be put to his election.

Mattinson, Q. C., and G. F. Hart, for the plaintiff.—The two causes of action are rightly joined under ord. 16, r. 1. They arise out of the same transactions, and the illegal payment of a dividend is a matter which gives rise to a question which is common to both causes of action.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—The question is, whether the plaintiff ought to be put to his election as between two absolutely distinct causes of action. I am of opinion that he ought to be put to his election. The action is brought by the plaintiff, in the first place, on his own behalf, to recover damages from the three defendants who are directors for having cheated him into becoming a shareholder by false and fraudulent misrepresentations. That is a common-law action of deceit, and is purely personal to the plaintiff. He then sues in different capacity, that is to say, not in his own personal capacity, but on behalf of himself and all the other shareholders he sues the same three persons for having paid a dividend out of capital. In order to bring this sort of action it was necessary for him to sue in a representative capacity on behalf of himself and the other shareholders, and it was also necessary to make the company a defendant on the record. His claim on this second cause of action is that the defendants other than the company should put back the money, which they have so paid ultra vires, not into his own pocket, but into the coffers of the company for the benefit of the shareholders. The plaintiff is thus joining in one action a well-known common-law action and an action which is familiar in the Chancery Division. In the one he sues in his personal capacity, and he has to prove fraud; in the other he sues not on his own behalf alone but in a representative capacity, and he has not to prove fraud, but merely that the directors acted ultra vires. In my opinion these are two entirely distinct causes of action, and they do not come within ord. 16, r. 1, as arising out of the same transaction or series of transactions. The present rule was made in consequence of the decision of the House of Lords in Smurthwaite v. Hannay, 43 W. R. 113, [1894] A. C. 494, and the subsequent case of Carter v. Rigby, 44 W. R. 566, [1896] 2 Q. B. 113. But the plaintiff fails to bring the present case within the rule, unless he can show that the two causes of action arose out of the same transaction. It is not enough to show that there is a common question of law or fact. I therefore think that the proper order to make in this case is that the statement of claim be struck out, unless the plaintiff elect on which of the two causes of action he will proceed.

In re MORRIS.

JAMES v. LONDON AND COUNTY BANKING CO. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Proof—Bill of exchange—Secured creditor—Consolidation of debts and securities.

In bankruptcy it would primâ facie be right for a creditor who had several debts due to him from a bankrupt to prove for the lump sum without distinguishing the debts. But if there were different rights over with respect to some of the debts as against third parties, or different securities given by the bankrupt for the different debts, it would be the duty of the trustee to require the person proving to specify the particular debts, or the security for each debt.

In re Smith and Logan, Ex parte Fletcher and Brandon, 43 W. R. 412, 2 Manson Bank. Rep. 70, explained.

The holder of four dishonoured bills of exchange sent in a proof in the liquidation of the estate of a firm which had endorsed each bill, for the aggregate amount of the four bills with noting expenses. The trustee in the liquidation had different rights of indemnity in respect of the four bills. In respect of two of those bills the holder had received more than 20s. in the £ upon his proofs against the various parties to the said bills, but the total amount received by him was considerably less than the aggregate amount claimed in respect of the four bills.

Held, that he could not be allowed to retain the surplus beyond the amount due on either of the two overpaid bills and attribute it to payment of the debts on the other bills.

Summons.

The defendants were at the date of the creditor's deed hereinafter mentioned holders of four bills of exchange hereinafter referred to as A, B, C, and D. A, B, and C were for £2,000 each, and D £1,000. A and C were drawn by Job & Co., in Newfoundland, upon Job Bros., in England, payable to order of the Commercial Bank of Newfoundland, and were accepted by Job Bros. B and D were drawn by Goodridge in Newfoundland upon Bennett in England, payable in like manner as A and C, and were accepted by Bennett. A, B, C, and D were severally endorsed by the said bank to Prowse, Hall & Morris, and by them to R., and by R. to the defendants, all in the ordinary course and for value.

The said bank, Job Bros., Bennett, and Goodridge became bankrupt or entered into liquidation, and the defendants proved against their respective estates for the amounts due upon the bills to which they were respectively parties. In September, 1896, R. paid the defendants in respect of the said four bills £615 odd, forming part of the estate of Prowse, Hall, & Morris, which came into the hands of R., and the propriety of such payment was not now disputed.

The plaintiff was the trustee of a creditors' deed entered into in April, 1895, by Morris, the debtor, who was the surviving partner of the firm of Prowse, Hall, & Morris. The deed in effect provided for the distribution of that firm's assets as in bankruptcy among the assenting creditors who would have been entitled to prove if the debtor had been adjudicated bankrupt as therein mentioned. The defendants, waiving interest, claimed under the said deed against the estate of the firm for the amount of the said four bills of exchange with noting expenses, after deducting the said sum of £615 odd, making a total of about £6,480.

Upon their proofs against the various parties to the said bills, the defendants received amounts in respect of the bills B and D exceeding the amounts due on such bills, with noting expenses and interest, by £373 odd and £192 odd respectively. The defendants had not received payment in full of either of the bills A and C, and the whole amount received by them was less than the whole amount due in respect of the said four bills. Under these circumstances the plaintiff claimed to have it declared that the defendants were not entitled to any further dividends from the estate of Prowse, Hall, & Morris in respect of bills B and D, and that the said sums of £373 and £192 should be repaid by the defendants to the plaintiff, and that the defendants should be ordered to deliver up the said bills to the plaintiff. The plaintiff had in fact paid the defendants by way of dividends from the estate of Prowse, Hall, & Morris the said sums of £365 and of £182 10s. in respect of the bills B and D respectively, but did not know at the time of such payment how much had been received by the defendants in respect of the said bills.

Levett, Q.C., and F. Thompson, for the plaintiff.—The liability of the indorser of a bill of exchange is governed by the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 55 (2). He engages that it shall be "accepted and paid according to its tenor, and that if it be dishonoured he will compensate the holder." The defendant bank had therefore four separate rights of indemnity, and by indorsing each bill Prowse, Hall, & Morris engaged with the bank that they would indemnify the bank in respect of that bill. In re Smith and Logan, Ex parte Fletcher and Brandon, 43 W. R. 412, 2 Manson Bank. Rep. 70, will be cited to show that the bank could lump together the amounts due on the four several bills and prove for the aggregate sum against Prowse & Co., but that case only shows that it is permissible to lump together debts and securities.

They also cited Paley v. Field, 12 Ves. 435.

Neville, Q.C., and Muir Mackenzie, for the defendants.—Section 57 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, shows the damages recoverable where a bill is dishonoured. But the question is governed by the law and practice in bankruptcy. The question is one of admission of proof and not of realization of securities. The practice is to make a single proof, as was done here, and not distinct proofs. The defendants, who are secured creditors in respect of the bills, were not required and could not be compelled to value separately the component parts of their security. They were entitled to lump the debts and prove for the aggregate amount against the estate of Prowse & Co.: see In re Smith and Logan, Ex parte Fletcher and Brandon. That is the ordinary practice in bankruptcy. The plaintiff's claim is therefore wrong.

They also cited In re Du Bedat, 29 L. R. Ir. 324, 41 W. R. Dig. 17, and referred to the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, ss. 37 (3), 38, and schedule 2, and Williams on Bankruptcy (1898) p. 526.

ROMER, J.—I have no doubt that in the ordinary case in bankruptcy it would primâ facie be right, and the ordinary course to pursue, for a creditor who has several debts due to him from a bankrupt to prove for the lump sum without distinguishing the debts, and in most cases that is all that is necessary. But it appears to me that if the debts are distinct in substance in this respect that the trustee in bankruptcy may have different rights over with respect to some of these debts as against third parties, or there are different securities given by the bankrupt for the different debts, that then it would not only be the right, but I should say it would be the duty, of the trustee in bankruptcy to require the person proving to specify the particular debts, and the value of the security if there were a security for each debt, unless, indeed, of course there was a right of consolidation.

That is what really was decided in that case of In re Smith and Logan which has been cited before me. In that particular case it happened that the trustee having consented to the form of proof of different secured debts as a whole, the securities all being lumped and valued together as a whole, having consented to that, and having let the time pass by in which he could remedy that, it was held that he was barred, and that it was too late for him to come forward then and say that the debts ought to be separately considered and the separate securities separately valued. In my opinion the right of the trustee in bankruptcy to have debts separately valued where the debts, as I have said, may involve different rights over by the trustee or different rights of the trustee in respect of each debt, is certainly not confined to a case where the debts are secured by securities of the bankrupt. Take this case, a case I put to counsel in course of the argument. Suppose a creditor is a creditor on a bill of which the bankrupt is the last endorser, and he is also a creditor on a common goods sold and delivered account of the bankrupt, and he proves for the amount of the bill and for the amount of the ordinary debt. After proof, but before any payment of dividend by the bankrupt, the persons who are primarily liable on the bill before the bankrupt, pay the bill in full, could the creditor in that case claim to keep on receiving dividends on that bill after it had been paid him in full as well as on the other debt on the ground that he had proved on the whole? I think certainly not. I think, unless indeed there had been any waiver of rights which I am not considering, that very case shows that in such a case of debts having separate rights attaching to them separate liabilities and rights over, it is the duty of the trustee, as it appears to me, as well as his right to require in a case of that kind that the proofs should not be lumped together, but that the items of the proof shall appear, though I quite agree that so long as the same proof remains unpaid off as to any portion, he is for the purpose of the proof, and for the purpose of voting and so forth, regarded as a creditor for the total amount of his proof at the time when he comes in and proves.

Now, to apply the principle of that case to the case before me. Here there were proofs in respect of four separate bills. Those bills the trustee in bankruptcy had different rights in respect of. If the bills were paid in full by the bankrupt, the persons as against whom he would have a right over were different, so that he had different rights, and the trustee in bankruptcy had different rights in respect of each of the bills. What happened? Two of those bills are paid in full and overpaid, so that it appears that the creditor has been paid more than 20s. in the £ in respect of each bill. Clearly, to my mind, he cannot claim, as against the persons who in the aggregate were liable on that bill, to retain the surplus he has received, and claim to attribute it to payment of the debts on the other bills. The persons who in the aggregate are liable on one of those bills being different from the persons who in the aggregate are liable on the other bills, have a right to complain, and would naturally have the right to complain if the holder of one bill claim to set off the surplus he has received in respect of the others. The must as between themselves have a right to require between them payment of what the creditor had received over 20s. in the £ on the whole.

That being so, when I come to consider the bills before me, where the creditor proving has received more than 20s. in the £, who, as between the persons in the aggregate liable on those bills, is entitled to receive the overplus? It turns out in this case it must be the trustee in bankruptcy, because all the other persons who overpaid on those bills were primarily liable as against the trustee in bankruptcy. It appears to me, therefore, that the bankrupt's trustee was entitled in respect of the surplus received by each creditor in respect of each bill to have that surplus handed back to him, and I so decide. The trustee is also entitled to have the two paid bills handed over.

TOMS v. CLACTON URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL. (a.)

Local government—Vendor and purchaser—Burial—Purchase of land by district council for—Action for injunction under Burial Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 128), s. 9—Costs—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61).

The rule that a grantor cannot derogate from his own grant disentitles the vendor of land for the purposes of a cemetery from claiming the benefit of the prohibition in section 9 of the Burial Act, 1855, against burying within 100 yards of a dwelling-house, in respect of a house situate on other land of the vendor; and a lessee or occupier thereof, after and with full knowledge of the vendor's grant, cannot be in a better position than his own grantor.

In the above action, which was for an injunction under section 9 of the Burial Act, 1855, to restrain a district council from using land for the purposes of a cemetery within 100 yards from the plaintiff's dwelling-house, judgment was accordingly given for the defendants.

The defendants then claimed that they were entitled as of right to costs as between solicitor and client by virtue of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893.

Held, that the action was for an "act done in pursuance of public duty," and was therefore one to which the Act applied.

Action.

This was an action for an injunction to restrain the defendants from using land in their possession for the purposes of a cemetery, except beyond a radius of 100 yards from the plaintiff's dwelling-house. It appeared that the vendor of the land had sold the fee simple to the defendants for the purposes of a cemetery, and the conveyance contained a covenant by them not to use the land for any other purposes except with the vendor's consent. The plaintiff was the occupier of a small cottage close to the land. This cottage belonged to the vendor, and the plaintiff was in his service as gardener. The tenancy appeared to be a weekly one.

By 18 & 19 Vict. c. 128, s. 9, no ground not already used as or appropriated for a cemetery shall be used for burials within the distance of 100 yards from any dwelling-house without the consent of the owner, lessee, or occupier of such dwelling-house.

The plaintiff was cross-examined with the object of extracting from him the admission that he was plaintiff in name only, and that the real, although not nominal, plaintiff was his employer, the vendor of the land.

Levett, Q.C., and C. E. Jones, for the plaintiff.—The land has not been appropriated for burial within the meaning of the enactment, and the plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of the prohibition in section 9 of the Burial Act, 1855, against burying within 100 yards of a dwelling-house.

Neville, Q.C., and Ingpen, for the defendants.—If the prohibition of the Act were held to apply in such a case, the express purpose of the vendor's grant might be entirely defeated, and the effect of the rule that a man shall not derogate from his grant is, as shown by the cases, to prevent not only the vendor, but anyone claiming through or under him, from invoking the Act for the purpose of restricting the defendants' user of the land: see Elliot v. North-Eastern Railway Co., 8 W. R. 603, 11 ib. 604, 1 Johns. & H. 145, 10 H. L. Cas. 333; Siddons v. Short, 2 C. P. D. 572, 26 W. R. Dig. 253.

They also referred to Broomfield v. Williams, 45 W. R. 469, [1897] 1 Ch. 602; Swansborough v. Coventry, 2 Moo. & Sc. 362, 9 Bing. 305; Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 141; and Public Health (Interments) Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 31).

ROMER, J.—I will assume for the purpose of my judgment that the land is subject to the restrictions imposed by the Burial Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 85), and the Burial Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 128), or to analogous restrictions. The vendor granted the land in order that every part of it should be used for the purposes of a cemetery. He then placed his gardener in a cottage near it for the purpose of bringing this action and preventing in effect any of it being so used. There is no doubt that the action in substance is the vendor's action, and the costs of the action will have to be provided by him. Could he then bring an action to prevent its use for the express purpose for which he sold it? That would be derogating from his grant to the defendants. It must be remembered that the defendants are doing nothing illegal. Only they have, under the Burial Acts, to obtain the statutory consent of the owner to what they are doing. The vendor, therefore, could not bring an action. Could a person in the position of the plaintiff, and acting bonâ fide, do so—that is to say, a lessee or occupier, after and with full knowledge of the vendor's grant and its purpose? Such a person could not be in any better position than his own grantor, or acquire a right which his own grantor had not. In fact the plaintiff is a weekly tenant only of the vendor, and he could give a week's notice to the plaintiff at any time. Other grounds might be stated for dismissing the action. But on the above ground alone the action fails. I dismiss the action with costs.

Neville, for the defendants, asked for costs as between solicitor and client under the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, citing Harrop v. Ossett Corporation, ante, p. 391, [1898] 1 Ch. 525.

Levett, for the plaintiff, submitted that the action was not, within the words of section 1, brought against the defendants "for any act done in pursuance or execution or intended execution of any Act of Parliament or of any public duty or authority."

(a.) Reported by J. F. WALEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

He referred to the case of the Somersetshire Drainage Commissioners v. Corporation of Bridgwater, before the Court of Appeal on the 4th of April, 1898, where the plaintiffs were unsuccessful in a claim for an injunction restraining the defendants from carrying out public sewerage works so as to interfere with the banks and bed of the River Parrett, the court being of opinion that the defendants had a customary right to do the acts complained of. Counsel for the defendants in that action having asked for solicitor and client costs under the Act, their lordships held that the Act was not applicable, inasmuch as the question in dispute was on a custom, and the Act was meant to apply only to frivolous prosecutions and actions. The question, however, was not argued in that case.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 18.—ROMER, J.—I have considered the matter as to the question of costs, and I cannot see in the Act any limitation beyond that imposed by the very words of the Act. This action appears to me to be one against the defendants for using or being about to use certain land for burial purposes, and is, in my opinion, within the words of the Act an action against the defendants for an "act done in pursuance of public duty," and I cannot see, therefore, why the Act does not apply. I shall direct the registrar to draw up the order with costs to be taxed as between solicitor and client. I should like to have a decision of the Court of Appeal to guide me in determining the classes of cases to which the Act is not to apply.

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Case stated by justices of the county of Kent.

A bye-law made by the Kent County Council for the good rule and government of the county, under the powers given to them by section 23 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, and section 16 of the Local Government Act, 1888, and duly confirmed by the Secretary of State, provided that "No person shall sound or play upon any musical or noisy instrument or sing in any public place or highway within fifty yards of any dwelling house after being required by any constable or by any inmate of such house personally or by his or her servant, to desist." The appellant was charged under this bye-law on the information of the respondent, a police-constable, for that he on Sunday, the 10th of October, 1897, at the parish of Leeds, in the county of Kent, did sing in a certain highway within fifty yards of a dwelling-house there, after being required by a constable of the said county to desist. It was proved before the justices that the appellant, who was conducting an open-air religious service at about 5.45 p.m. on the 10th of October, 1897, did with others congregate within fifty yards of a dwelling-house in the parish of Leeds, and commence to sing a hymn, in which those with him joined, and that after singing two or three lines of the hymn he was requested by a constable to desist but continued singing after such request. And it was further proved by the occupier of the dwelling-house that the singing of the appellant and those with him was an annoyance to him, the occupier, but it was not proved that the occupier had requested the constable on the day in question to ask the appellant to desist from singing, although he had complained to the police on previous occasions. On the part of the appellant it was contended that the bye-law was invalid on the grounds that it was unreasonable; that it was not limited to cases of persons playing musical or noisy instruments or singing to the annoyance of residents or passengers; and that it created a new offence and was repugnant to the general law of the land. The justices were of opinion that the bye-law was good, and they convicted the appellant, imposing a fine of £1 with 13s. costs. And they stated the case for the opinion of the High Court.

The case was in the list for hearing before Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., and Mathew, J., in March, 1898, immediately after a case of Brownscombe v. Johnson, 78 L. T. Rep. 265, arising under the same bye-law, in which the facts were almost identical with those of the present case. In that case Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., held that the bye-law was valid, while Mathew, J., was of opinion that it was unreasonable and bad. The present case was therefore reserved for hearing before a specially-constituted court.

Robson, Q.C., and Hohler, for the appellant.—The bye-law is unreasonable and invalid. A bye-law made under these statutory powers must be in terms confined to prohibiting acts done to the annoyance of other people; but if this bye-law be valid a man may be convicted of an offence under it although his act is harmless and causes no annoyance to anyone. Everett v. Grapes, 3 L. T. Rep. 669, 9 W. R. C. L. Dig. 57; Heap v. Burnley Union, 32 W. R. 6[illegible], 12 Q. B. D. 617; Johnson v. The Mayor of Croydon, 16 Q. B. D. 708, 34 W. R. Dig. 129; Munro v. Watson, 57 L. T. Rep. 366, 36 W. R. Dig. 124; Strickland v. Hayes, 44 W. R. 398, [1896] 1 Q. B. 290. A bye-law similar to that in Strickland v. Hayes was held valid in Mantle v. Jordan, [1897] 1 Q. B. 248, 45 W. R. Dig. 88, on the ground that the prohibition was confined to cases where annoyance was caused. The bye-law is unreasonable on the further ground that it confers powers a single police-constable at his discretion of caprice to put a stop to an act which may not only be causing no annoyance but may be actually agreeable to the inhabitants: Alty v. Farrell, [1896] 1 Q. B. 636, 44 W. R. Dig. 92. It is true that in Burnett v. Berry, 44 W. R. 512, [1896] 1 Q. B. 641, a bye-law was upheld in which the prohibition did not contain words as to causing annoyance, but that case can only be supported on the ground that the bye-law dealt with the manifest evil of betting in streets.

Dickens, Q.C., and A. Gill, for the respondent.—The bye-law is good; it is made by a representative local authority, well acquainted with the wants and desires of the locality for which it legislates and responsible to the electorate; it has also been confirmed by a high state department. Such a bye-law ought not to be interfered with by the court except in extreme cases: Slattery v. Naylor, 36 W. R. 897, 13 App. Cas. 446; Bailey v. Williamson, 21 W. R. 404, L. R. 8 Q. B. 118. A bye-law is not unreasonable because, if harshly enforced, it may cause hardship in particular instances. The general public interest and the circumstances of the locality (as to which the local authority are the best judges) must be considered: Simmons v. Malling Rural District Council, 45 W. R. 603, [1897] 2 Q. B. 433; Wanstead Local Board of Health v. Wooster, 38 J. P. 21; Gray v. Sylvester, ante, p. 63. This court is not bound by the decisions of ordinary Divisional Courts, and is at liberty to review the earlier decisions upon the validity of bye-laws: Fortescue v. The Vestry of St. Matthew, Bethnal Green, [1891] 2 Q. B. 170, 39 W. R. Dig. 125.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 14.—Lord RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J.—The County Council of Kent, claiming to act under their statutory powers, made the following bye-law: "4. Playing musical instruments, &c.—No person shall sound or play upon any musical or noisy instrument or sing in any public place or highway within fifty yards of any dwelling-house after being required by any constable, or by an inmate of such house personally, or by his or her servant, to desist."

The appellant was summoned before the magistrates for offending against this bye-law, when it was proved that on the 17th of October, 1897, he persisted in singing in a public highway within fifty yards of a dwelling-house, after having been required by a police-constable to desist. It was further proved by the occupier of the dwelling-house that the singing of the appellant and those with him was an annoyance to such occupier. The occupier had not, on the day in question, set the constable in motion, but he had on previous occasions complained to the police of the appellant's singing. The magistrates convicted the appellant, and against that conviction the present appeal is brought.

The question reserved for this court is whether the bye-law is valid. If valid the conviction is to stand. It is objected that the bye-law is ultra vires on the ground that it is unreasonable and therefore bad. It is necessary, therefore, to see what is the authority under which the bye-law in question has been made, and what are the relations between its framers and those affected by it?

But first it seems necessary to consider what is a bye-law.

A bye-law of the class we are here considering I take to be an ordinance affecting the public or some portion of the public, imposed by some authority clothed with statutory powers ordering something to be done or not to be done and accompanied by some sanction or penalty for its non-observance. It necessarily involves restriction of liberty of action by persons who come under its operation as to acts which, but for the bye-law, they would be free to do or not to do, as they pleased. Further it involves this consequence—that if validly made it has the force of law within the sphere of its legitimate operation (see Edmonds (Appellant) v. The Company of Watermen, [1855] 24 L. J. M. C. 124).

In the present case we are dealing with a bye-law made by a local representative body—namely, the County Council of Kent, which is created under the Local Government Act, 1888, and which is endowed with the powers of making bye-laws given to municipal corporate bodies under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882.

Section 16 of the Local Government Act, 1888, provides that a county council shall have the same power of making bye-laws in relation to their county as the council of a borough have in relation to their borough; and it further provides that section 187 of the Public Health Act of 1875 shall apply to such bye-laws.

I will take these statutes in the order of time.

Section 182 of the Act of 1875 provides that all bye-laws made by a local authority under that Act shall be under their common seal and may be altered or repealed by a subsequent bye-law, but no bye-law shall be repugnant to the laws of England or to the provisions of the Act.

Section 183 gives power to impose penalties.

Section 184 provides that bye-laws shall not take effect until confirmed by the Local Government Board, which may allow or disallow them, and, before their confirmation, notice of intention to apply for confirmation must be advertised, and for a month at least before such application a copy of the proposed bye-laws must have been kept at the office of the local authority for the inspection of ratepayers, and the clerk of the local authority is bound to furnish on application a copy of the proposed bye-laws, or a part of them, to any ratepayer on a certain payment being made.

Section 23 of the Act of 1882 provides that the council of a borough may from time to time make such bye-laws as to them seem meet for the good rule and government of the borough and for the prevention and suppression of nuisances not already punishable in a summary manner, and they may by such bye-laws appoint such fines, not exceeding £5, as they deem necessary for the prevention of offences against the bye-laws.

It is under this authority that the bye-law in question was framed.

What are the checks or safeguards under which this very wide authority of making bye-laws is exercisable? The same section 23 further provides that no bye-law can be made unless two-thirds of the whole number of the council are present, and, when so made, it shall not come into force until the expiration of forty days after a copy thereof has been fixed on the town-hall and it shall not come into force until the expiration of forty days after a copy sealed with the corporate seal has been sent to the Secretary of State; and if within those forty days the Queen, with the advice of her Privy Council, disallows a proposed bye-law or part thereof, such bye-law or such part shall not come into force, and the Queen may within the forty days enlarge the time within which the bye-law shall not come into force.

We thus find that Parliament has thought fit to delegate to representative public bodies in towns and cities, and also in counties, the power of exercising their own judgment as to what are the bye-laws which to them seem proper to be made for good rule and government in their own localities. But that power is accompanied by certain safeguards; there must be antecedent publication of the bye-law, with a view, I presume, of eliciting the public opinion of the locality upon it, and such bye-laws shall have no force until after they have been forwarded to the Secretary of State. Further, the Queen, with the advice of her Privy Council, may disallow the bye-law wholly or in part, and may enlarge the suspensory period before it comes into operation. I agree that the presence of these safeguards in no way relieves the court of the responsibility of inquiring into the validity of bye-laws where they are brought in question, or in any way affects the authority of the court in the determination of their validity or invalidity.

It is to be observed, moreover, that the bye-laws having come into force they are not like the laws, or what were said to be the laws, of the Medes and Persians—they are not unchangeable. The power is to make bye-laws from time to time as to the authority shall seem meet, and if experience shows that in any respect existing bye-laws work hardly or inconveniently the local authority, acted upon by the public opinion, as it must necessarily be, of those concerned, has full power to repeal or alter them. It need hardly be added that should experience warrant that course the Legislature, which has given, may modify or take away the powers they have delegated. I have thought it well to deal with these points in some detail, and for this reason—that the great majority of the cases in which the question of bye-laws has been discussed are not cases of bye-laws of bodies of a public representative character entrusted by Parliament with delegated authority, but are for the most part cases of railway companies, dock companies, or other like companies which carry on their business for their own profit, although incidentally for the advantage of the public. In this class of case it is right that the courts should jealously watch the exercise of these powers and guard against their unnecessary or unreasonable exercise to the public disadvantage.

But when the court is called upon to consider the bye-laws of public representative bodies clothed with the ample authority which I have described, and exercising that authority accompanied by the checks and safeguards which have been mentioned, I think the consideration of such bye-laws ought to be approached from a different standpoint. They ought to be supported if possible. They ought to be, as has been said, "benevolently" interpreted, and credit ought to be given to those who have to administer them that they will be reasonably administered. This involves the introduction of no new canon of construction. But, further, looking to the character of the body legislating under the delegated authority of Parliament, to the subject-matter of such legislation, and to the nature and extent of the authority given to deal with matters which concern them and in the manner which to them shall seem meet, I think courts of justice ought to be slow to condemn as invalid any bye-laws so made under such conditions, on the ground of supposed unreasonableness. Notwithstanding what Cockburn, C.J., said in Bailey v. Williamson—an analogous case—I do not mean to say that there may not be cases in which it would be the duty of the court to condemn bye-laws made under such authority as these were made as invalid because unreasonable. But unreasonable in what sense? If, for instance, they were found to be partial and unequal in their operation as between different classes, if they were manifestly unjust, if they disclosed bad faith, if they involved such oppressive or gratuitous interference with the rights of those subject to them as could find no justification in the minds of reasonable men, the court might well say Parliament never intended to give authority to make such rules; they are unreasonable and ultra vires. But it is in this sense, and in this sense only, as I conceive, that the question of unreasonableness can properly be regarded. A bye-law is not unreasonable merely because particular judges may think that it goes further than is prudent or necessary or convenient, or because it is not accompanied by a qualification or an exception which some judges may think ought to be there. Surely it is not too much to say that, in matters which directly and mainly concern the people of the country who have the right to choose those whom they think best fitted to represent them in their local government bodies, such representatives may be trusted to understand their own requirements better than judges. Indeed, if the question of the validity of bye-laws were to be determined by the opinion of judges as to what was reasonable—in the narrow sense of that word—the cases in the books on this subject are no guide, for they reveal, as, indeed, one would expect, a wide diversity of judicial opinion, and they lay down no principle or definite standard by which reasonableness or unreasonableness may be tested.

So much for the general considerations which it seems to me ought to be borne in mind in considering bye-laws of this class. I now come to the bye-law in question.

It is admitted that the county council of Kent were within their authority in making a bye-law in relation to the subject-matter which is dealt with by the impeached bye-law. In other words, it is conceded—and properly so—that the local authority might make a bye-law imposing conditions under which musical instruments and singing might be permitted or prevented in public places. But it is objected that they have no authority to make a bye-law on that subject in the terms of this bye-law. Further, it is not contended that the bye-law should, in order to be valid, be confined to cases where the playing or singing amounted to a nuisance; but the objections are, as I understand them, that the bye-law is bad—first, because it is not confined to cases where the playing or singing is in fact causing annoyance, and next, because it enables a police-constable to bring it into operation by a request on his part to the player or singer to desist. As to the first of these objections, if the general principles upon which these bye-laws ought to be dealt with are those which I have already stated, it is clear that the absence of this qualification cannot make the bye-law invalid. But, further, such a qualification, in my judgment, would render the bye-law ineffective. What is to be the standard of annoyance? What may be a cause of annoyance to one person may be no annoyance, and may even be pleasurable, to another person. Again, who is to be the judge in such a case of whether there is or is not an annoyance? Is it to be the resident of the house within fifty yards of the playing or singing, or is it to be the magistrate who hears the charge? It is enough to say that in my judgment the absence of the suggested qualification cannot make the bye-law invalid, even if it be admitted that its presence would be an improvement.

As to the second objection—namely, that the policeman has the power of putting the bye-law into operation by requiring the player or singer to desist—I again say that, even if the absence of this power would be an improvement and would make the bye-law in the apprehension of some more reasonable, it is not on the principles I have already stated a ground for declaring the bye-law to be invalid. In support of this objection pictures have in argument been drawn (more or less highly coloured) of policemen who, without rhyme or reason, would or might gratuitously interfere with what might be a source of enjoyment to many. In answer, I say a policeman is not an irresponsible person without check or control; if he acts capriciously or vexatiously he can be checked by his immediate superiors, or he can be taught a lesson by the magistrates should he prefer vexatious charges. If the policeman persisted in saying that the musician should desist when the people in the neighbourhood desire his music, his gratuitous interference would promptly come to an end. Nor is it correct to say (as has been erroneously stated in some of the cases cited) that the magistrate would be bound in every case to convict where the musician did not desist when called upon. It is clear that, under section 16 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, the magistrate, if he thinks the case of so trifling a nature that it is inexpedient to inflict any punishment, may without proceeding to conviction dismiss the information. The facts of this case are certainly no illustration of the bye-law having been gratuitously or vexatiously put in force. The case states (paragraph 5) that although it was not proved that the occupier of the house within fifty yards had on the day in question requested the constable to require the appellant to desist, yet it was proved that the singing was an annoyance to the occupier and that he had on previous occasions complained to the police of such singing. Indeed, it was stated during the argument that the conviction here appealed from was the second conviction of the appellant for an offence against this bye-law.

I have carefully read the cases cited in argument, but I do not propose to consider them in detail. Many of them relate to bye-laws made under different statutes; others it is difficult to reconcile; few deal with the principles upon which bye-laws like those in question are to be dealt with by the courts; and some of them—as, for instance, Munro v. Watson, and perhaps Johnson v. Mayor of Croydon—may be distinguished from the present case.

In weighing previous authorities it is further to be recollected that the cases have come before Divisional Courts, usually consisting of two members, and that those cases, being in their nature criminal, there has been no judgment of a Court of Appeal upon them. It is for this reason that the present special court has been constituted. I cannot doubt that this court has authority to review, and if it thinks fit to differ from, any prior decision of a Divisional Court on this subject: see Fortescue v. The Vestry of St. Matthew, Bethnal Green.

I have said that there are few of the prior cases dealing with this matter which lay down the principles upon which the bye-laws made by representative public bodies are to be considered. There is one notable exception; I refer to the case of Slattery v. Naylor. That was a case in the Privy Council, in which the members of that court had to consider the validity of a bye-law passed by the municipal council of the borough of Petersham, in New South Wales, under the provisions of the Municipalities Act, 1867. The court consisted of Lords Hobhouse, Herschell, and Macnaghten and Sir Barnes Peacock and Sir Richard Couch. That case has been so fully discussed during the course of the argument that I do not think it necessary here to refer to it in detail. It is enough to say that, beyond doubt, the reasoning and principles on which it proceeds fully justify the views which I have expressed in this judgment. Nor are the weight and value of the reasoning in that case, as an authority in the present case, in any way lessened by the fact that the bye-law there was made under the authority of a different statute. The cases are strictly analogous, and it was necessary for the judgment of the Privy Council that that tribunal should consider the principles upon which bye-laws of representative governing bodies made under statutory authority should be considered. That it has done thoroughly and clearly.

In my opinion, judged by the test of reasonableness, even in its narrower sense, this is a reasonable bye-law; but, whether I am right or wrong in this view, I am clearly of opinion that no court of law can properly say that is invalid.

In the result the conviction appealed from must, in my opinion, be affirmed; but as the question is one of wide importance, and as to which there has been a contrariety of judicial opinion, it will be affirmed without costs.

Sir FRANCIS JEUNE, P.—The bye-law of which the validity is in question on this appeal in effect makes it an offence to perform music or singing in a public place or highway within fifty yards of a dwelling-house, if an inmate of such house or if a police-constable require the performer to desist. The provisions as to the inmate and as to the police-constable give rise to somewhat different considerations.

The sole question is whether this court should hold that, in its judgment, this bye-law is invalid because it is unreasonable. I agree with the contention urged before us that it is material to consider by what authority the bye-law was made. It was made by the county council of Kent—that is to say, a public representative body to which Parliament has confided the duty of making bye-laws for the good rule and government of the inhabitants of Kent and the prevention of nuisances in that county. Three considerations appear to me to apply with especial force to such an authority dealing with such subject-matter. First, the case is wholly different from that of manorial authorities, or of trading corporations, such as dock or railway companies, who often have a pecuniary interest in their bye-laws, or even of such a municipal corporation as might be supposed to have trade interests involved. Secondly, such an authority as a county council must be credited with adequate knowledge of the locality, its wants and wishes. Thirdly, the opportunity afforded by legislation for a request for reconsideration, and an appeal to higher authorities, by members of the public, shows that any bye-law which comes into force has secured at least the acquiescence of those whom it affects. Cases may be imagined in which in spite of these considerations this court, acting in discharge of its undoubted powers and duty, might feel compelled to hold a bye-law made by a county council invalid on the ground that it was unreasonable. But when a question of the requirements and wishes of the locality is involved, this court should, I think, be very slow to set aside the conclusions of the local authority. If support be needed for this opinion, it is to be found in the language of the Privy Council in the case of Slattery v. Naylor, an appeal which came from a colony to which the settlers carried the law of England, and which was fully considered by a board of high authority. I will quote only one among several passages which might be referred to: "The jurisdiction of testing bye-laws by their reasonableness was originally applied in such cases as those of manorial bodies, towns, or corporations having inherent powers or general powers conferred by charter of making such laws. As new corporations or local administrative bodies have arisen, the same jurisdiction has been exercised over them. But in determining whether or no a bye-law is reasonable, it is material to consider the relation of its framers to the locality affected by it, and the authority by which it is sanctioned."

The main ground of objection taken to this bye-law is, as I understand it, that it does not require proof that annoyance has in the particular instance been caused by the musical performance complained of. It is undoubtedly true that in several cases it has been held by this court that the absence of a provision that annoyance or nuisance must be shown renders the bye-law unreasonable. But such cases appear to me to be distinguishable from the present. I will take as an example one of them in which the subject-matter is similar to that in this present case. In Johnson v. The Mayor of Croydon it was held that a bye-law prohibiting in effect music other than military music in the streets in the borough on Sunday was unreasonable on the ground, as I understand it, that it did not require evidence of annoyance being caused. It is obvious that for aught contained in such a bye-law a musical performance subject to condemnation under it might have taken place on a spot where no one could be annoyed, or in a manner to which no one felt any objection. But it is not necessary that a requirement of evidence of actual annoyance should be prescribed in terms. It is enough if the circumstances render annoyance certain, or even probable. For example, it has been held that a bye-law forbidding the keeping of pigs within 100 feet from a dwelling-house in a populous place is reasonable: Wanstead Local Board v. Wooster. The case of Slattery v. Naylor, where it was held reasonable to prohibit burials within 100 yards of public buildings, dwelling-houses, or public roads, is another illustration of the same principle.

These were instances of matters by which anyone affected would presumably be annoyed. But a musical performance in a street is not a thing in its nature certain to annoy anyone. It is only an annoyance if someone who hears it thinks it one to him.

In the bye-law before us it is accordingly provided that an offence is committed only if the performance takes place within fifty yards of a dwelling-house, and has been objected to by an inmate of such house. I will deal with the provisions as to the constable presently. To my mind this insistence on the place of the performance, and on objection being taken by an inhabitant affected may be considered to supply the element which, in the cases I have referred to, appeared to the court to have been wanting. People who live in public streets must submit to the primary purposes for which streets exist. They must put up with frequent annoyances of traffic, and occasional annoyances from the opening of roads for repair for the supply of gas, water, or electricity, or from building operations in their vicinity. But street music is not a primary purpose of a street. It may be harmless if no one who lives there objects to it; it may even be acceptable to the locality; but if an inhabitant affected entertains and signifies an objection, I do not think that this court should consider that a county council, in giving him a veto upon it, pursues an unreasonable course.

The bye-law provides in the alternative that police-constable may require the performancer to desist. Whether this be an unreasonable provision or not appears to me to depend on the view taken as to the probable action of a police-constable in such a matter. If it is thought he will act harshly and without fair grounds of public order or comfort, it would be unreasonable to invest him with such discretion. But if it be believed that he will act either in assistance of an inhabitant entitled to object, but who does not desire to be involved in a not improbable altercation, or because he sees that public order is concerned, it is not unreasonable that he should be entrusted to exercise a discretion on the requirements of the case. Which of these two views is to be taken seems to me precisely a matter on which the judgment of the county councillors is entitled to be respected, especially as probably most of them are magistrates. I for one cannot pretend to know whether a Kent policeman may be trusted to do his duty fairly and properly, as well as I have no doubt they do. The case of Alty v. Farrell, which was cited to us as an authority against the reasonableness of conferring on policemen such powers as are given in the present case, appears to turn on the powers of the borough, under the Act in question, to delegate their authority to all constables instead of to persons especially appointed to execute the provisions of the Act. Further, it is not to be forgotten that an important safeguard is provided by the Legislature against the exceptional caprice of an inhabitant or abuse of discretion by a policeman, because the 16th section of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, enables the magistrate to dismiss an information if he thinks that the charge, though proved, was, in the particular case, of a trifling nature.

I agree with the Lord Chief Justice of England that this conviction should be affirmed, but without costs.

MATHEW, J.—The bye-law in question has been made under the Local Government Act of 1888, with which were incorporated certain provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875, and the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882.

By one of the incorporated sections—namely, section 23 of the Act of 1882, the county council were enabled to make such bye-laws as to them seemed meet for the good rule and government of the district under their jurisdiction, and for the prevention and suppression of nuisances not already punishable in a summary manner.

By the same section, in accordance with the usual practice where statutory powers to make bye-laws are conferred, certain formalities were directed to be observed before the local enactments came into operation. These formalities, it was admitted, had been complied with, and the first question which presented itself was whether the bye-law in question had been thereby legalized.

By 19 Hen. 7, c. 7, which recited a previous Act which had been allowed to expire, it was provided that no masters, wardens, and fellowships of crafts or mysteries, nor any rulers of guilds or fraternities, should take upon them to make or to execute any acts or ordinances by them theretofore made in disheritance or diminution of the prerogative of the Crown or of others, nor against the common profit of the people; but that the same acts or ordinances should be examined and approved by the Chancellor, Treasurer of England, or Chief Justices of both benches, or three of them, or before both the justices of assize in their circuit or progress in that shire where such acts or ordinances were made, on pain of forfeiting £40 for every time that they should do to the contrary.

It was decided in very early times that the approval of the bye-law by the authorities mentioned in the statute did not give it validity if not otherwise legal: Ipswich Tailors' case, 11 Co. 53; Stationers' Co. v. Salisbury, Comb. 221, at p. 222; 2 Kyd on Corporations, 109. The validity of the bye-laws must be determined by the judges when they are brought properly before them. This duty has been cast on the superior courts where any restriction is sought to be imposed on personal liberty, and is traceable to the clause in the Great Charter, "Nullus liber homo disseisiatur de . . . libertatibus suis . . . nisi . . . per legem terræ." This rule has been followed and acted upon down to the present time. The power to make bye-laws is conferred upon a vast number of corporate bodies and associations created by charter or by statute, as—e.g., municipal bodies, companies for trading or other purposes, literary and scientific associations, and such institutions as the University of London and the College of Surgeons: see, for further instances, Lumley on Bye-laws, p. 164.

From the many decisions upon the subject it would seem clear that a bye-law to be valid must, among other conditions, have two properties; it must be certain—that is, it must contain adequate information as to the duties of those who are to obey—and it must be reasonable: see City of London case, 8 Co. 121*b*, Com. Dig. Bye-law, B. 1; Framework Knitter's Co. v. Green, 1 Ld. Raym. 113; Eagleton v. East India Co., 3 Bos. & P. 55. The bye-law in question was, so far as is material to my judgment, in the following form: No. 4. "No person shall sound or play upon any musical or noisy instrument, or sing in any public place or highway, within fifty yards of any dwelling-house after being required by any constable to desist." It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the bye-law was not reasonable and was not certain. It forbade, without qualification of any kind, conduct which might be perfectly innocent and unobjectionable. It did not provide, as has been done in similar enactments and in this county council's bye-law No. 3, that the act prohibited should be an annoyance to anyone. It contained no exception, and would, according to its terms, condemn all music and singing within fifty yards of a dwelling-house as in the nature of a nuisance. The right to prohibit was conferred on any policeman. Why should liberty of conduct, it was asked, be so interfered with? A policeman has no such authority in the metropolis. Why should a policeman in the country be entrusted with powers so easily abused?

For the respondents it was argued that the bye-law was well enough. It had been framed by a representative body, created under recent legislation, whose regulations should be indulgently treated. It must be taken, it was said, that Parliament intended that local authorities should be upheld, and to this end that new canons of construction should be adopted by the courts to preserve their bye-laws from being declared invalid. It was no longer enough to point out that a bye-law according to its terms was unreasonable; it should be upheld if it might be reasonably enforced, and it was no longer an objection that it might be unreasonably enforced. It was urged that there were adequate safeguards for the public which, though not expressed, ought to be implied. It was true that any policeman might prohibit acts of which no reasonable man ought to complain; but it was said that confidence might be reposed in the discretion of a policeman, and that he would not be likely to interfere unreasonably. This seems to me too generous a view of the qualifications of the ordinary constable. There was, it was said, a further safeguard—namely, that the county council would not sanction interference by the police unless there was some good cause. But a bye-law once made could not be, and ought not to be, controlled in its operation by the members of the council. Further, the policeman who interfered without good cause would, it was argued, be reprimanded by his superiors, or a magistrate would probably refuse to issue a summons. These suggestions imply that there would be cases in which a constable ought not to have the power to prohibit or to prosecute. It seems to me that the public ought to be informed in clear language what these cases are. It would not be satisfactory to a person, who was innocent of any real offence and was summoned as a criminal, to have an apology offered to him on the ground that the policeman had been wanting in discretion. Again, it was said that the magistrate would have the power to refuse to convict, in a trifling case, under section 16 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, but the bye-law affords no security that this power would be exercised. A magistrate might reasonably consider that he was bound to convict; for a bye-law once duly published becomes part of the law of the land in the locality in which it applies. It should be remembered that this bye-law has been made for the purpose of securing the good rule and government of the district. It would appear not to be well calculated in its present form to secure any such result. The interference of a policeman, which the bye-law permits, would not be unlikely, it seems to me, to produce angry altercation, and to lead to a breach of the peace. I do not propose to refer at length to the cases cited in the argument where bye-laws made under local authority have in recent times been condemned as unreasonable. In none of those cases is there any indication of the principle which I understand to be now contended for—namely, that such ordinances should receive a special kind of interpretation. The powers conferred on county councils have been spoken of in the discussion as something previously unknown to the law. But from the earliest times when charters were granted to towns municipal affairs have been managed by elected representatives of the inhabitants. The bye-laws made by such bodies have been frequently declared to be invalid. Take, for instance, the bye-laws which have been held to be unreasonable restraints of trade, and which are referred to in the judgment in Mitchell v. Reynolds, 1 Sm. L. C., 10th ed., p. 391. No case has been cited in which there is any trace of the principle now contended for, that such bye-laws are to be interpreted with any particular indulgence because of their popular origin. If this view be adopted, it seems to me the judges will be placed in an anomalous position. Where they differ from bodies not popularly elected their jurisdiction to pronounce upon the validity of a bye-law would remain unimpaired; but where they differed from bodies like a county council their position would be altogether different. They would be bound to uphold what in other cases they would be right in condemning. I concur in the view that deference should be shown by the courts to the bye-laws of a local authority which may appear to interfere unduly with personal liberty, but where there was reason to suppose that the regulations were called for by the requirements of the particular place. There may be peculiar circumstances in the condition of a borough or part of a county which make stringent regulations as to personal conduct necessary. In that sense, I agree, a bye-law ought to receive an indulgent interpretation. But this bye-law is not confined to a particular locality; it applies to the whole of rural Kent.

It seems to me that what we are asked to do in this case is not to interpret the bye-law but to frame a new enactment with the necessary safeguards for freedom of conduct. It is practically proposed that we should add a proviso to the bye-law as it stands to the effect that it ought not to be unnecessarily or unreasonably enforced. This I consider we have no power to do. The only authority relied upon for the novel principle contended for by the respondent was the judgment of the Privy Council in Slattery v. Naylor. In that case a bye-law had been made by a local authority in the colony of New South Wales for regulating interments in cemeteries. Under its provisions interments in a particular case had been prohibited. The court held the bye-law was valid. It is difficult to see how any doubt could have existed on the subject. This decision was sufficient to dispose of the case; but it would seem that an argument had been addressed to the court that the compliance with the statutory requisites provided by the colonial law had been sufficient to render the bye-law valid, and I gather that this view was favourably entertained by their lordships. The argument was that the bye-law was legalized by force of section 158 of the colonial Act under which it had been made, and which provided that all bye-laws consistent with the provisions of the Act, and not repugnant to any other Act or law in force in the colony, should have the force of law when confirmed by the governor and published in the Government Gazette.

It seems to me clear that the case is only an authority on a question of colonial law, and I do not find in the judgment any indication of an intention to pronounce an opinion on the decisions of our courts which declare what has been understood to be the law of England on this subject. I have been unable to find any authority in our books for the suggestion that the validity of a bye-law can be established in any other way than by a judgment of a court of law as to its meaning according to ordinary rules of construction.

In my judgment this bye-law should be amended. It came into operation on the 19th of May, 1897, and the offence with which it deals is therefore of very recent creation. As it stands, any constable may prohibit any singing on any highway within fifty yards of a dwelling-house in any part of the county of Kent, except such parts as are within any municipal borough. It has been suggested that the real intent of the council was to prevent noisy demonstrations which would be offensive to residents within their jurisdiction. If this were so, it becomes difficult to understand why this intention was not stated in plain terms, and why the language should be so wide of the mark. It seems to me of special importance, where the aid of constables is invoked to maintain order, that the duties of the police on the one hand, and the obligations of the public on the other, should be stated with reasonable clearness. Laxity in the preparation of local enactments is not to be encouraged.

I regret to be unable to concur in the view of the majority of my colleagues. Their judgment appears to me to conflict with the recent decisions referred to in the course of the discussion, and with the views expressed by Hawkins, J., the late Mr. Justice Cave, the present Master of the Rolls, and the late Lord Justice Kay. In the case of Alty v. Farrell a bye-law which gave a policeman an unqualified right to require a vendor of coals in small quantities to weigh the coal in the policeman's presence was held to be unreasonable and invalid because the power might be exercised oppressively. This principle seems to me applicable to the present case. The decision of Alty v. Farrell has the high authority of the Lord Chief Justice and Wright, J.

The judgments of the majority of the judges by whom this case is decided will no doubt be entitled to great respect from those who may have similiar cases to deal with; but the decision will not be binding on any other Divisional Court, and in the present state of the law there seems to be no mode of finally settling the differences of judicial opinion that may arise in cases like the present. A change of procedure would seem to be necessary which would permit an appeal in the ordinary way.

I am of opinion that this conviction should be quashed.

Q. B. D.
(Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., and Day, Wills, Grantham, Wright, Kennedy, and Channell, JJ.) — April 30.

ROPER v. KNOTT. (a.)

Criminal law — Wilfully or maliciously committing damage to property — Diluting milk — Fraudulent motive — Absence of malice — Malicious Injuries to Property Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 52.

K., the servant of a milk salesman, was employed by the latter to carry milk round and deliver it to customers. He fraudulently added water to it with the intent of adding to the bulk and putting money into his own pocket by selling and not accounting for the surplus; he, however, had no malice towards, or intention to injure, the owner of the milk.

Held, that he had wilfully committed damage to property within the meaning of section 52 of the Malicious Injuries to Property Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97).

It is not necessary in committing the damage within the meaning of that section that there should be malice towards or intention to damage the owner of the property. It is sufficient if the act be done wilfully, and with the knowledge that it will cause damage.

Hall v. Richardson, 54 J. P. 345, overruled.

Case stated by E. T. D'Eyncourt, Esq., one of the magistrates of the police-courts of the metropolis, sitting at the North London Police Court.

(1) Upon the hearing at the said North London Police Court, on the 11th and 19th of January, 1898, of a charge made by Robert Roper (hereinafter called the appellant) against Charles Knott (hereinafter called the respondent) that the said respondent did wilfully commit damage, injury, or spoil to four gallons of milk, the property of the said appellant, contrary to the provisions of section 52 of the Malicious Injuries to Property Act (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), the following facts were proved:

(2) The appellant is a milk salesman carrying on business at 29, Howard-road, South Hornsey, and the respondent, who was a milk carrier in his employ, was in the habit of coming to the place of business every morning to fetch milk, which he subsequently sold to the appellant's customers.

(3) On the morning of the 11th of January, 1898, the respondent was seen at 5.25 by the appellant and a police-constable, who were watching him, to conceal a three-pint can full of water in a garden of a house near the said premises.

(4) The respondent was then seen to fetch four gallons of milk in a barrow from the appellant's premises (which in the ordinary course would be sold and delivered by him to the appellant's customers) and bring it opposite to the said garden, and then was seen to pour the said three pints of water out of the can into the said milk.

(5) The respondent had been seen on a previous morning going into the same garden, and was being watched on account of complaints from customers of the appellant.

(6) The respondent was immediately taken into custody, the appellant saying to him, "You villain, what do you mean?" and the respondent thereupon said, "I am very sorry. I hope you will forgive me."

(7) The respondent stated that he had on previous occasions been obliged to make good to his master in money the value of milk that he had lost, but there was no evidence of this, and it was contradicted by the appellant.

(8) The appellant in giving evidence said that he was in the habit of allowing each of the milk carriers in his employ (including the respondent) two quarts of milk a day to cover any loss that might arise from accidental spilling of the milk they took out or from the same being stolen from the customer's door, and also stated that he would have allowed a greater quantity had the milk carrier complained that he had lost more than the two quarts.

(9) The respondent had not served any customers on the morning of the 11th of January before he was taken into custody.

(10) The whole of the said milk, after it had been so watered, was in fact damaged and spoiled, and was thrown away, and the loss therein caused amounted in value to the sum of 10s. 8d.

(11) On behalf of the respondent it was contended that in view of the decision in Hall v. Richardson, 54 J. P. 345, the respondent could not under the above circumstances be convicted of the said offence.

(12) On behalf of the appellant it was contended that the decision in Hall v. Richardson only applied to a case where the milk had been spilt accidentally.

The magistrate was of opinion that the respondent acted in a fraudulent way, and that his object in adding water was to increase the bulk, and to put the money into his own pocket by selling and not accounting for the surplus, but that there was no malice towards or intention to injure the appellant, the owner of the milk. He was doubtful whether the section was intended to apply to such injury or damage at all, but even if that was so, he felt himself bound by the decision in Hall v. Richardson, and accordingly dismissed the charge.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether upon the above facts the respondent could legally be convicted of the said offence.

Horace Avory, for the appellant.—The decision of the magistrate was wrong. Unless Hall v. Richardson amounts to a decision that milk cannot be the subject of damage within the meaning of section 52 the respondent must be held to have wilfully or maliciously committed damage to it. That case was wrongly decided, and ought to be overruled. Section 52 provides against the case of wilful or malicious damage; and if the respondent intentionally diluted the milk with water he committed an offence within the section, even if he had no malice against his employer. He had an ulterior fraudulent motive, and if he wilfully did injury to the property, that is sufficient. The charge against the respondent was only one of "wilful" damage, and the magistrate ought to have convicted.

Counsel also cited Reg. v. Pembliton, 22 W. R. 553, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 119; and Hamilton v. Bone, 52 J. P. 726.

The respondent did not appear.

Lord RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J.—In this case we have to give judgment on a case stated for our opinion by a metropolitan police magistrate, and to say whether, on the facts there set out, he could or could not have convicted the person charged before him of the offence with which he was charged. It is quite natural, I think, that the learned magistrate, having regard to the decision of Lord Coleridge, C.J., and Mathew, J., in Hall v. Richardson, 54 J. P. 345, should have refused to convict the appellant. The charge against the respondent is based on the Malicious Damage Acts, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 52, and the facts are shortly as follows: The complainant was a milk-salesman and the respondent was a milk-distributor, in the complainant's employ. On the particular morning in question the respondent was detected in the act of adding a considerable quantity of water to milk which was the property of the complainant, and which it was the respondent's duty to deliver to the complainant's customers. The magistrate has found that the respondent did this in order that he might increase the bulk of the milk, and so sell more and put the surplus money into his own pocket. As a fact the milk was damaged and spoiled by the addition of the water, and it had to be thrown away, but the magistrate finds that the respondent was not actuated by any malice against the complainant, and he had no desire or intention of injuring him. When one comes to look at the statute, one finds a number of provisions covering specific cases of damage to various descriptions of property.

Section 52, under which these proceedings were taken, differs, however, in the introductory words from all the other sections. Sections 51 and 52 deal with injuries not before provided for in the Act; but while section 51 follows the wording of other sections in using the expression "unlawfully and maliciously," section 52 says "Whosoever shall wilfully or maliciously commit any damage, injury, or spoil to or upon any real or personal property whatsoever." It is quite clear, therefore, that the Legislature intended to show in this section a distinction between acts which are unlawful and malicious, and acts which are merely wilful or malicious. The first question, therefore, that we have to ask ourselves is, was this "damage, injury, or spoil" done to the milk? That is very clearly answered by the finding of the magistrate that the whole of the milk, after it had been so watered, was, in fact, damaged and spoiled, and was thrown away. If, then, the milk was damaged, was it wilfully damaged? There can, I think, be no doubt as to that. The respondent added this water to the milk deliberately and intentionally, and with the fraudulent motive of increasing the bulk of the milk so as to gain an advantage for himself. It seems to me, in construing this section, that a man must be held to do a thing wilfully when he does it either intending to cause damage or knowing the act he commits will cause damage to the property on which it is committed.

I feel no doubt that the respondent was guilty of committing wilful damage to property within the meaning of this section. That leads me to the consideration of the case of Hall v. Richardson. The first thing that strikes one in regard to that case is, that it was a very natural thing for the magistrate there to desire not to convict the defendant. There there was no intention to defraud the owner of the milk, but the water was merely added in order to make up the quantity of the milk that had been lost by an accident with which the defendant had met, and that his master in fact lost nothing by what he had done. It might, therefore, have been better to have left the case where the magistrate did, and for the court merely to have declined to interfere with his decision. They thought it right however to deliver a judgment on the question, and that being so it becomes our duty to consider that decision. I may say in passing that I think it would be clearly possible to distinguish the two cases on the facts, but it seems to me right that we should deal with the principle there laid down. I must say that in my opinion Hall v. Richardson was a case in which damage was done to the milk, and done wilfully. Then, is that decision right? I am bound to say that I think it is not. The first, and I think, if I may say so with the greatest deference to the very learned judges who decided that case, the cardinal error in that decision is that there is a confusion between the damage to the property and the consequent loss or damage to the owner of the property. In my judgment an offence has been committed against the statute if wilful damage has been done to any property, quite irrespective of the question whether any damage has been sustained by the owner of the property. The second error, as it seems to me, is found in the judgment of Lord Coleridge, C.J., in which he seems to think that in order to constitute an offence under the section, there must be an intention to injure or damage somebody. That, as I have already pointed out, is not the case, it is sufficient if wilful damage is done to the property. No doubt if the words of the section were similar to those of the other sections, "wilful (or unlawful) and malicious," the case would be very different. In the last place, the words of Lord Coleridge, C.J., as to the power of the magistrate to order reasonable compensation under the section for any damage done to property, seem to show that he thought the section only applied to such cases where such compensation was needed. All these reasons, which I think are mistaken, spring no doubt from what I have called the cardinal error in their judgment. I think, therefore, the decision in Hall v. Richardson cannot be supported, and this case must be remitted to the magistrate with our intimation that he ought to convict.

DAY, J.—I am of the same opinion.

WILLS, J.—I am of the same opinion. I will only add that in the case of Gardner v. Mansbridge, 35 W. R. 809, 19 Q. B. D. 217, to which Smith, L.J., and I were parties, we pointed out that a person commits an offence against section 52 if he wilfully commits the act, even though he has no malice. In my opinion the act meant by the Act of Parliament is a wilful doing of something which the man doing it knows must damage property. If it could be shown that he did not know any damage to property would result, then I think he could not be convicted under this section.

GRANTHAM, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that the Act of Parliament was intended primarily to meet cases of a different character to the adulteration of milk, and I think that appears when we look at the other sections of the Act. But I think that by section 52 it was intended to sweep up in one general section a number of smaller offences for which no penalty has been imposed by the rest of the Act. This is, no doubt, the reason of the change of the language of section 52—namely, the substitution of the word "wilfully" for "unlawfully" and "or" for "and," and it is impossible not to see that the change must have been intentional. It is necessary to ask three questions in order to see whether an offence has been committed under this section. Is the subject-matter "property"? Has it been damaged? Has that damage been done wilfully? The answer in this case to all those three questions is in the affirmative, and therefore the respondent has committed an offence within the section, and should be convicted. That being so, I must dissent from the judgment in Hall v. Richardson.

WRIGHT, J.—I agree.

KENNEDY, J.—I agree. It seems to me impossible to say that as to material facts this case can be distinguished from Hall v. Richardson, and therefore I entirely agree in the view of that decision expressed by my lord.

CHANNELL, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Appeal allowed.

Ship—Pilotage—Damage—Tyne Pilotage Order Confirmation Act, 1865 (28 Vict. c. 44), Schedule, ss. 16-22—Home trade passenger ship—Employment of pilot in Tyne Pilotage District—Compulsory pilotage—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 604, sub-section 1.

The master of a ship carrying passengers between any place in the British Islands and any other place so situate is, if neither he nor the mate of his ship has a pilotage certificate, bound by compulsion of law to employ a licensed pilot whilst navigating within the Tyne Pilotage District.

This was an action of damage in rem instituted on behalf of Joseph Crosthwaite, the owner of the steam-tug Warrior, against the steamship Warsaw, to recover for the damages occasioned by a collision between the two vessels in the River Tyne on the 3rd of August, 1897, when The Warrior, when lying at anchor at the Fellings buoys, was run into and damaged by The Warsaw as the latter vessel was proceeding up the river on a voyage from Leith to Newcastle in charge of a duly licensed pilot and having on board fifty passengers.

The action was heard on the 4th of March, 1897, before Barnes, J., and two of the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House, and after hearing evidence for the plaintiffs and the defendants the court came to the conclusion, on the merits, that the pilot of The Warsaw was alone to blame for the collision; the question whether at the time and place of the collision the master and owners of The Warsaw were compelled by compulsion of law to employ the pilot was then argued by counsel.

It appeared from the evidence that neither the master nor the mate of The Warsaw had a pilotage certificate applying to the Tyne Pilotage District.

Aspinall, Q.C., and Butler Aspinall, for the plaintiff.

Boyd, Q.C., and Laing, for the defendants, the owners of The Warsaw.

The arguments are fully stated in the judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

BARNES, J.—I have already decided that the collision was solely occasioned by the fault of the pilot of The Warsaw, and the question now arises whether or not the employment of the pilot was compulsory by law.

This question depends upon statute law. Section

(a.) Reported by C. F. JEMMETT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

604 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, sub-section 1, is as follows: "The master of every ship carrying passengers between any place in the British Islands and any other place so situate shall, while navigating within the limits of any district for which pilots are licensed under this or any other Act, employ a qualified pilot, unless he or the mate of his ship holds a pilotage certificate or a certificate granted under this section applying to the district, and, if he fails to do so, shall for each offence be liable to a fine not exceeding £100." Subject to a contention raised by counsel for the plaintiff, this sub-section is applicable to the case and determines the question in favour of the defendants, because the vessel was carrying passengers between places in the British Isles, and neither the master nor the mate had a pilotage certificate.

Counsel for the plaintiff, however, contended that, notwithstanding this section, the vessel was exempted from compulsory pilotage by virtue of the 16th section of the Tyne Pilotage Provisional Order, confirmed by the Tyne Pilotage Order Confirmation Act, 1865. That section is in the following terms: "Nothing in this order shall extend to oblige the owner or master of any vessel to employ or make use of any pilot in piloting or conducting such vessel into or out of the said district or within any part thereof, if he is not desirous so to do, or to pay any pilotage dues when not employing or making use of a pilot." The 22nd section of the same order provides that "nothing in this order shall exempt the commissioners or the pilotage district aforesaid from the provisions of any general Act of Parliament now in force or hereafter to be passed, relating to pilotage or pilotage dues or to merchant shipping. . . ." I am of opinion that in the absence of any previous decision binding the court to decide otherwise, section 604 of the Act of 1894 expressly imposed upon the master of The Warsaw the duty to employ a qualified pilot, and that the order and Act of 1865 do not free him from this duty.

It was, however, urged for the plaintiff that the present case is governed by the decision in The Johann Sverdrup, 35 W. R. 300, 12 P. D. 43. In that case a collision occurred in the Tyne between a British vessel and the Norwegian steamship Johann Sverdrup owing to the negligence of the pilot in charge of the latter. The owners of the foreign vessel were held liable on the ground that the employment of the pilot was not compulsory. She was not carrying passengers. Although it is stated in the judgments of the learned judges who decided that case, both in the Divisional Court and in the Court of Appeal, that the effect of section 16 of the order above referred to is to abolish compulsory pilotage in the Tyne, they were not dealing with the case of a vessel carrying passengers between ports in the British Islands. The question was as to the effect of the Act of 1865 upon a previous Act regulating pilotage in the Tyne. That was an Act passed in 1801 (41 Geo. 3, c. lxxxvi.), which compelled foreign vessels coming into or leaving the Tyne to employ pilots licensed by the Trinity House of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. The Act of 1865 transferred the old jurisdiction of that Trinity House in the Tyne Pilotage District to the Tyne Pilotage Commissioners, by whom the pilot of The Johann Sverdrup was licensed. It was held that the Act of 1865 superseded the pilotage provisions of the Act of 1801, and that no obligation to employ a pilot was imposed by the 16th section of the Tyne Pilotage order upon any vessel, whether British or foreign. It will be seen that no question was raised or considered as to the effect of section 354 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, for which section 604 of the Act of 1894 is now substituted. The order of 1865 was made under the powers conferred by section 39 of the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862, and confirmed by the Act of 1865, and although it superseded the local Act of 1801, and substituted new regulations for those contained in that Act, there is nothing in it inconsistent with section 354 of the Act of 1854, or section 604 of the Act of 1894. Section 16 of the Tyne Pilotage order does not even expressly exempt vessels from employing pilots. It merely provides that nothing in the order shall extend to oblige the owner or master of any vessel to employ a pilot or pay pilotage dues, and it is followed by section 22, which I have referred to above. The case of The Temora, Lush. 17, 8 W. R. Adm. Dig. 21, was cited by counsel for the defendants. That case decided that section 354 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, was not restricted by the provisions of section 353 of that Act, which provided as follows; "That all existing exemptions from compulsory pilotage should continue in force." These sections are now replaced by sections 603 and 604 of the Act of 1894, and by section 746 of the last-mentioned Act, any local Act which repeals or affects any provisions of the Acts repealed by the Act of 1894 is to have the same effect on the corresponding provisions of that Act as it had on the said provisions repealed by that Act. The case of The Temora was not decided on the exact point now in dispute, and although it is favourable to the defendants, it is not necessary to rely on it, because I am of opinion, for the reasons given above, that section 604 expressly makes pilotage compulsory upon vessels circumstanced as The Warsaw was, and that the Act of 1865 does not prevent the application of that section. Therefore, although the plaintiff has unfortunately suffered loss through the collision in question, as the collision was solely occasioned by the fault of the pilot of The Warsaw, and there was no fault on the part of the defendants or their servants, the defendants are not responsible for the loss, and my judgment must be in their favour, with costs.

"THE HOLLINSIDE." (a.)

Ship—Charter-party—Construction—Balance of freight — Construction of charter-party — "Consignee to effect the discharge of the cargo, steamer paying one franc per ton."

Case of construction of a charter-party where the words "consignee to effect the discharge of the cargo, steamer paying one franc per ton," were construed by the court as providing that the owners of the steamer—the consignees having elected, according to an option given them by a previous clause of the charter-party, to pay freight, not on the weight of cargo delivered, but on the bill of lading quantity less 2 per cent.—were to pay in respect of the cost of discharging, one franc per ton of the same conventional quantity—that is, one franc per ton of the bill of lading quantity less 2 per cent.

This was an appeal from the Admiralty side of the County Court of Northumberland, holden at Newcastle-on-Tyne.

By the decree appealed from the judge of the court below (His Honour Judge Greenwell) had given judgment in favour of the plaintiff in an action instituted under the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1869, on behalf of the Charlton Steam Shipping Co., the owners of the steamship Hollinside, against Messrs. Worms & Co., to recover a balance of freight amounting to 18s. 10d. for the carriage of a cargo of gas coal laden on board the Hollinside.

It appeared from the process transmitted to the registry of this court for the purposes of the appeal that the particulars of the plaintiff's claim delivered in the action were the following: "19th of October, 1897.—To amount wrongly deducted in account of this date being excess charge for cost of discharging. 18s. 10d.," and that the defendants had at the hearing in the court below set up a counter-claim alleging that they were entitled to deduct from the balance of freight claimed by the plaintiff the sum of 18s. 10d., being the balance of a sum of £46 19s 8d., the cost of discharging the said cargo; the said 18s. 10d. so claimed to be deducted being arrived at as follows: Discharging expenses on 1,184 tons (the amount stated as the bill of lading quantity of cargo, and from this at one franc per ton, being equal to £46 19s. 8d.); from which sum being claimed to be deducted the amount allowed by owners on 1,184 tons, less 2 per cent., 1,160 less 6 cwt., which at one franc per ton amounted to £46 0s. 10d., leaving a balance of 18s. 10d.

It further appeared from the process that in the bill of lading of the cargo, which contained the words "weight unknown," and incorporated the terms and conditions of the charter-party under which The Hollinside was sailing at the time, the cargo was stated to be 1,184 tons of gas coal, and that the charter-party in question, which was headed Chamber of Commerce, North-east Coast (Tees to Berwick) coal charter, 1896, contained, inter alia, the three following clauses, numbered 1, 8, and 9, respectively:

1. That the said steamer . . . shall, with all possible dispatch, sail and proceed to South Dock, Sunderland, and there load . . . a full and complete cargo of Lambton gas coal not exceeding 1,250 tons and not less than 1,000 . . . and, being so loaded, shall forthwith proceed with all possible dispatch to Port de Boue and there deliver her cargo . . . on being paid freight at the rate of 9s. (nine shillings) per ton of 20 cwts. . . . delivered or on bill of lading quantity less 2 per cent. at receiver's option, to be declared in writing before bulk broken. If the receiver should elect to weigh the cargo at the port of destination the weighing shall be done (by an official weigher) at his expense. The owner may provide a check weigher at steamer's expense.

8 . . . Consignee to effect the discharge of the cargo, steamer paying one franc per ton of 20 cwt. . . . and providing only steam, steam-winches, winchman, gins, and falls.

9. The freight to be paid one-third if required by owner on signing bills of lading . . . in cash, less 3 per cent. for insurance and interest . . . and the remainder, less sufficient cash for steamer's ordinary disbursements at current exchange, six days after production to Worms & Co., Newcastle-on-Tyne, of the certificate of right delivery of the cargo in cash, less three months' discount at 5 per cent. per annum.

The judge of the court below stated on his notes that the defendants had exercised the option given them by clause No. 1 of the charter-party (above set out); that a certificate of the right delivery of the cargo had been received, and that at the hearing before him the defendants had submitted that the construction of the charter-party clause No. 1 as to the deduction of 2 per cent. did not apply to clause 8, and had proposed to give evidence as to the quantity put on board and actually delivered; but the court had ruled that such evidence was irrevelant on the true construction of clauses 1 and 8, and had declined to allow the certificate from the colliery of the weight of the cargo to be put in, and had dismissed the counter-claim and given leave to the defendants to appeal.

The defendants appealed upon the following grounds:

(1) That upon the true construction of the charter-party the defendants were entitled to judgment.

(2) That upon the true construction of the said charter-party the provision in clause 1 as to the calculation of freight by a deduction of 2 per cent. from the bill of lading quantity could not be read into clause 8 as to the payment by the steamer to the consignee of one franc per ton of 20 cwt. for discharging the cargo.

(3) That under the latter clause the defendants were entitled to charges for discharging the actual weight of the cargo carried and discharged at the rate of one franc per ton of 20 cwt., and that the county court judge was wrong in holding that evidence as to the quantity of cargo put on board the steamship Hollinside was irrelevant.

March 1.—The appeal came on to be heard before a Divisional Court of the Admiralty Division (Jeune, P., and Barnes, J.).

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and F. Laing appeared for the appellants, and contended that on the true meaning of clause 8 of the charter-party the steamer had to pay in proportion to the work actually done in discharging—that is, one franc for each ton of coal actually discharged, which would reasonably be taken to be ascertainable by the amount of tons in the bill of lading quantity.

Bond, Q.C., and Stephens, who appeared for the respondents (plaintiffs in the court below), argued that the judgment of the court below was right, and that the defendants, having exercised their option of paying freight on the bill of lading quantity less 2 per cent., the same quantity must be deemed to be the quantity of the cargo to which the provisions of clause 8 were applicable.

They referred to Jessel v. Bath, 15 W. R. 1,041, L. R. 2 Ex. 267.

Sir F. JEUNE, P.—We have to put a construction upon the 1st and 8th clauses of the charter-party in this case. It appears that the cargo of coals shipped on board The Hollinside was not weighed at the port of destination because the receivers did not exercise their option to do so, and hence the question arises. On what weight of cargo is the cost of discharging to be charged? Is it to be charged on some quantity which at present seems not to have been ascertained unless the statement on the bill of lading is to be taken to be sufficient evidence of the quantity, or is the quantity to be taken to be the bill of lading quantity less 2 per cent.? That is to say, is the cost of discharging to be arrived at in the same way as the amount of the freight? That depends upon the construction to be put upon the two clauses I have mentioned. Of these, clause 1 undoubtedly in terms refers to the freight, and to the freight alone. What it provides is that the delivery is to take place "on being paid freight at the rate of 9s. per ton of 20 cwts. or 1,015 kilos delivered, or on bill of lading quantity less 2 per cent. at receiver's option, to be declared in writing before bulk is broken. If the receiver should elect to weigh the cargo at the port of destination the weighing shall be done by an official weigher at his expense. The owner may provide a check-weigher at steamer's expense."

I think there is nothing in the subsequent part of the clause which affects the matter.

Now we come to clause 8. The material portion of that clause is as follows: "The cargo to be taken from alongside by consignee at port of discharge free of expense and risk to the steamer at the average rate of 300 tons per day. . . . Consignee to effect the discharge of the cargo, steamer paying one franc per ton of 20 cwts. or 1,015 kilos, and providing only steam, steam-winches, winchman, gins, and falls." This provision in terms relates only to the cost of discharge, and the question we have to decide is whether these two clauses are to be read together. If the convenience of the matter is considered I should have thought it clear that it was intended that the question would be governed by the weighing, in the one case, or the refusal to weigh, in the other. Counsel for the appellants, however, contended that there are reasons why, under the 8th clause, the actual weight, and not the conventional weight, should be taken, but it appears to me that these reasons are entirely overweighed by the consideration of the practical difficulties which arise. The construction contended for seems to me to place the shipowner at a disadvantage under which it was not intended he should be placed. If the receiver elects to weigh, then there is a provision by which the mode of weighing is to be carried out which binds both parties. But if he does not elect to weigh, then the shipowner would be left under clause 8 either, I suppose, to take the bill of lading weight, or to weigh in the best way he could, and in a manner which would not be necessarily binding on either side. It is said that the bill of lading is primâ facie evidence of what is stated in it, and that therefore all you have to do is to take the evidence of the bill of lading, and that it is for the shipowner to displace that evidence. Considering that the bill of lading quantity would, I should think, never be the actual quantity—indeed, the provision that 2 per cent. is to be deducted shows that some deduction is necessary—and having regard to the great practical difficulty of weighing, unless it is done by an official weigher, it seems to me most probable that it was intended that clause 8 should be read with clause 1. I do not think it necessary to decide whether the bill of lading in this case, having regard to its form, would be primâ facie evidence of the amount delivered, and I am not sure whether it would be primâ facie evidence even of the amount received; but, assuming it to be primâ facie evidence, that does not carry the matter very far, because such primâ facie evidence would be displaced by evidence showing that in point of fact the amount stated in the bill of lading could not correctly represent the amount delivered.

Under these circumstances I am prepared to hold that convenience is so clearly on the side of reading the two clauses together, that they ought to be so read, and I am justified in that opinion by observing that clause 8 is obviously imperfectly drawn. It states only the sum to be paid for discharging—one franc per ton, and does not say whether it is to be per ton delivered or per ton received, or per ton of bill of lading quantity or per ton of bill of lading quantity with deduction. It appears to me to be clear that this clause cannot be read by itself. The whole of the charter-party must be looked at, and looking at the whole, provisions are found which, though I agree they are not applicable in terms, yet they so well be read together, that it seems only common-sense that they should be so read. I therefore think the learned county court judge was right.

BARNES, J.—This action is brought for a small balance of freight, and there is a counter-claim which seeks to extinguish the plaintiffs' claim on the ground that this balance of freight is absorbed by the cost incurred by the consignees for discharging the cargo. The dispute arises out of the terms of the charter-party, which is described as the known form adopted for the North Country coal trade and settled by agreement. It strikes me as singular that it should be so settled as to leave one of the matters which must have been almost of daily or weekly occurrence in such state as to give rise to the question before me in this case. Counsel for the appellants further say that the charter-party cannot be altered. I do not agree with that view, because it seems to me that power is given so that if necessary the parties can alter it. The question turns upon the meaning of certain words in the 1st and 8th clauses of the charter-party of The Hollinside. Now, the scope of this charter-party is to provide for the delivery at the port of discharge to the consignees of a coal cargo, freight to be paid either upon the amount actually delivered or upon an estimate of that quantity arrived at by taking the bill of lading weight and reducing that weight by an agreed amount of 2 per cent. The consignee has the option of adopting either of these two courses, and the decision rests with him. He may weigh or not as he chooses. If he chooses to weigh there is a mode provided for weighing; if not, then he may pay freight on the bill of lading quantity less an estimated deduction in weight of 2 per cent. In this case the latter course was adopted.

The difficulty which arises is upon the language of the latter part of the 8th clause, which provides that the discharge of the cargo is to be paid for at one franc per ton of 20 cwts. without providing how that 20 cwt. is to be arrived at. The appellants say that it is to be arrived at by the actual weight; the respondent's contention is that it is to be arrived at in the same way as the freight was arrived at. I think the charter-party must be read as a whole so as to make it work from a business point of view. Reading it in that way it seems to me that the respondent's contention is right. If that contention is not right then the difficulty will always arise that after the receiver has exercised his option as to freight and taken the bill of lading weight, he will make his charge for the cost of discharging on the actual weight. Then the question would be raised, What is the actual weight? Everybody concerned in discharging the cargo would, if the parties choose to fight it out to the bitter end, have to be called to give evidence to prove the weight. Can that have been the intention of those who drew up this charter-party.

I do not think the meaning the appellants contend for is a reasonable meaning to adopt, and I think, taking the charter-party as a whole, the meaning is that the option carries with it on the one hand the weight actually delivered, if freight is paid on the actual delivered weight, and on the other hand a payment depending on the weight ascertained by the bill of lading less 2 per cent., if that is the way the consignees choose to exercise their option and pay freight.

I see no injustice in so reading this charter-party, because the object of reducing the bill of lading freight by 2 per cent. is to account for the waste which is found by experience to take place in the coal. This seems to me to be the true meaning of the charter-party, and therefore this appeal fails.

HARROLD v. WATNEY. (a.)

Highway—Nuisance—Defective fence adjoining highway — Child climbing on fence — Injury to child arising therefrom—Liability of owner of fence.

The defendant was the owner of a piece of waste ground separated from a highway by a fence belonging to him. A child, who was passing along the highway, put his foot upon the fence in order to look at some boys who were playing in the adjoining ground, when the fence, in consequence of its ruinous condition, came down and injured him. In an action by the child to recover damages for personal injuries,

Held, that the action was maintainable, as the fence in its ruinous condition constituted a danger to those lawfully using the highway, and therefore amounted to a nuisance, and the nuisance was the cause of the injury.

Application by the plaintiff for judgment or a new trial in an action tried before Ridley, J., and a jury.

The action was brought by an infant, aged four years, suing by his next friend, to recover damages for personal injuries.

The defendant was the owner of a piece of ground immediately adjoining a public highway, separated therefrom by a fence belonging to him, and the statement of claim alleged that the defendant wrongfully and negligently allowed the fence to get out of repair and to become ruinous and rotten, so as to be dangerous to persons lawfully passing along the highway, and that in consequence thereof the fence fell upon the plaintiff, who was lawfully passing along the highway, and injured him. The defendant denied the allegations in the statement of claim, and pleaded contributory negligence.

The evidence showed that the plaintiff in order to look at some boys who were playing in the ground adjoining the highway, put his foot upon the fence, when it came down and injured him.

The jury found that the fence was very defective, but actually fell through the child standing wholly or partly on it not for the purpose of climbing over; and they assessed the damages at £45 if the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

The learned judge upon further consideration entered judgment for the defendant upon the ground that the accident was brought about by the plaintiff's wrongdoing.

Chamier (J. W. Moyses with him), for the plaintiff.—The fence was dangerous to those using the highway, and therefore constituted a nuisance, and the injury to the plaintiff resulted therefrom: Barnes v. Ward, 9 C. B. 392; Jewson v. Gatti, 2 Times L. R. 441. Even if the plaintiff was a trespasser he can still recover: Ilott v. Wilkes, 3 B. & Ald. 304; Bird v. Holbrook, 4 Bing. 628; Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 29. In Hughes v. Macfie, 12 W. R. 315, 2 H. & C. 744, and Mangan v. Atterton, L. R. 1 Ex. 239, upon which the learned judge relied in giving judgment, the actions were founded on negligence, and no question of nuisance arose. Moreover those cases were commented upon in Clark v. Chambers, 26 W. R. 613, 3 Q. B. D. 327.

A. J. David, for the defendant.—The case was fought at the trial upon the question of negligence and not of nuisance. This was a purely voluntary act on the part of the plaintiff which disentitled him from recovering: Mangan v. Atterton; Hughes v. Macfie. To give a right of action for a nuisance the cause of the injury must be the result of an involuntary act on the part of the person injured. The plaintiff here had no right to touch this fence for the purpose of climbing on to it. The judgment was therefore right.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—It does not seem to me that the real question upon which this case turns—namely, whether this fence constituted a nuisance—was distinctly raised at the trial. The evidence showed conclusively that the fence was rotten, and the jury have so found. A boy, four years of age, who was lawfully using the highway, put one foot at any rate upon the fence for the purpose of looking at some boys who were playing on a piece of waste ground adjoining, when the fence fell and injured him. The question is whether the boy can maintain an action. Ridley, J., thought not, and entered judgment for the defendant. In my opinion he was wrong in doing so. This rotten fence which abutted on the highway was clearly dangerous to persons lawfully passing along the highway and constituted, therefore, a nuisance. Suppose a person when passing along the highway became tired and leant against the fence and it gave way with him, that person would clearly have a cause of action. Here the boy was merely doing that which Lord Denman, C.J., described as having been done by the plaintiff in Lynch v. Nurdin. There the defendant negligently left his cart and horse unattended in a street, and the plaintiff, a boy of seven years of age, got upon the cart in play when another boy incautiously led the horse on and the plaintiff was thrown off and injured. Lord Denman in delivering the judgment of the court said: "But the question remains, can the plaintiff then, consistently with the authorities, maintain his action, having been at least equally in fault? The answer is that, supposing that fact ascertained by the jury, but to this extent—that he merely indulged the natural instinct of a child in amusing himself with the empty cart and deserted horse—then we think that the defendant cannot be permitted to avail himself of that fact. The most blameable carelessness of his servant having tempted the child, he ought not to reproach the child with yielding to that temptation. He has been the real and only cause of the mischief." That case seems to me to cover the present one. Again, in Jewson v. Gatti the defendant occupied an open cellar adjoining a street, and a bar protected the opening. There was scene-painting going on in the cellar and a child who was passing along the street leant against the bar to watch the men painting when the bar gave way and he fell into the cellar. Day, J., directed a verdict for the defendant, but the Divisional Court and this court held that there was evidence to go to the jury. In the present case the jury have found what amounts to a verdict for the plaintiff, and have assessed the damages at £45, and therefore a new trial is unnecessary, and judgment must be entered for the plaintiff for that amount.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. Ridley, J., seems to have held that it was the child's own fault which caused the accident, and that therefore he cannot recover. But how can we say upon the evidence that the act of the child is any bar to the action? The same contention was raised and disposed of in Jewson v. Gatti.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. This is an action in which it is alleged that the injury was caused to the child by the dangerous condition in which the defendant left his fence which adjoined the highway. No doubt the jury were not asked the specific question whether the fence was in such a condition as to constitute a danger to those lawfully using the highway. But when one considers the evidence and the finding of the jury, the only right conclusion to come to is that the fence, in the condition in which it was, did constitute a danger to those using the highway, that is, it constituted a nuisance. Having proved so much, something more was necessary to be proved in order to give a right of action against the defendant. The plaintiff had to show that this nuisance was the cause of the injury to him. When it is urged on behalf of the defendant that the child ought not to have put his foot upon the fence, that is merely a suggestion that the injury was not caused by the nuisance, but by the conduct of the child, whether that conduct amounted to trespass or to negligence. In my opinion, upon looking at the facts of this case, it is not true to say that the accident was caused by the conduct of the child. The defendant was guilty of creating this nuisance, and when one asks oneself whether the nuisance was the cause of the accident, one puts some such test as this—was that which the child did something which ought to have been present to the mind of the defendant as likely to happen, and was the accident the probable result of leaving the fence in a dangerous condition? If the defendant were to say that this was not a result which could be fairly contemplated as following from his act, inasmuch as no grown up person would think of touching the fence, the answer is that the Queen's highway is not intended for grown up persons only, and that a fence of this sort would be most likely to cause injury to children using the highway. If so, the nuisance is the cause of the injury, and the defendant cannot escape from that conclusion by relying upon the improbability that grown up persons would have touched this fence. For these reasons I think that the plaintiff has made out that the fence constituted a nuisance, and that the nuisance was the cause of the injury.

In re WOODS AND LEWIS'S CONTRACT. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Interest on purchase-money—Conditions of sale—"Default" of vendor—Delay caused by trifling technical defect in title.

Where the conditions of sale provided that interest on the purchase-money should not be payable during delay caused by the vendor's "default," and delay resulted from a requisition made by the purchaser in respect of a very slight technical defect in the title, not known to the vendor, discoverable only by extraordinary care, and involving no real risk to a purchaser,

Held, that the existence of such a defect did not establish "default" on the vendor's part, and that interest was, notwithstanding, payable during the delay. Decision of Romer, J., ante, p. 373, affirmed.

Farwell, Q.C., and G. Cave, for the vendor, were not called upon.

LINDLEY, M.R.—It appears to me that in this case the key to the whole situation is this, that there was no want of reasonable care on the part of the vendor in not discovering and providing for the blot on his title, which was discovered by extreme vigilance on the part of the purchaser's professional adviser. If Mr. Neville was right in maintaining that every omission by a vendor to detect and provide for any blot in his title was a "default," then, no doubt, there would be a default here. But when we regard the history of this clause in conditions of sale, I do not think that extreme proposition can be maintained. One knows that the clause which obliges the purchaser to pay interest if for any cause the purchase is not completed on a particular day is put in mainly for the purpose of giving the vendor some hold on the purchaser; for in the absence of some provision of that sort the purchaser might delay indefinitely, and so the thing might go on for ever, unless the vendor chose to bring an action to compel the purchaser to complete. Of course it is a clause which is liable to abuse, because the vendor knows and the purchaser does not know the state of the vendor's title, and knows whether he is fixing a reasonable time with regard to the difficulties which he knows of and has to deal with. If there were not some limit put by construction, or by the wording of the clause, to prevent vendors taking advantage of their own wrong, no doubt the result might be very oppressive. But, partly by construction and partly by the mode in which such clauses are framed by conveyancers, the effect is that injustice is generally avoided. It is very seldom that a vendor can take advantage of his own wrong, and compel the purchaser to pay interest when the vendor is himself to blame. But here we have to deal with a case of a somewhat unusual character. I am bound to say that I do not think the purchaser would have suffered one farthing in money, or any one degree in risk, if he had not insisted upon getting this supplementary deed. He would have got a title open to the technical objection detected by his professional adviser. But he would, it is obvious, have got the legal estate from the trustees of the Standard Assurance Co. conveyed with the consent of the managing directors. He would not have got, nor was it necessary that he should get, a conveyance under the seal of the company, because, as I understand, it was not incorporated. Therefore, to invalidate his title some steps would have had to be taken by the company, who had got the purchase-money, and whose trustees had, with the sanction of the directors, conveyed the property. Such proceedings must have been on the ground of some omission to have the transaction sanctioned in the proper manner. I will not say that it is not a blot on the title. When it is pointed out, one can see that it exists. It is certainly very creditable to the purchaser's adviser that he should have detected it, and said that it must be put straight. It was, however, a most extraordinary precaution. Now, to say that the vendor's omission to discover and provide for an objection only discoverable by extraordinary vigilance is default, is to go a great deal too far; and unless you can go much farther than that there is no default at all on the vendor's part.

The appeal must therefore be dismissed.

CHITTY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion and have only a very few words to add. The question here is as to the meaning of the term "default" in this 10th clause of the conditions of sale, the contract being one of sale and purchase of real estate. The term "default" is not to be interpreted as in an ordinary case of sale of goods, or any simple contract of that kind. Contracts of sale of real estate have always been put, in courts of equity and even of law, on a special footing of their own. For instance, a stipulation as to time is not usually taken to be of the essence of the contract, and the contract can be specifically performed. Then in regard to damages, even at common law the purchaser is not able to recover damages, in an ordinary case, for the loss of his bargain. I mention these points merely for the purpose of meeting Mr. Neville's argument, the substance of which was that "default" was equivalent to mere failure to perform his contract, that a mere failure to convey the property on the day named, arising from a defect in his title, is sufficient to raise a case of default, and to excuse the purchaser from the payment of interest. This seems to me by no means a difficult case. I quite agree with the Master of the Rolls that with great vigilance brought to bear on the matter something was discovered which showed that the title might be said to be defective. I do not think it amounts to more than that. The legal estate had been conveyed, the money had reached the coffers of the company, and the directors had joined in the conveyance. It seems to me that the purchaser was getting an excellent title, subject of course to this slight defect. It is not a case of the vendor selling the property with a defect, known or suspected, in the title. The vendor had no reason to believe or suspect that there was any defect of title. His purchase had been completed a very short time before, and the presumption is that he had taken the best advice. So, in my opinion, there was no want of reasonable care on the part of the vendor or his advisers in not finding out this defect. It required a high degree of vigilance, or caution to discover it.

The circumstances of this case are not, in my opinion, sufficient to establish a case of default on the part of the vendor. For these reasons I agree with the view taken by the Master of the Rolls.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I think the definition of "default" given by Lord Bowen in Young and Harston's Contract applies here. He says, speaking of default: "It means nothing more, nothing less, than not doing what is reasonable under the circumstances—not doing something which you ought to do, having regard to the relations which you occupy towards the other persons interested in the transaction." Mr. Neville's point was that, if there was in fact a blot on the title offered, that in itself was a "default"; and, in a sense, no doubt, if you were dealing with an absolute contract for the sale of goods, that might be so. But when you are dealing with the peculiar transaction of the sale of land, as regulated by the laws of this country, a long current of decisions has decided that you ought not to try that contract by so strict a standard. Further, when you come to look at the process of evolution by which the words "default" and "wilful default" got into these contracts, it is perfectly clear that the word "default" is not used in the sense of a mere failure to perform the contract. That is very clearly stated in the judgment of Turner, L.J., in Williams v. Glenton, where the general words were that if "from any cause whatever" the purchase should not be completed on the day named. The Lord Justice said: "The case attempted to be made on the part of the purchaser is, that there has been so much delay on the part of the vendor as to amount to a wilful default or neglect on his part, which according to the cases, would suffice to absolve the purchaser from the liability to interest, even under the terms of such a contract as the present." It was a qualification put upon the general immunity of the vendor, and rested on the principle that a person cannot take advantage of his own wrong. Therefore there is involved in "default" an element over and above mere failure to perform a contract; an element of wrong, not necessarily involving fraud or dishonesty, but the word "default" does mean the conscious abstention on the vendor's part from doing what it was reasonable for him to do.

In the present case, which I have examined with attention, it appears to me clear that no amount of reasonable care would have enabled the vendor to discover this defect in his title, and that the fact that he did not discover it is very far from establishing any "default" in him, or any failure on his part to do that which he ought to have done, and no abstention from doing that which he ought to have done. Therefore I think there has been no default such as is meant by the word as used in the condition.

Appeal dismissed.

GRAND JUNCTION WATERWORKS CO. v. THE HAMPTON URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL. (a.)

Local government — Proceedings before magistrates — Declaration of rights where no relief asked—Practice —Jurisdiction—Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 52), s. 3—R. S. C., Ord. 25, r. 5.

Where the Legislature has pointed out proceedings before magistrates as the proper course for a local authority to take with regard to offences under a particular statute, the Court of Chancery will be very slow to exercise its jurisdiction to restrain such proceedings by injunction where there is no evidence that the local authority intend to commit any illegal act.

A fortiori it will be still less likely to make a declaration of rights where no relief, by way of injunction or damages, is asked.

Whether the court has, under ord. 25, r. 5, jurisdiction to make such a declaration under such circumstances, quære.

This was an action brought by the Grand Junction Waterworks Co. asking for a declaration that they were entitled to erect an engine-house and any other building as they might think fit on a piece of land within the defendants' district without their consent.

The plaintiffs were a company incorporated by an Act of Parliament (51 Geo. 3), with power under a subsequent Act of 1852 to make certain works in the lines and on the situation and on the level, and in and through certain lands delineated on plans and sections, and described in the books of reference which were deposited in the usual way.

Under the powers of that Act the waterworks company acquired certain land which was within the jurisdiction of the Hampton Urban District Council, and recently they proposed, in order to provide proper additional pumping accommodation, which had become necessary in order to secure an adequate supply of water within the limits of the company's operations, to build on a vacant portion of this piece of land. Communications took place between the waterworks company on the one hand and the local authority, the Hampton Urban District Council, on the other.

They began on the 24th of September, 1897, with a communication from the surveyor of the local authority addressed to the secretary of the company, which ran as follows:

"I understand that your company are about to erect new buildings adjoining and abutting upon the Upper Sunbury-road, in this district. I wish to point out to you that no plans for such buildings have been deposited in accordance with the requirements of my council's bye-laws, and, further, that it is proposed to erect such buildings contrary to the provisions of the Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888."

Then further communications took place and plans were submitted to the local authority, and on the 14th of October this letter was written on behalf of the authority: "I regret to inform you that the council at their meeting on Tuesday evening decided that they could not see their way to allow the proposed new engine-house of your company in the Upper Sunbury-road to be brought forward beyond the front main wall on either side thereof, and accordingly they have been compelled to disapprove the plans."

As appears from this letter the plans were formally rejected by the council. Then the matter passed into the hands of the solicitors of the plaintiffs, who put forward the contention that the enactment contained in the private Act of 1852 exempted the waterworks company from the operation of the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1888, on which the council relied.

On the 11th of November, 1897, the following letter was written on behalf of the council to the solicitor for the waterworks company: "Referring to your letter of the 20th ult., I am instructed to inform you that my council, acting under the advice of counsel, decline to admit your clients' contention that the proposed new engine-house is exempt from the operation of the council's bye-laws, or that the provisions of the company's special Act of 1852 override the enactment contained in the Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act of 1888 in the manner alleged. If, therefore, the work is proceeded with I am instructed to take legal proceedings for contravention of the Act of 1888, but I trust that the company will see the propriety of not forcing the council to take such measures." To that their solicitors replied. "We communicated the effect of your letter of the 11th inst. to the board of the company to-day, but they have been advised by Mr. Cunningham Glen that they are right in their contention that they are not bound to set back as proposed. If the council still think it necessary to take proceedings, possibly it will be alike to their interest and to that of the company if the best mode of taking proceedings so as to keep expenses as low as possible were agreed on between us, and we should be very happy to meet you if you are likely to be in this neighbourhood to discuss any points connected with the case."

On the 30th of November the council's solicitor replied: "I have conferred with Mr. Munroe, and whilst desirous of obtaining a decision upon the question in dispute in the most friendly way possible, regret that I cannot adopt your suggestion. I see no reason why if your company proceed with the works a summons should not be issued in the usual way, and in the event of either party being dissatisfied with the decision of the magistrates a case would no doubt readily be stated."

Then on the 15th of December the company's solicitors write: "The company have, for reasons connected with their own convenience, delayed proceeding with the erection of the engine-house to which your council objected, and have without admitting that any notice need be given by the company to the council at all, as a matter of courtesy instructed us to give you formal notice that the company intend to proceed to erect the building. If it is the intention of the council to resist the work being proceeded with we shall be glad if you will give us notice to that effect as soon as possible requiring the company to refrain from proceeding."

On the 17th the council's solicitor replied: "In reply to your letter of the 15th inst., I am obliged to you for your courtesy in giving me formal notice that the company intend to proceed with the building, but I am unable to obtain instructions from my council to take any definite action in the matter until some part of the work shall be above the level of the ground."

On the 21st the company's solicitors wrote back: "We are in receipt of your letter of the 17th inst., for which we are obliged. We understand from it, taken in conjunction with your letter of the 11th of November last, that it is your clients' intention, in the event of the company proceeding with the building of their new engine-house, to take proceedings for contravention of Act of 1888, and that your instructions have not been withdrawn, but that you have no instructions to commence proceedings until after the building is above the level of the ground. And that you cannot state precisely the exact form of procedure which you will adopt, but that your clients claim the right to prevent the company from proceeding with their building. This being so our clients have instructed us to take the necessary steps to have the question as to their right to proceed with their building determined in the High Court, and of this we think it right to give you formal notice."

Then there was a break in the correspondence until the 23rd of of February, 1898.

In the meantime the company did not bring any action, but they proceeded to erect their building, and it was stated in the statement of claim that before the day when the writ in this action was delivered, which was the 12th of March, they had expended upwards of £1,500 in erecting this portion of the building. On the 23rd of February the council's solicitor wrote: "I think it only right to give you notice that a special meeting of the council has been convened for Tuesday next to consider a report from the surveyor in regard to the frontage line of the building now in course of erection by the company."

Then the company's solicitors wrote: "We desire to call your attention to the fact that upwards of two months ago our clients told you of their intention to put up the engine-house in question, and that you have allowed them to go on building now for this period and they have expended a very large sum of money, and they naturally inferred, from no step having been taken by your clients, that it was not their intention to pursue the matter further. We may explain that our clients put back their building so that there might be at least a 40ft. road if your clients now desire that the road should be of this width and would acquire the necessary land for this purpose."

On the 7th of March the solicitor to the council wrote: "The surveyor to the council having reported that the Grand Junction Waterworks Co. are erecting a new building adjoining the Upper Sunbury-road, part of which building is being erected beyond the front main wall of the house or building on either side thereof contrary to section 3 of the Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888, I am instructed by the council to give written notice in that behalf to the company in accordance with the terms of the Act and to require the immediate discontinuance of the offence."

Then on the 8th of March the council's solicitor wrote: "I was under the impression that it had been made quite clear to you that the only reason for not proceeding was that a technical objection might be taken unless the building were above the level of the ground, and your last letter to me seemed to show that you quite understood this. The council have not the slightest desire to put your clients to any unnecessary expense or to try the question in any but the most amicable spirit."

Then on the 11th of March the company's solicitors wrote: "In order to get the matter between our clients settled in the most expeditious manner we have been advised and have thought it right to issue the accompanying writ, which speaks for itself."

That was the writ in this action which simply claimed a declaration in accordance with the statement of claim subsequently delivered "that the plaintiffs are entitled to erect the said engine-house and any other building they may think proper for the purpose of their works on any portion of the piece of land without the consent of the defendants."

On the 12th of March the writ was issued, and on the 14th of March a copy was left at the offices of the defendants.

Then on the 15th of March the defendants laid an information before the Middlesex magistrates against the plaintiffs for contravening the Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888, and a summons was issued directing the plaintiffs to appear before a court of summary jurisdiction.

The statement of claim was delivered on the 18th of April, and was met by a defence which in paragraph 11 said: "The defendants, having regard to the provisions of the said Act of 1888, deny that upon the true construction of the plaintiff company's Acts, the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, and the other Acts incorporated with the company's said Acts, the plaintiff company is entitled to erect their said engine-house or any other buildings they may think proper for the purposes of their said works upon any portion of the piece of land in the statement of claim specified without the consent of the defendants." Paragraph 13 said: "The defendants object to the bringing of this action against them by the plaintiff company and submit the same is entirely without precedent and will contend at the trial: (a) That this court has not, having regard to the matters hereinbefore mentioned and to the provisions of the Judicature Acts, and the rules of the High Court made thereunder, any juisdiction to make the declaration prayed for herein. In the alternative (b) That the court in the exercise of its discretion ought not to make the said declaration, but that the plaintiff company should be left to establish their defence (if any) before the special tribunal entrusted with the determination of the question involved in pursuance of the statutes in that case made and provided subject to their right of appeal to a Divisional Court of the High Court of Justice provided for by section 45 of the Judicature Act, 1873, the decision of which said court is by section 47 of the said statute made final and without appeal." A summons was taken out asking for leave to have a question of law raised by the defence decided before the action was further proceeded with and an order was made to that effect. The Master's note was: "The notice dated the 7th of April, 1898, in this action is adjourned into court on the preliminary objection of paragraph 13 (a) of the defence."

When it came before the judge it was pointed out that the alternative claim in paragraph 13—namely, paragraph 13 (b) was not mentioned in this note, and his lordship's view was that from that point of view the order was imperfect, and that the second alternative ought necessarily to be considered by the court—namely, whether, supposing there was jurisdiction to make an order, the court, in the exercise of its discretion, ought to make the declaration; and it was agreed ultimately at the conclusion of the argument on the 9th of June that the materials which the judge should be called upon to exercise his discretion upon should be put before him, and the case stood over till the 14th for this purpose, when the evidence was discussed.

Meantime, on the 9th of May the summons taken out by the defendants had come on before the magistrates. It was found by the magistrates, and the fact was not really in dispute, that this building of the plaintiffs did project beyond the front main wall of the house or building on either side, and the magistrates inflicted a fine on the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs applied for a special case with a view to taking the matter before a Divisional Court.

Bosanquet, Q.C., Macmorran, Q.C., and R. G. Glen, for the plaintiffs.—The Public Health Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 52), s. 3, repeals section 156 of the Public Health Act, 1875. Ord. 25, r. 5, provides that a declaration may be made, though no other relief is asked for. The objection taken to your lordship's jurisdiction is that as the Public Health Act, 1888, provides one tribunal, no other can be resorted to. But that is not in accordance with the view of the Court of Appeal in Lord Auckland v. Westminster Local Board, 20 W. R. 845, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 597, per Mellish, L.J., at p. 607. That case was commented on by the late Master of the Rolls in Kerr v. Corporation of Preston, 25 W. R. 265, 6 Ch. D. 463. Hendon Local Board v. Pounce, 38 W. R. 377, 42 Ch. D. 602; St. George's v. Ballard, 43 W. R. 409, [1895] 1 Q. B. 702, are cases where an action was brought by a local board to restrain proceedings which are forbidden by this section: Robinson v. Local Board of Barton Eccles, 32 W. R. 249; 8 App. Cas. 798; Barlow v. Kensington Vestry, 34 W. R. 521, 11 App. Cas. 257. [STIRLING, J.—This case differs from Lord Auckland's case in this, that there is no power here to pull down.]

Jenkins, Q.C., and Courthope Munroe, for the defendants.—We submit that this is not a proper case for the court to make a declaration of right, notwithstanding the fact that no relief is claimed. The point which is in question in this case will be decided by another tribunal. The defendant board have not acted unfairly in any way, and the plaintiffs have not been prejudiced at all. The defence of res judicata applies in this case. The exact point has been decided by a court of exclusive jurisdiction. [They referred to Robinson v. Barton Local Board, 21 Ch. D. 621; Rex v. Hutchins, 29 W. R. 724, 6 Q. B. D. 300; North-Eastern Railway Co. v. Dalton Overseers, 14 Times L. R. 421; Stannard v. Vestry of St. Giles, Camberwell, 30 W. R. 693, 20 Ch. D. 190.] As to ord. 25, r. 5, we submit that the Judicature Acts and Rules of Court do not enable any relief to be given which could not have been obtained before the passing of those Acts: In re Mill's Estate, 35 W. R. 65, 34 Ch. D. 24; Brooking v. Maudsley, 36 W. R. 664, 38 Ch. D. 636; Baxter v. London County Council, 63 L. T. 767, 39 W. R. Dig. 63.

They also referred to Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co., ante, p. 8, [1897] 2 Q. B. 242.

Bosanquet, Q.C., in reply.—I admit that the case of Kerr v. Corporation of Preston is an authority against me, but the question is whether at this date it is a controlling authority. In Lord Auckland v. Westminster Local Board the exact opposite was decided. I rely on Robinson v. Barton Local Board, and Barlow v. St. Mary Abbott's, Kensington. [Jenkins, Q.C., referred to the latter case in the Court of Appeal, 32 W. R. 966, 27 Ch. D. 362.] Stannard v. Vestry of St. Giles', Camberwell. The question here is one of rights to real property, and questions of that sort were never intended to be dealt with by magistrates at all. As to the defence of res judicata the magistrates have found two facts, but a finding of fact cannot create an estoppel at law: Banter v. London County Council.

[The case then stood over till the 14th of June to give the judge an opportunity of hearing the evidence which was read on that day.]

STIRLING, J., stated the facts as above and continued: Now the question is, ought I to allow this action to go on? The statement of claim and the writ simply asks for a declaration without any other relief whatever. The form of the action is justified by an appeal to ord. 25, r. 5: "No action or proceeding shall be open to objection on the ground that a merely declaratory judgment or order is sought thereby, and the court may make binding declarations of right whether any consequential relief is or could be claimed, or not." Now the last sentence of that rule is expressed in the very widest terms. "The court may make binding declarations of right whether any consequential relief is or could be claimed or not." It is said, however, that these wide words must be read with some limitation, and it is suggested that the court has no authority notwithstanding that rule to make any declaration in a case in which either before or after the Judicature Act no relief could be given by the court. I am not called upon, it seems to me, to decide on this occasion whether any such limitation is to be read into the rule. I am not satisfied in this case that there is no jurisdiction—that there is an entire absence of jurisdiction to give consequential relief, at all events in the present state of the authorities.

Now the material authorities appear to me to be three. The first is the case of Lord Auckland v. The Westminster Local Board. That arose, not under this Act—on which there appears to be no decision—but under the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862. That contained two clauses of a very similar nature to section 3 of the Public Health Act, 1888. Section 74 provided for what I may call rectifying the general line of the street when buildings were pulled down, and it provided that it should be lawful "for the Metropolitan Board of Works to require the same to be set back to such a line, and in such a manner for the improvement of any street as the said Board shall direct, provided that the said Board shall make compensation to the owner of such building for any damage and expenses which he may sustain and incur thereby." Then section 75 was an enactment that "no building, structure, or erection shall, without the consent in writing of the Metropolitan Board of Works, be erected beyond the general line of buildings in any street, place, or row of houses, in which the same is situate, in case the distance of such line of buildings from the highway does not exceed 50 ft., or within 50 ft. of the highway, when the distance of the line of buildings therefrom amounts to or exceeds 50 ft., notwithstanding there being gardens or vacant spaces between the line of buildings and the highway, such general line of buildings to be decided by the superintendent architect to the Metropolitan Board of Works for the time being; and in case any building, structure, or erection be erected, or be begun to be erected or raised without such consent, or contrary to the terms and conditions on which the same may have been granted, it shall be lawful for the vestry of the parish, or the Board of Works for the district in which such building or erection is situate, to cause to be made complaint thereof before a justice of the peace, who shall thereupon issue a summons requiring the owner or occupier of the premises, or the builder or person engaged in any work contrary to this enactment, to appear at a time and place to be stated in the summons, to answer such complaint, and if at the time and place appointed in such summons the said complaint shall be proved to the satisfaction of the justice before whom the same shall be heard, such justice shall make an order in writing on such owner or occupier, builder, or person directing the demolition of any such building or erection, or so much thereof as may be beyond the said general line so fixed as aforesaid, within such time as such justice shall consider reasonable, and shall also make an order for the payment of the costs incurred up to the time of hearing." The Westminster Local Board of Works were taking, or threatening to take, proceedings before a magistrate under section 75, and the contention of Lord Auckland, who was the owner of the lands in respect of which the proceedings were to be taken, was that the case fell not within section 74, but within section 75; and Malins, V.C., and the Court of Appeal, consisting of James and Mellish, L.JJ., were of opinion that the case did not fall within section 75, but within section 74, and consequently that a magistrate before whom a summons was taken out under section 75 would have no jurisdiction whatever to deal with the case, that section not being applicable. Both the Vice-Chancellor and the Court of Appeal granted an injunction in very wide terms, which I have got before me, and which I think it is right to say, as it does not appear in the report, included an injunction to restrain the Board of Works from taking any proceedings for the purpose of compelling the plaintiff or his builder, or any person employed by him, to abstain from erecting buildings on the land in question, and also to restrain the board, their attorneys, solicitors, and agents, from taking proceedings for the purpose of recovering from the plaintiff or his builders penalties under the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862. The ground on which that is put by James, L.J., is this: "The plaintiff, Lord Auckland, comes to this court and complains that a public body threaten, and intend, under colour of certain great powers given them by Act of Parliament, to take and pull down some buildings which he has a right to erect, and is about to erect, on his own property. He complains that by these threats they have embarrassed him in the application of his property to the purpose he desires, and have in fact prevented him from erecting his building, because they tell in plain terms that if he does build they will put in force the powers of their Act and pull down his building." Then he says: "It seems to me to be the same kind of case as those well-known cases in which this court has exercised its jurisdiction by restraining railway companies from proceeding to take land which they had power to take for one purpose for some other purpose for which they were not entitled to take it; or to take part of a house only where the law obliged them to take the whole of it. In those cases the court has stopped them at once and granted an injunction, because they were about to exercise their powers in a manner that was oppressive or in a manner that was illegal. I have no doubt, therefore, that this is a case within the jurisdiction of this court, and that it is a case proper for this court to decide once for all instead of obliging Lord Auckland to go before a magistrate and discuss before him the question of jurisdiction and the difficult construction of these Acts of Parliament, and then to carry the case to the Court of Queen's Bench by certiorari, or to take some other step to get it finally decided." [His lordship also read the judgment of Mellish, L.J., and continued:] Certainly that is an authority, as it seems to me, of the Court of Appeal stated by two very eminent judges that this court has jurisdiction to grant an injunction in a proper case to restrain a public authority with power to sue for penalties from proceeding before the magistrate to recover those penalties. That decision has been criticised by Sir George Jessel, sitting as Master of the Rolls, in the case of Kerr v. The Corporation of Preston. There he refused an application which was made by the plaintiffs, who were owners of a house, to restrain the corporation of Preston from taking summary proceedings before a justice of the peace for recovery of penalties under the Public Health Act, 1875, on the ground that the plaintiffs had set forward their building without written consent from the defendants under section 156 of the Public Health Act, for which section 3 of the Act of 1888 is now substituted. The Master of the Rolls said: [His lordship read the judgment and continued:] The Master of the Rolls, I presume, had the report of Lord Auckland's case before him, but I do not know that he was aware of the form of the order as it appears in the registrar's book, which was actually made in Lord Auckland's case. I confess it does seem to me that at all events in the mind of Mellish, L.J., the question was present, and I have little doubt, also, that it was present to the mind of James, L.J. However, the criticisms of so eminent a judge as Sir George Jessel are of great weight, and, of course, weight must be given to them in any consideration of tht subject; but this remark is to be made, that Sir George Jessel sitting as Master of the Rolls and not in the Court of Appeal could not overrule the decision of the Court of Appeal in Lord Auckland's case.

Now, the third case with which I have to deal is the subsequent one of Stannard v. The Vestry of St. Giles', Camberwell. That, again, was a case in which there was an application of a similar character to this, though not precisely the same. It related to a question with regard to a drain. There a dispute had arisen between the local board and the builder about a drain which the builder in the course of erecting some buildings interfered with, and they gave notice to him that they would enter upon his land and reinstate the drain. They afterwards abandoned that intention, and took proceedings against him before the magistrate. The plaintiff then brought an action against the defendants claiming an injunction to restrain them from trespassing on his land, and from proceeding against him before the magistrate. In the statement of claim the plaintiff did not in terms allege that the defendants threatened and intended to trespass on the land, and it was there held by the Court of Appeal that as no intention to commit a trespass was proved or alleged, the plaintiff had not made out his case for injunction upon a trespass, and that being so the court had no jurisdiction to restrain the proceedings before the magistrate. I have read that from the headnote, but perhaps it goes a little beyond the judgments which were given in the Court of Appeal. The facts must be taken to be that the local authority in that case simply threatened to proceed before the magistrate. They did not threaten to take the law into their own hands and to enter upon the plaintiff's land to make any alteration in the drain. Sir George Jessel, who presided in the Court of Appeal, said: [His lordship read the judgment, and continued:] Then he goes on to discuss Hedley v. Bates, where he himself, sitting at the Rolls, had granted an injunction in a case in which he considered the magistrate had no jurisdiction. It is to be observed that in that case the proceedings before the magistrate had taken place and they had been decided adversely to the plaintiff in that case, and thereupon the court refused to interfere. Upon that ground both the Master of the Rolls and Sir James Hannen, and the present Master of the Rolls proceeded in this case of Stannard v. The Vestry of St. Giles', Camberwell.

Now, that being the state of the authorities, and I think, of all the authorities relevant to the question, I do not think it would be right for me to say that there is absolutely no jurisdiction in the court to restrain proceedings before the magistrate. In this case, as in the case of Stannard v. The Vestry of St. Giles, there is no evidence, and indeed there is not only no evidence but no allegation in the statement of claim, that the defendants, the urban district council, threaten or intend to enter upon the plaintiff's lands; and it was admitted by the plaintiff's counsel during the argument that the allegations in that respect could not be improved or added to. They simply show an intention to proceed before the magistrates, as indeed is also shown by the correspondence to which I have called attention. There is, therefore, no ground for the interference of the court upon the footing that the defendants threaten or intend to do any illegal Act. All that it is shown they threaten or intend to do, and that which they have done, is to proceed before the magistrates in the way which is pointed out by section 3 of the Statute.

Now, whether or no there be jurisdiction in the court to restrain by injunction such an application, it seems to me that the granting of an injunction in such a case is a matter which ought to be done with the greatest possible caution, and I respectfully adopt the language of the Master of the Rolls in that case: "Where the Legislature has pointed out a mode of proceeding before a magistrate it is not a general rule for another court to interfere and stop that proceeding by injunction." I desire to add in the present case, that in contests between local authorities and private owners it seems to me that that rule ought to be adhered to somewhat strictly. In these matters as to building lines the Legislature has provided a cheap and short mode of obtaining a decision on the point in question, and it appears to me that it would be a matter of regret if a different and more expensive mode of obtaining a decision were to be habitually resorted to or resorted to in the absence of any very special circumstances. I confess my own experience, sitting here as a judge, leads me to believe that vestries and other local authorities are sometimes too ready to embark in costly litigation without any equivalent benefit to the public or the ratepayers whom they represent; and I should be sorry if either private individuals or the vestry were, when a cheap and speedy mode of settling a dispute is provided by the Legislature, to resort to a more expensive one.

I think, therefore, that in the exercise of the discretion which is vested in the court it ought, even as regards the granting of an injunction, to be very slow to grant an injunction against taking proceedings before the magistrate when the Legislature has pointed out that as the proper mode of proceeding; and à fortiori it seems to me that when the court is simply asked to make a declaration of right, without giving any consequential relief, the court ought to be extremely cautious in making such a declaration, and ought not to do it in the absence of any very special circumstances.

That brings me to the question whether upon the materials before me any special circumstances are shown, and in my judgment there are not.

I have already pointed out the parties were at arm's length on the 21st of December, 1897, and the writ was not issued until March. In the meantime the council, which, it appears, only meet once a month, were watching the proceedings, and on the 23rd of February, 1898, the council's officer gives notice that in the February meeting of the council the matter was to be brought before them. It is to be observed, as they themselves point out in the correspondence, proceedings cannot be taken until the house has been built and the written notice has been given to discontinue the offence. The letter of the 23rd of February, which I have referred to, was simply obviously preliminary to giving that notice.

Now the waterworks company, having had this notice on the 21st of December, proceed to build. They say they have expended a large sum of money in building. It might have been open to them, and I think they would have stood in a better position, if on the 1st of January or on the 11th of January they had issued the writ, before they had expended any money. There might have been something to be said then, but they chose to go on building, knowing that the council threatened proceedings, till they got notice on the 23rd of February that the council were about to move in the matter. It is not till then that the plaintiffs do issue their writ. This is a case in which, in the exercise of the discretion of the court, the court ought not either to interfere by way of injunction or to make a declaration in accordance with the prayer in the statement of claim, but the matter ought to be left to the decision of the tribunal which has been pointed out by the Act of Parliament, and which will lead to an adjudication on the rights, by a Divisional Court, which, it seems to me, is a very proper mode of deciding this question, as similar questions have already been decided by Divisional Courts on similar applications.

I think, therefore, I ought to express my opinion on the matter which is now adjourned before me, that the court, in the exercise of its discretion, ought not to make the declaration which is asked for.

REG. v. FRY AND OTHERS (JUSTICES) AND STOKER. Ex parte MASTERS. (a.)

Justices—Criminal law—Practice—Two informations—Separate offences—Hearing of second information before giving decision of first—Legality of conviction.

M., a licensed victualler, was charged on two informations with two separate offences. The first with permitting drunkenness on his premises on the 7th of February, 1898; and the second with selling on the 8th of February intoxicating liquor during closing hours. The justices heard the first information, and decided to convict, but did not announce their decision until they had heard the second information, which they dismissed; they then convicted on the first information. In acting on each information the justices proceeded solely on the evidence applicable to that information.

Held, that the conviction was good.

Hamilton v. Walker, 40 W. R. 476, [1892] 2 Q. B. 25, discussed.

In this case a rule nisi had been obtained for a writ of certiorari to quash a conviction.

From the facts stated in the affidavits it appeared that one Masters, a licensed victualler, was charged before the justices of the county of Somerset on three informations with three separate offences, the first with permitting drunkenness on his premises on the 7th of February, 1898; the second, with selling on the 8th of February intoxicating liquor during closing hours; and the third, with keeping his premises open on the same date after closing hours.

The justices heard the first information first and unanimously decided to convict, but they did not announce their decision, as they desired to hear the other informations before doing so. They, therefore, proceeded to hear the second information, and this they dismissed, whereupon the police superintendent in charge of the prosecution decided not to proceed with the third charge.

The justices then announced their decision on the first information, and fined the defendant five pounds and costs and ordered his licence to be endorsed. The justices, in an affidavit filed by them, stated that they were not in any way influenced in adjudicating on the first information by the evidence given on the hearing of the second information, and that they only applied to the first charge the evidence given on the hearing of the first information.

Danckwerts (F. E. Weatherley with him) showed cause.

Eldon Banks (H. H. Gregory with him), in support of the rule.—Where a man is put in peril on a criminal charge he is entitled to have a decision on that charge before another charge against him is heard and evidence given which might prejudice his case. Each offence must be dealt with and decided separately. If justices adjourn their decision on a first charge and proceed to hear evidence on a second charge, which evidence might prejudice their minds as regards the first charge, they at once lose all jurisdiction to convict on the first charge.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 24.—WILLS, J., read the following judgment of the court: We are of opinion that this rule should be discharged. We should be sorry to give any countenance to the notion that justices may mix up two criminal charges and convict or acquit in one of them with any reference to the facts appearing in the other. Such a course would be contrary to law; and, undoubtedly, as a general rule, it will be prudent and right for justices to avoid any course which reasonably bears the aspect of such a mistake. If a primâ facie case is made out that such an error has, or may have been, committed, it will in general lie upon the justices to show very clearly that it has not been committed.

On the other hand, we should be equally sorry to throw any doubt upon the right of the justices in any case, for reasons of justice arising out of the circumstances of the case itself and for its better determination, to adjourn or to postpone their decision; and, if their discretion in this respect be honestly exercised, and not, directly or indirectly, with the view of throwing in facts or evidence which have no legitimate bearing on their decision, it must not be interfered with.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In this instance we think the case put forward against the proceedings of the justices is completely answered. It is impossible, in considering the weight to be given to what the justices said and the effect to be given to what they did, to leave out of sight the fact that their chairman is a great lawyer, of long judicial experience and as thoroughly capable of appreciating the impropriety involved in any mixing-up the evidence in the several cases which were heard before the decision upon the first was pronounced, and of dealing with each case separately and upon its own merits, as we ourselves are. It is most unlikely that a bench of justices whose deliberations were guided by him should have been permitted to fall into such an impropriety of procedure as is suggested by the appellant.

We entirely accept the statement that the justices were, at the close of the evidence and speeches in the first case, unanimously of opinion that there should be a conviction in that case; and we accept it none the less because, with that caution which we might expect from the chairman when speaking of matters which had happened some weeks earlier, they so state "to the best of their recollection." We entirely accept, also, their statement that they applied to this case the evidence that was given in reference to it and none other. It may be added that in these cases the circumstances were such that it was singularly easy to keep the case in which they convicted apart from the other two, which related to a different date and involved different charges. The extent of the penalty to be awarded in the case in which they were unanimous as to conviction might not improperly be influenced by what might be learnt by the justices in the course of the two other cases. Indeed, Mr. Bankes, the counsel for the appellant, admitted in the course of the argument before us that if the amount of the penalty was the only matter involved in the postponement of the judgment there was nothing illegitimate or improper in the proceeding. We cannot doubt that, inasmuch as the justices had made up their minds in the first case to convict, the only question then left unsettled was the amount of the penalty to be imposed; and that they forebore immediately upon the close of the first case to publish their decision as to conviction or acquittal only on account of the obvious inconvenience of splitting the publication into two parts.

The case of Hamilton v. Walker was relied upon by the applicant for the certiorari, as to which a word must be said. It is reported in four different reports, [1892] 2 Q. B. 25, 61 L. J. M. C. 135; 8 Times L. R. 531; and 56 J. P. 583. [It is also reported in 40 W. R., at p. 476.] Of these by far the most complete is that in 56 J. P. 583, to which I therefore refer. In that case Hamilton was summoned before the justices on two summonses—first, for delivering to one Farrell a number of indecent advertisements to the intent that they should be delivered and exhibited to certain inhabitants, &c.; secondly, for that Farrell exhibited to certain inhabitants, &c., certain indecent advertisements, and that Hamilton aided, abetted, counselled, and procured Farrell to do so. The magistrates heard the first summons and were asked to dismiss it, but they said they would hear the second summons before doing so, and, having heard it, they convicted on both. The court held that neither conviction could be supported. Both Pollock, B., and Vaughan Williams, J., held that the first was bad because the statute (Jervis's Act) requires that each case shall be heard on its own merits and on the evidence given under that one information. As to the second conviction. Pollock, B., held that it was bad for the same reason as the first, and Vaughan Williams, J., upon a totally different ground—viz., that if the first case had been decided first the defendant could have set up autrefois convict as an answer, and had been deprived of the opportunity of doing so. Pollock, B., however, said, "I do not go so far as to say that the justices might not reserve their judgment after hearing the evidence" (upon the first case). . . . "Here there is nothing to show that the justices, in acting on each information, proceeded on the evidence applicable solely to that information."

In the present case there is most explicit evidence, coming from a deponent whose assurance upon this point is most satisfactory and conclusive, that, in regard to the information now in question, the parties proceeded solely upon the evidence applicable to it, and it is clear that the ground of the decision in Hamilton v. Walker, as stated in the judgments of both the learned judges who formed the Divisional Court, does not exist in the present case, and its existence is negatived by the affidavit to which we have referred. The same observation applies to the judgment of Pollock, B., in respect of the second information before him. The reason given by Vaughan Williams, J., for holding the second conviction bad has no application whatever to the present case.

There is, therefore, no conflict between our present decision and that given in Hamilton v. Walker, and it becomes unnecessary for us to express any opinion as to whether we should assent to the reasons given by the members of the Divisional Court for the judgment given in that case.

This rule must be discharged with costs.

Q. B. Div.
(Wills and Kennedy, JJ.) } May 19.

THE MAYOR, &c., OF MANSFIELD (Appellants) v. BUTTERWORTH (Respondent). (a.)

Local government—Private street works—Objection by frontagers — Insufficiency and unreasonableness — Private Street Works Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 57), s. 7 (d).

The appellants, an urban authority, passed a resolution under section 6, sub-section 1, of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, to do what were "private street works" within that section. Such works did not include the widening of the particular street in question. Specifications and plans were prepared, and the appellants passed a resolution approving the same. The respondent, a frontager in the said street, objected, the ground of his objection being that the proposed works were "insufficient or unreasonable" within the meaning of section 7, clause (d), of the Act. It was proved before the justices that the proposed works were necessary and proper for the user of the street as a street. The justices held that the proposed works were "insufficient or unreasonable" within section 7, clause (d), on the ground that the street was too narrow and that the proposed works did not include the widening of it; and accordingly allowed the objection.

Held, that the jurisdiction of the justices upon an objection under section 7, clause (d), was limited to determining whether the proposed works were sufficient to effect the purpose proposed to be effected; and that the order of the justices should be quashed, as they had based their decision upon other considerations—viz., the widening of the street.

This was a case stated under the provisions of the Private Street Works Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 57), and the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 1857 (20 and 21 Vict. c. 43) and 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), by justices of the peace of the county of Nottingham, sitting at the Mansfield Police-court as a court of summary jurisdiction in and for the Mansfield Petty Sessional Division of the said county, upon the application of the appellants, who were dissatisfied with the justices' determination in point of law upon the hearing on the 17th day of January, 1898, of the matter of certain objections made by the respondent under section 7 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, to certain proposals of the appellants with reference to a street called "Quarry-lane," situate within the borough of Mansfield and the said Mansfield Petty Sessional Division.

Upon the hearing of the matter of the said objections the following facts were either admitted or proved in evidence:

1. The appellants were the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the municipal borough of Mansfield, and were the urban sanitary authority under the Public Health Acts for the said borough. The respondent was the agent for and on behalf of the trustees of a charity called "Bellamy's Charity," who were the owners of a piece of land in the said borough having a frontage adjoining and abutting upon Quarry-lane for a length or extent of about 200 yards.

2. The Private Street Works Act, 1892, was duly adopted by the appellants, and came into force in and applied to the urban sanitary district of the borough of Mansfield on the 25th of March, 1894.

3. In October, 1896, the appellants resolved under and in pursuance of section 6, sub-section 1, of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, to do private street works—namely, to sewer, level, pave, metal, flag, channel, and make good, and to provide proper means for lighting part of Quarry-lane, which is a "street" within the meaning of section 5 of the said Act and the Public Health Acts. A specification of such works, with plans and sections and an estimate of the probable expenses of the work and a provisional apportionment of the estimate of the estimated expenses among the premises liable to be charged therewith, was prepared by the appellants' surveyor and submitted to the appellants, who, by resolution, approved the same, and such resolution was published and copies thereof were served on the owners of the premises liable to be charged, and the approved specification, plans and sections, estimate and provisional apportionment, were kept deposited at the appellants' offices, open to inspection in the manner prescribed by, and in all respects so as to comply with, the provisions of section 6 of the said Act.

4. Within one month from the first publication of the said resolution the respondent, under and in pursuance of section 7 of the said Act, by written notice, dated the 5th of June, 1897, and duly served on the appellants, objected to the proposals of the appellants on the grounds contained in section 7 (d) of the said Act, which are "that the proposed works are insufficient or unreasonable, or that the estimated expenses are excessive."

5. The appellants duly complied with the provisions of section 8 of the said Act in order to have the said objections heard and determined by a court of summary jurisdiction.

6. The proposed works were intended to be done over a part of the said street about 677 yards in length. For several years past there had been a considerable traffic, both vehicular and foot traffic, over and along such part of the said street and such traffic had increased during the past twelve months and was increasing in consequence of the erection (still in progress) of a street of houses on land abutting on and adjoining Quarry-lane, but at a further distance from Mansfield than the land belonging to the said trustees. Vehicular traffic between the said new street of houses and Mansfield passed through Quarry-lane and over the portion thereof on which it was proposed to execute the works above referred to. There was no made roadway or footpath and no foundation to the road, which was uneven, with very deep ruts, but there was a footpath irregularly demarcated with rough stones. There were no sewers to carry off the sewerage of the houses erected and in course of erection in the said new street or of the houses adjoining Quarry-lane, and there was no provision for lighting. In wet weather the said Quarry-lane was almost impassable, and it was frequently in a foundrous condition and dangerous to persons using it, either by night or by day, with horses and carts or on foot. The average width of the said street during the said 677 yards was about 16ft., and for several yards opposite the respondent's land the width was about 12ft. (inclusive of the rough footway referred to, which was 3ft. in width). At all other points in the street where the respondent's land did not join Quarry-lane its width was from 14ft. 6ins. to 16ft.

7. It was admitted that the estimated expenses stated in the provisional apportionment were not excessive.

8. In support of the objections counsel for the respondent contended that inasmuch as it was not part of the plan of the appellants' proposed works that Quarry-lane should be widened opposite any part of the said land of the said trustees, but that the said works should be executed whilst retaining Quarry-lane at its present width, such proposed works would be insufficient and unreasonable having regard to the requirements of vehicular traffic as existing at the present time, as well as the probable requirements of such traffic in future, and that the insufficiency and unreasonableness meant by the statute had reference to the probable requirements of future vehicular traffic as well as and in addition to the requirements of present vehicular traffic.

9. Counsel for the appellants contended that it could not be found that the proposed works were insufficient and unreasonable within the meaning of section 7 of the said Act on the ground only that the justices considered the said street ought to be widened before any works were done and that the insufficiency and unreasonableness meant by the statute must be in respect of the nature and character of the proposed works having regard to the present condition of the street and the traffic over it.

The justices were of opinion that the proposed works were insufficient and unreasonable, on the ground that the existing width of the highway (that is to say, 9ft. of roadway and 3ft. footway) at the point before mentioned was insufficient for a highway, and that such works, or any part thereof, ought not to be done unless and until the said street was made wider, and they therefore, having visited and viewed Quarry-lane at such point, ordered and adjudged that the said works were insufficient and unreasonable on the ground that such works proposed involved the retention of the present width of the said street without enlargement. The question for the opinion of the court was whether the justices could find, on the grounds above stated, that the proposed works were insufficient and unreasonable within the meaning of section 7 (d) of the Private Street Works Act, 1892.

W. Appleton, for the appellants.—In this case the principal question depends upon the construction of the words "insufficient and unreasonable" in sub-section (d) of section 7 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892. The road in which the proposed works were to be done is a "street" within the meaning of that Act and the Public Health Acts. By section 6 it is provided that the urban authority may pass a resolution to do certain street works, and that the surveyor shall prepare the specifications and estimate, and the provisional apportionment of the estimated expenses among the persons liable to be charged therewith. Then sub-section (c) of that section provides that those specifications, &c., may be approved by resolution. Section 7 then goes on to say that owners of premises liable to be charged may lodge objections, and sub-section (d) gives as one of the grounds for doing so, that the proposed works are "insufficient and unreasonable." The respondent lodged an objection on this ground, and the justices, purporting to act under the powers given them by section 8, quashed the resolution to carry out the proposed works. This they had no authority to do. The words "insufficient and unreasonable" refer to the work itself, its quality and character, and the power given to the justices is only to quash the resolution approving of the specifications, &c. Throughout the Act there is no trace of any intention to give them jurisdiction to quash the original resolution.

Chester, for the respondent.—The justices took a practical view of the case. They viewed the road, and came to the conclusion that it was unreasonable to leave it so narrow while carrying out the proposed works. It is necessary to have regard to the probable increase of traffic, and in that respect the proposed work is "insufficient." Then again the unreasonableness comes in, as it would be unreasonable to perpetuate the narrowness of this road by carrying out expensive works. The power given to quash the resolution, refers to the first resolution in section 6—namely, the resolution that certain works shall be done. "Unreasonable" applies to the whole matter; it does not apply only to the plans and specifications.

Appleton replied.

The following cases were referred to: The Corporation of Sheffield v. Alexander and Others, 63 L. J. M. C. 206; The Corporation of Sheffield v. Anderson and Others, 64 L. J. M. C. 44, 43 W. R. Dig. 106.

WILLS, J.—The questions raised in this case are certainly of some little difficulty. We have had the advantage of an elaborate and carefully-considered argument, and in the end I have arrived at a tolerably clear conclusion in my own mind, notwithstanding the apparent difficulty presented by the language used in parts of the legislation.

Now, the Act of 1892 provides that where any street is not, to the thinking of the local authority, in a proper condition, they may resolve that certain works shall be done, which comprehend the works which have been ordered to be done in the present case. Then, after that, their surveyor is to prepare plans and specifications, and they are to pass a resolution approving of the plans either as submitted to them by the surveyor, or in some modified condition, and then, upon that being done, public notice is to be given and opportunities are to be given to the persons affected to object, and then the objectors are finally to be heard before a court of summary jurisdiction; and the nature and the extent of the objections which may be urged of the matters which are taken into consideration are to be found in section 7. Certain of these objections, two of them at all events (see sub-sections (a) and (b)), beyond all doubt, go to the root of the whole scheme, because they are objections which in point of fact, if the facts support them, go to establish a state of things in which the jurisdiction of the local authority to pass any resolution never existed. That is very much as it was under the Public Health Act. Under section 150 of that Act the vestry or public body might pass any resolutions it liked as to the sewering and paving the streets, and might proceed to apportionment, but if they tried to enforce it and it turned out that the thing which was called a street was not a street, the whole foundation of the proceedings failed, and the persons proceeded against, escaped. These two classes of objections are undoubtedly preserved by section 7 of the Act of 1892. But that does not conclude the case here, because we have got to see, even if the objection is of that character, what it is that the magistrates have power to do. They have power under section 8 to quash the resolution. When one comes to look at the scheme of the sections which precede section 8, which gives this power to quash the resolution, and to look more particularly to the fact that under section 7 there is a large class of objections which can only apply to the plans and specifications and so on, I think it is impossible to doubt that the whole of the jurisdiction the magistrates have with regard to any resolution is to quash the resolution which approves the plans and sections. It gives just as effectual protection to the person who ought not to be proceeded against because this is not a street, as if the original resolution was quashed; because the result is, if the second resolution be quashed, that the original resolution then stands without any machinery for carrying it into effect; and, therefore, as far as sub-sections (a) and (b) are concerned in section 7, it appears to me that the Act simply provided a cheap and summary remedy in case a mistake had been made as to calling the place a street when it ought not to have been called a street, instead of the much more elaborate, roundabout, and expensive proceeding which would be necessary to give the person sought to be charged the same protection under the Public Health Acts.

Then we come to what we are specially concerned with in the present case—that is to say, the objection arising under sub-section (d): "That the proposed works are insufficient or unreasonable, or that the estimated expenses are excessive." At first sight the objection to the proposed works might seem to be an objection of the same class as that under sub-sections (a) and (b), and as going to the root of the whole thing. I think, however, that the language is quite capable of another construction, because "the proposed works" might very well mean the proposed works as proposed and specified in the resolution; and it seems to me more natural, looking at the class of objections which are taken, to consider that Parliament did not mean to interfere with the power of the local bodies to adopt, and definitively to adopt, the scheme as a whole, as a thing required to be done, and only meant to give protection in case what they proposed to do in order to carry out what was deemed to be necessary should be found to be insufficient, which means of necessity, as it seems to me, that the works are insufficient to carry out the purpose which is proposed to be effected by the works; and that it does not mean that they are insufficient with regard to some matter which might make a better scheme for the neighbourhood in general, if other things which are totally outside the character of the works as regards their sufficiency in producing their effect be brought into consideration. The word "insufficient," therefore, seems to me to point exclusively to a comparison between what has been ordered to be done and the means of effecting it.

Now we come to "unreasonable." "Unreasonable" is undoubtedly a wider word, and I think it does give the magistrates jurisdiction to say, as regards the scheme taken as a whole, whether it is unreasonable or not that the thing in question which has been resolved to be done should be done. I think that follows from the decision in Sheffield Corporation v. Anderson, which is a decision in the Court of Appeal, where they held that, where the premises were already sufficiently drained, a resolution approving plans which cast a large expense on people for effecting further drainage, was unreasonable; and I think there is no reason whatever to quarrel with such a construction as that. If the magistrates had found here that they considered that the works ought not to be done at all—that is to say, that the street did not require them for the purposes of a street for which it was to be used, and that the houses did not require them them for the purposes for which drainage is carried out, namely, for sanitary purposes and for the health and convenience of the people who live in the houses and neighbourhood—and if they had found that the scheme was unreasonable on that ground, then I think there was jurisdiction to disapprove of it, and that to quash or to amend the resolution which approved the plans and specifications would have been well within their jurisdiction. But I think, on carefully considering what they have said and what they have not said, it is pretty plain that they take no objection of that kind, indeed they find a state of things which renders these works absolutely necessary if the street is to continue to be safely and properly used as a street. I think that what was thought was, that it would be a very good thing to have the road made wider, and that they could—I do not use this expression in disrespectful sense—put the screw on the local authority and compel them to widen the street by refusing their assent to the scheme, and declaring that the plans and specifications were insufficient and unreasonable. It is quite plain from their describing these works as insufficient, when it is admitted that they are proper for the purpose of effecting what they propose to effect and at no unreasonable cost, that they have misunderstood the limits of the expression "insufficient," and that they have brought into play considerations as to the sufficiency of the general scheme for the good of the public in general, which is quite, I think, beyond their powers. I think, in the same way, that Mr. Appleton is right in saying that when we come to look very carefully through their findings and what they say about the contentions which were urged before them, that they mean to say very much the same with regard to the unreasonableness, and that they only find it unreasonable because they think that the corporation ought to throw into their improvements something else—namely, the widening of the street, which could only be done under other powers and not at all by the machinery which is provided by this Act of 1892, which is now under consideration. Therefore, as they have asked us in terms to quash their order if we think that they have applied the wrong principles, I think that they have applied the wrong principles, and that there is no ground for saying that if they had applied the right principles and considered whether this was reasonable with reference to the state of the street and the things required to be done in it, and sufficient or insufficient with respect to the works proposed to effect the object proposed they certainly would have dismissed the appeal which was before them. I think, therefore, that this order must be quashed and this appeal allowed with costs.

KENNEDY, J.—I have upon the whole, although my mind has fluctuated a good deal in the course of the argument, come to the same conclusion that my brother has stated. I have only this to add, that in my view, reading the case stated, fairly, I think that it is sufficiently plain that the justices used the words "insufficient" and "unreasonable" in such a way as to show that the ground of unreasonableness was insufficiency. Now insufficiency, I should think, reading the sections fairly together, must mean the insufficiency of the proposed works to carry out the object for which these works are proposed. I do not think it can mean that you may object to any insufficiency. For example, supposing that it was a sewerage scheme, it could not mean that you ought to have included in it also light. I have taken what one may call a broad instance of it, merely to point my view. I think here that they were holding the scheme unreasonable, not in reference to the street as a street wanting paving, lighting, and sewering, but because the plan proposed did not go further and say the street is also at the same time to be broadened. If I had thought that, fairly read, there was a real doubt upon the case that that was what they meant, I should have preferred it going back, but I think, on the whole, by their repeated use of the words—and not going out of the case to anything which we have been told by counsel—they must refer to insufficiency in the way of not including widening, and that appears to me to be outside their power.

Order quashed and appeal allowed.

REG. v. DR. TRISTRAM, JUDGE OF THE CONSISTORY COURT OF LONDON. (a.)

Ecclesiastical law—Faculty—Application to open coffin—Jurisdiction of Chancellor—Licence of Home Secretary—Prohibition—Burials Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 81), s. 25.

A Consistory Court has jurisdiction to issue a faculty for the removal of remains in consecrated ground, and has also jurisdiction to issue a faculty authorizing the opening of the coffin for the purpose of inspecting its contents.

If it is necessary that a licence should be obtained from the Home Secretary before a coffin can be opened for such a purpose as was contended by the interveners (on which point the court gave no decision), that licence, being in addition to, and not in substitution of, the faculty required to be obtained from the ecclesiastical court, would be inoperative unless and until the ecclesiastical faculty had been duly issued.

Rule nisi for a prohibition.

A petition was presented to the judge of the Consistory Court of the Diocese of London for a faculty to open a grave in consecrated ground, and to open and examine a certain coffin in order to ascertain whether the said coffin contained any human remains, and, if it did, to ascertain whether these remains were the remains of one Thomas Charles Druce, whose body was alleged (falsely according to the petition) to be buried in the grave.

The petition was made for the purpose of procuring the verification of some evidence, which had been obtained by the petitioner with a view of taking legal proceedings to set aside the will of the said Thomas Charles Druce, on the ground that no probate of the will ought to have been granted, as the supposed testator did not die until long after the date at which he was said to have been buried.

Legal proceedings in the Court of Probate had not, however, at the date of the petition, been actually commenced.

On the 17th of February, 1898, Dr. Tristram, judge of the Consistory Court, delivered judgment, granting a faculty. The practice of that court is to grant a faculty on ex parte applications where primâ facie grounds entitling the petitioner to the faculty are shown, but such faculty is directed to lie in the office for fifteen days, and if, during that time, any person interested in the subject-matter of the faculty enters a caveat against its issue, the court dissolves it, and an action between the petitioner and the intervener is directed to be tried.

On the 15th of March notice was served on the petitioner that such caveat had been entered on the 12th inst.

On the 29th of March the intervener obtained a rule nisi for a writ prohibiting the Consistory Court from granting the faculty, on the ground that since the Burials Act, 1857, the Consistory Court had no jurisdiction to issue faculties to open graves until the order of the Home Secretary was obtained, and that even if it had jurisdiction, such jurisdiction extended only to cases where a body was to be removed from one consecrated burial place to another, and did not extend to opening graves for the purpose of identifying the remains therein.

A rule for a writ of prohibition was thereupon obtained at the instance of Druce's executor and certain other persons who were said to be interested under the will.

The decision of the court depended mainly upon what was the effect of section 25 of the Burials Act, 1857, on the ancient jurisdiction of the Consistory Court with regard to granting faculties for opening graves, and also upon the general rules relating to prohibition.

Section 25 is as follows: "Except in the case where a body is removed from one consecrated place of burial to another by faculty granted by the ordinary for that purpose, it shall not be lawful to remove any body, or the remains of any body which may have been interred in any place of burial, without licence under the hand of one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, and with such precautions as such Secretary of State may prescribe as the condition of such licence; and any person who shall remove any such body or remains contrary to this enactment, or who shall neglect to observe the precautions prescribed as the condition of the licence for removal shall, on summary conviction before any two justices of the peace, forfeit and pay for every such offence a sum not exceeding £10."

The petition alleged certain facts as to the man having been seen alive after the date of his alleged burial. The rule for the prohibition raised six points: (1) As to the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts prior to the Burials Act, 1857. (2) As to how that Act affected the jurisdiction of such courts. (3) As to the licence of the Secretary of State. It was submitted that the Legislature had not substituted the licence for the order of the ordinary, but had provided it as an additional security. (4) It was submitted that prohibition was not the proper remedy, but an appeal from the decision of the Chancellor, because the matter was not wholly foreign to the jurisdiction of the Chancellor's Court. (5) The application for a prohibition was premature. The applicants had the opportunity of arguing the question in the Chancellor's Court, and they ought to do so. (6) The construction of section 25 of the Burials Act, 1857, contended for by the applicants for the prohibition was greatly against public interest; it would affect the position of coroners and all Chancellors in the land.

Arnold Statham and Campbell Johnstone showed cause.—All that the learned judge of the Consistory Court had done was to grant a faculty upon an ex parte application, and that his decision could be reversed if anybody intervening showed that, upon the merits of the question, the faculty would not be granted. In accordance with the practice of the court, the order had been in the office for fifteen days to give time for intervention, and, although the other side had declined to enter an appearance for fear of recognizing the jurisdiction of the court, they had actually intervened, and were in a position even now to have the case heard upon its merits. Further, that a faculty of this nature was not without precedent: see Sarah Pope's case, 15 Jurist 614, also a precedent in 2 Oughton 331, and the protection of corpses buried in consecrated ground had repeatedly been recognized by the civil courts: Foster v. Dodd, 16 W. R. 155, L. R. 3 Q. B. 67, at p. 77; Maidman v. Malpas, 1 Hagg. Cons. 205, at p. 208; Hutchins v. Denziloe, 1 Hagg. Cons. 170, at p. 172; Adlam v. Coulthurst, L. R. 2 Adm. & Ecc. 30, at p. 38, 16 W. R. Adm. Dig. 16. Prior to the Burial Acts the Ecclesiastical Courts would have had sole jurisdiction in a matter of this kind, and the statute, they submitted, did not deprive the Consistory Court of its ancient jurisdiction. The Legislature had not substituted the licence of the Home Secretary for that of the ordinary, but had provided that his licence should be added as an additional safeguard. At any rate, prohibition was not the proper remedy, which was by way of appeal. Moreover, the application for a prohibition in this case was certainly premature, as it ought not to have been made until the question of jurisdiction had been decided in the Court of Appeal. The construction sought by the applicants for the rule to be placed upon the section would involve grave public mischief and far-reaching consequences that the Act of Parliament could never have intended to have effected. There were numerous decisions which showed that from very early times the Ecclesiastical Courts had exercised exclusive jurisdiction over all churches, churchyards, and consecrated burial-grounds, and, according to law, there could be no removal of any body from any church or consecrated burial-ground without a faculty from the ordinary. Formerly bishops exercised the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Court: Sharpe's case, 5 W. R. 318, Dearsly and Bell C. Cas. 160. On the point that prohibition was not the proper remedy Wanmouth v. Collins, 2 Ld. Raymond's Rep. 850; Ex parte Williams, 4 B. & C. 313; Denaby v. Manchester, &c., Railway Co., 3 Nev. & Macn. Ry. Cas., at p. 443; Serjeant v. Dale, 2 Q. B. D., at p. 564; 25 W. R. Dig. 106; Martin v. Mackonochie, 4 Q. B. D., at p. 731, 28 W. R. Dig. 80, were referred to. The scheme of the Burial Acts was to preserve the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts: see (48 Geo. 3 c. 75); Burial Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 85); Burial Act, 1853 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 87); Burial Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 128); Burial Act, 1859 (22 Vict. c. 1). If a licence from the Home Secretary were here necessary, a faculty from the ordinary was necessary too, and the court could not prohibit the Ecclesiastical Court from granting it before the civil licence was obtained; that, even if the Ecclesiastical Court had no jurisdiction to grant the faculty, that point must be taken before the Ecclesiastical Court itself and be overruled there before a prohibition could issue to the Queen's Bench.

Bargrave Deane, Q.C., G. G. Phillimore, & H. O. Buckle, in support of the rule.—Under the Burials Act, 1857, it was a condition precedent to the granting of any faculty for moving a body that the licence of the Home Secretary should be obtained, except in the case where the application was to remove a body for re-interment in some other consecrated ground. That was not the nature of the present application. These being the terms of the statute, Dr. Tristram had no jurisdiction to grant the faculty in the absence of a licence from the Secretary of State, since the application did not come within the express exception referred to in the statute.

THE COURT decided that the rule nisi must be dissolved.

WILLS, J.—I think the rule must be discharged with costs, for if in this case the licence of the Secretary of State is necessary (which is a question we need not decide) there is nothing in section 25 of the Burials Act, 1857, to make its grant a condition precedent to the issue of a faculty by the ordinary, which clearly must be issued before any steps can be taken by this court in the matter. In that case the faculty would be inoperative till the licence was obtained, just as the licence of the Secretary of State would, if given before the faculty, be inoperative till the faculty of the ordinary was obtained. A writ of prohibition is only to be granted if the judge of the Consistory Court has no jurisdiction or is doing something contrary to law. It seems clear that if the application is not for the purpose of re-interring a body in some other consecrated ground, then a faculty could not be carried into effect until a licence to do so has also been obtained from the Home Secretary. The Consistory judge has exercised jurisdiction on these matters from very ancient times, and there is ample authority for us to hold that his jurisdiction was not restricted to cases of mere removal of a body for burial purposes. So far, all that has happened is that the Ecclesiastical Court has granted a faculty which would have to be carried out according to the law and according to the provisions of the Act of 1857, under which a licence, if needed, of the Home Secretary would have to be obtained. The petition for the faculty has not been heard and determined in the Ecclesiastical Court, but merely a provisional faculty, since dissolved, was issued on an ex parte application. Till it was heard and determined, the application for the rule was premature, even if the Ecclesiastical Court has not jurisdiction. Moreover, the applicants who have obtained the rule can be heard on the merits of the faculty in the Ecclesiastical Court, and if the learned judge decides against them they would still have a remedy by way of appeal from his decision.

KENNEDY, J.—I would point out that if the applicants had entered an appearance when they intervened the order in question would have gone, and they could have been heard as to the merits of the case by the Consistory judge. The order that had been obtained was obtained ex parte. It follows, therefore, that if they had availed themselves of their rights to intervene when the order was finally granted, and it then appeared that the licence of the Home Secretary was necessary, and it had not been obtained, any person who acted upon the faculty would have been liable to be proceeded against under the section.

Rule discharged.

PAYNTER v. WATSON. (a.)

Metropolis—Building—Rebuilding on old site—Certified plans of old building—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), ss. 41, 43.

A person intending to erect a domestic building on the site of a domestic building existing at the commencement of the London Building Act, 1894, may by section 43 of that Act submit to the district surveyor for certification "plans showing the extent of the previously-existing domestic building in its several parts," and on getting a certificate of the accuracy of the plans may build, provided he does not deviate in any respect from the certified plans, without regard to the restrictions imposed by the Act upon the erection of new buildings.

Held, that the plans which he must get certified under that section are not confined to ground plans or basement plans, but include plans showing every part of the building in every direction in which it extends.

Case stated by a metropolitan magistrate.

The appellant was Major George Paynter; the respondent was the district surveyor of the district of St. George's, Hanover-square North. The case was stated on an appeal to the magistrate from a notice of objection served by the district surveyor under section 150 of the London Building Act, 1894. The appellant had served a building notice under section 145 of the Act on the district surveyor, and had annexed thereto the plans and sections of the new buildings which he proposed to erect on the site of Nos. 12 and 13, Grafton-street. These plans showed that the new domestic buildings would not cover any ground that was uncovered before, but the arrangement of the upper floors was such that a certain amount of the old existing air space would be occupied by the new buildings, which were to be higher and to contain more cubic feet than the old.

The magistrate found that the plans of the proposed new buildings did deviate in certain respects, and particularly in regard to height, from the old buildings, and he held that the word "deviate" in section 43 (2) applied not only to the ground covered by the old buildings, but also to that of the buildings in respect to alterations on the several floors, and he accordingly affirmed the surveyor's objection.

It was contended by the appellant that the only plan required by the Act to be certified was a plan showing the extent of the previously-existing building in its several parts on the basement, and that sections or elevations showing the height were unnecessary, and that the fact that other plans, sections, and elevations had been sent to and certified by the surveyor in no way affected the legal position of the appellant, and that, as no more land was to be occupied by the intended buildings than was occupied by the old building, the appellant could rebuild without contravention of section 43 of the London Building Act,

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

1894, and that the notice of objection by the surveyor was therefore bad.

It was contended by the respondent that in order to comply with section 43 the appellant was bound to submit to the respondent plans of the old building showing its extent in its several parts, including the height, width, and depth thereof, and that he was not entitled to deviate in any way from the said plans without the consent of the London County Council or of the tribunal of appeal.

The magistrate being of opinion that the respondent's contention was correct, dismissed the appeal subject to a case for the opinion of the court.

The London Building Act, 1894, s. 43, is as follows:

"Where any person intends to erect a domestic building . . . abutting upon a street on the site of domestic buildings existing at the commencement of this Act,

"(1) It shall be lawful for such person before commencing to erect the intended domestic building to cause to be prepared plans showing the extent of the previously-existing domestic building in its several parts . . . and to cause such plans to be submitted to the district surveyor, who shall (if reasonably satisfied with the evidence of their accuracy) certify the same under his hand, and such certificate shall be taken to be conclusive evidence of the correctness of the plans. Such person may then erect the intended domestic building, but so that no more land shall be occupied by the newly-erected building than was occupied by the previously-existing domestic building as so certified. If such person fail to submit such plans . . . and the district surveyor or the tribunal of appeal refuse to certify the accuracy of the same, such person shall on rebuilding be bound by the preceding provisions of this part of this Act."

"(2) If a person erecting the intended domestic building shall desire to deviate in any respect from the plan or plans certified by the district surveyor, it shall be lawful for him to apply to council, who shall sanction such deviation on such conditions as they may think fit."

Macmorran, Q.C., and Poyser.—The plans that must be passed by the surveyor are ground plans only, and the words in section 43, "in its several parts," do not refer to the different floors of the building, but are intended to include any possible outlying portions in the yard at the rear. Having got his plans certified, the building owner may proceed to erect his new building, subject to conditions imposed on him as to height by section 47. The whole object of section 43 was to give a building owner rebuilding on an old site a dispensation from the provisions of section 41 as to the minimum air-space to be left at the rear of a new building.

Avory and Daldy for the respondent.—Section 43 is one of a group of sections (sections 41-52) forming Part V. of the Act, headed: "Open spaces about and height of buildings." By section 41 all new buildings must be so built as to leave air-space from the ground-floor upwards. It follows, therefore, that if a person, having got his ground plan approved, chose to rebuild the upper part of his premises with various alterations, he might erect a new house which would not meet the requirements of the statute at all, although he claimed to be merely rebuilding an old one. If he wants to encroach upon air-spaces previously existing, he must first get permission of the county council. The words "so that no more land shall be occupied" do not cut down the effect of the preceding paragraph of the same sub-section.

WILLS, J.—I cannot bring myself to entertain any doubt whatever in this case. The question depends on what is meant by "plans showing the extent of the previously-existing domestic building in its several parts" in sub-section 1 of section 43. The words would be a most extraordinary synonym to employ if intended to refer to the ground plan or to the plan of the portions of the ground, or the portions under the ground occupied by the building only. Moreover, that is not the natural meaning of the words. The meaning appears to me clear—namely, that it is to be a complete set of plans that will show what the old building was. Why is that enacted? It seems to me to be for this reason—that if the person who has got an existing set of buildings, which may be utterly in disregard of a great many of the provisions of the Act, chooses to rebuild them exactly as they were, he gets the protection of the section with the cardinal condition attached that no more land is to be covered; and I daresay the parties have been quite right in assuming that the real meaning of that condition is that no land shall be occupied by buildings which was formerly uncovered.

Then sub-section 2 makes it perfectly clear what the object was for which the plans were to be submitted and certified. The words "If a person erecting the intended domestic building shall desire to deviate in any respect from the plan or plans certified by the district surveyor" cannot possibly mean shall merely desire to deviate in the one respect of occupying different spaces of ground. The sub-section means what it says—that if he desires to deviate in any respect he is subject to the jurisdiction of the county council. I cannot see anything unreasonable in that. I cannot doubt that the magistrate has put the right construction on section 43 of the Act, and that its real intention is that if the building owner desires in any respect to alter the character or outline, or to alter in any way his old building, so as to impose a greater burden upon the persons, whoever they may be, who are affected by the building, whether neighbours, tenants, or anybody else, then he is to submit to the jurisdiction of the county council, who give or withhold their permission to erect the intended building according as they deem such permission to be consistent or inconsistent with public interest.

KENNEDY, J.—I am of the same opinion. The first sub-section of section 43 is intended to carry out the Parliamentary purposes specified in the marginal note to the section, "Saving for certain domestic buildings on old sites." If a man wishes to rebuild on an old site, he has first of all to prepare "plans showing the extent of the previously-existing domestic buildings in its several parts." Those plans are not confined to the ground plan, but must mean plans showing every part of the building in every direction in which it extends. The argument of the appellant would have had no colour at all had it not been for the second paragraph of sub-section 1. It may be as Mr. Avory has suggested that that proviso as to no more land being covered was inserted merely ex abundanti cautelâ; but I think it was intended to lay down that so far as the occupation of a greater space of ground was concerned, no deviation from the certified plans, however small, could be considered too trivial to require the consent of the county council.

ATLAS METAL CO. v. MILLER. (a.)

Practice—Costs—Taxation—General costs of action—Costs of counter-claim.

Where the plaintiff is ordered to pay the costs of the action, and the defendant to pay the costs of the counter-claim, only costs actually occasioned by the counter-claim can be charged to the defendant, and the general costs of the action must not be apportioned between the plaintiff and the defendant, but must all be paid by the plaintiff.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 7.—The judgment of the court was read as follows by

LINDLEY, M.R.—In the action the plaintiffs sought to recover damages from the defendants for a libel by the defendants on the plaintiffs. The defendants defended the action, and by a counter-claim sought to recover damages for a libel on themselves by the plaintiffs. The action was tried with a jury, who found a verdict for the defendants on the claim, and for the plaintiffs on the counter-claim, and judgment was entered accordingly for the defendants on the claim with costs, and for the plaintiffs on the counter-claim with costs. The costs have been taxed, and the taxing-master, following what he understood to be the rule laid down in Shrapnel v. Laing has apportioned some of the costs of the action between the plaintiffs and defendants. The defendants complain of this, and contend that none of the costs of the action ought to be thrown on them. Channell, J., at chambers, upheld the master's decision, and the defendants have appealed to this court.

The defendants rely on Saner v. Bilton (No. 2), which was approved and followed by the Court of Appeal in Mason v. Brentini and In re Brown, Ward v. Morse, and still more recently in the unreported case of Russell v. Russell (19th of January, 1898), which was an appeal from the Divorce Court. Having carefully studied these cases and compared them with Shrapnel v. Laing, Hewitt v. Blumer, 3 Times L. R. 221, Finska v. Brown, and the earlier case of Baines v. Bromley, 29 W. R. 245, 6 Q. B. D. 197, we are unable to see any conflict in principle between them. If attention is paid to the points really decided by them, there is no decision that a plaintiff who has to pay or to receive the general costs of an action can throw on his opponent, or have thrown on himself, any part of such costs. On the other hand, there are decisions that no such apportionment can be made. In Baines v. Bromley and in Shrapnel v. Laing the late Master of the Rolls expressed his opinion that costs common to both claim and counter-claim should be apportioned, and he suggested that even the costs of the writ might be so dealt with (see 20 Q. B. D. 339), because the defendant got the benefit of his counter-claim by means of the writ issued by the plaintiff. But Lord Esher was careful to add that it was unnecessary to decide such questions, as they did not arise.

We will make another preliminary observation before examining the decisions more closely. We have not to consider how an order should be drawn up so as to give the general costs of an action in which there is a claim and a counter-claim to that party who recovers more than is recovered from him. It is unnecessary to consider such cases as Lowe v. Holme, 31 W. R. 400, 10 Q. B. D. 286; and Lund v. Campbell, 33 W. R. 510, 14 Q. B. D. 821. In such cases the judge who tries the action without a jury has greater power over the costs than a judge who tries an action with a jury. In the present case judgment has been pronounced and drawn up, and all we have to do is to construe and give effect to it. Whether an action is brought in one division of the High Court or another, whether it has been tried with a jury or without a jury, the construction and legal consequences of the judgment when drawn up must in principle be the same, although the costs to be taxed may be different in the one case from those in the other.

Now let us take the judgment in this particular case. There were some separate orders as to costs, but it is unnecessary to refer to them. By the judgment as drawn up the plaintiffs have to pay the defendants the costs of the action, not some of them or some portion of them, but all of them. There are no separate issues in the action the costs of which have to be borne by the defendants. In considering what are costs of the action, the counter-claim, as distinguished from the defence, ought to be disregarded. The costs of the action ought to be taxed as if there were no counter-claim. Whether both parties fail (as in Saner v. Bilton, Mason v. Brentini, and Russell v. Russell), or whether both succeed (as in Baines v. Bromley, Ward v. Morse, Shrapnel v. Laing, and Hewitt v. Blumer), or whether one fails and the other succeeds, can in principle make no difference.

This was pointed out and decided in Ward v. Morse; and Baines v. Bromley and Shrapnel v. Laing in no way conflict with that decision. In Baines v. Bromley the defendant recovered on his counter-claim more than the plaintiff recovered on his claim; but the order gave the plaintiff the costs of the action, and he was held entitled to them accordingly. No question of apportionment was raised or decided, although Lord Esher in his judgment stated what in his opinion ought to be done as regards costs common to both claim or counter-claim. Shrapnel v. Laing and Hewitt v. Blumer were precisely similar cases, and are open to precisely similar observations.

In Finska v. Brown the plaintiff recovered on his claim more than the defendant recovered on his counter-claim. The plaintiff got the costs of the action, but he had to pay the costs of the counter-claim. He sought to escape from the foregoing rule, and wanted the whole costs of the litigation. But the Court of Appeal, following Shrapnel v. Laing, decided against him. All the authorities agree so far—i.e., they all decide that a plaintiff who is to pay or be paid the costs of his action is to pay or be paid the whole of such costs as if there were no counter-claim.

Next, as to the counter-claim. The defendants have to pay the costs of this, and the counter-claim is to be treated as an independent cause of action, and, to use Lord Esher's words (20 Q. B. 338), as if the claim did not exist. This last expression, however, is calculated to mislead if not explained and properly understood. What are costs of a counter-claim? The answer must be, the costs occasioned by it. No costs not incurred by reason of the counter-claim can be costs of the counter-claim. The fact that if there had been no action the costs of the counter-claim would have been larger, because the defendant would then have had to issue a writ and take other proceedings, does not make costs not incurred costs incurred; and in considering what the costs of a counter-claim really have been in any particular case the costs saved by not bringing a cross-action cannot be treated as costs incurred. The introduction of counter-claims has given litigants advantages in this respect. Counter-claims, although cross-actions for all purposes of procedure and evidence, cost less than actions, and the party who has to pay the costs of a counter-claim gets the benefit of the cheaper procedure. To include in the costs of a counter-claim any costs not occasioned by its being a counter-claim, but saved by its being what it is, appears to us wrong in principle and opposed to Saner v. Bilton and Ward v. Morse. If Lord Esher really meant to express a contrary opinion, we cannot agree with him. We are satisfied that there is no decision to that effect.

But as pointed out by Lord Esher, there may be costs brought in for taxation which have been incurred partly in support of, or in opposition to, a defence, and partly in support of, or in opposition to, a counter-claim—e.g., where there is a defence of set-off equal to the plaintiff's demand, and a counter-claim for more than the plaintiff's demand. In such cases the taxing-master must apportion the costs as best he can, and fix the amount applicable to the defence and the amount applicable to the counter-claim. Where there are no separate issues requiring special treatment the costs of the defence will be costs of the action; the costs attributed to the counter-claim will be costs of the counter-claim. Costs common to both defence and counter-claim must necessarily be dealt with in this way. But to do this is very different from apportioning what are properly costs of the action, and such costs when ascertained must be paid by the party ordered to pay them. They cannot have been increased by the counter-claim, and no part of them can be properly regarded as costs of the counter-claim.

In the present case the master has lost sight of those principles, and has apportioned some costs which are properly costs of the action, and has thrown some part of them on the defendants. In other instances he has tried to bring about a fair apportionment by equalizing the amounts allowed to each party, so as to set one off against the other. The result is that the defendants receive less than they ought in respect of the costs of the action, and pay more than they ought in respect of the costs of the counter-claim. The case must therefore go back to the master in order that he may review his taxation in accordance with the principles above explained, which are in accordance with all the previous decisions when carefully examined. The costs of this application, both here and below, will be reserved until we know the result of the taxation.

PHILLIPS v. THE LONDON SCHOOL BOARD.
COCKERTON v. THE SAME. (a.)

*Elementary education—School board—Superannuation fund—Deductions from salaries of teachers—Ultra vires—Elementary Education Act,* 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 75), s. 35.

A school board established a fund, to be formed by means of deductions from the salaries of the teachers, for the purpose of providing superannuation allowances for the teachers. The board did not contribute to the fund nor insure its solvency, but they administered it under the advice of a superannuation committee, and they incurred certain expenses in the working of it.

A teacher who, by an agreement in writing with the school board, had contracted to come under the superannuation scheme and to permit deductions from her salary to be made, subsequently brought an action to recover the amount of the deductions so made.

Held, that the contract between the plaintiff and the school board was not illegal as being ultra vires of the board; and that even if the board had acted in any way ultra vires in administering the fund the plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

Judgment of Wright and Kennedy, JJ., ante, p. 155, affirmed.

Appeals from the judgment of a Divisional Court (Wright and Kennedy, JJ.), on the hearing of two appeals from the Westminster County Court, ante, p. 155.

The two actions were brought by Miss Phillips and Mrs. Cockerton to recover from the London School Board the amounts of certain deductions which had been made from their salaries while they were teachers in the service of the board. The facts of the two cases are set out ante, p. 155.

The county court judge held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the deductions, and gave judgment for the defendants in each case.

The Divisional Court affirmed the decision of the county court judge.

The plaintiffs, by leave, appealed to the Court of Appeal.

Jelf, Q.C. (Organ with him), for the appellants.—The superannuation scheme was ultra vires of the school board, and in consequence of that there was a total failure of consideration for the contracts entered into by the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs are entitled to claim a return of the money paid by them: Price on Ultra Vires, 3rd ed., p. 38; Colman v. Eastern Counties Railway Co., 10 Beav. 1; East Anglian Railway Co. v. Eastern Counties Railway Co., 11 C. Cur. adv. vult.

July 4.—A. L. Smith, L.J., read the following judgment: This is an action brought by a teacher who for many years was in the service of the London School Board to recover from that board the sum of £32 6s. 8d., being the amount of contributions voluntarily subscribed by her towards a superannuation fund promoted and carried on by the school board for the benefit and aid of the plaintiff and their other employés desirous of subscribing thereto. The plaintiff now seeks to get back the money which has been so paid by her to this fund, and which has been applied by the board according to her directions, as being money had and received by the defendants to the use of the plaintiff, and in the alternative she claims arrears of salary, and she has brought her action in the county court in that behalf. The learned county court judge—his Honour Judge Lumley Smith—gave judgment against the plaintiff, and the Divisional Court, consisting of Wright and Kennedy, JJ., have affirmed his judgment, and the plaintiff now appeals to us against the decision of the Divisional Court. In the year 1888 the School Board for London started the scheme for superannuation allowances to their employés in case of their becoming disabled by permanent infirmity of mind or body, and took from those desirous of joining the scheme 2 per cent. upon the amount of their respective salaries for the formation of the necessary fund. It may also be stated that the board has been desirous of obtaining from Parliament authority—(a) to defray the expenses of the management of the fund, (b) to guarantee the safe keeping of the same, but as yet has not obtained that authority. It cannot be doubted that, had the defendants been individuals and not the creation of statute, there could have been no pretext for saying that the plaintiff could recover back the subscriptions voluntarily paid by her for the purpose of this fund, which subscriptions had been applied to such fund in accordance with her directions and desires. Her contract with such a defendant would be a perfectly lawful contract, and if authority were needed, which it is not, Lord Watson's judgment in Hewlett v. Allen, 42 W. R. 670, [1894] A. C. 383, has only to be referred to as to this. But it is argued on behalf of the plaintiff that, although this may be so, as the school board is the creation of statute and can therefore only exercise the powers conferred upon it by statute, and as nowhere in the statute creating the board is to be found the power either to undertake to administer a trust, which, it is said, the school board is doing by collecting, holding, and administering the subscriptions, upon the advice and recommendation of a committee on superannuation, composed of the chairman of the board, five representatives elected by the board, and five representatives elected by the subscribers to the fund, or to pay ratepayers' money towards the expenses of carrying out the scheme, which it is said the school board is also doing, therefore the board is acting ultra vires, and consequently this action is maintainable, for there has been a total failure of the consideration as to the purposes for which the moneys have been subscribed by the plaintiff to the fund. By section 35 of the Elementary Education Act, 1870, which is the Act regulating the school board, it is enacted that "A school board may appoint a clerk and a treasurer and other necessary officers, including teachers required for any school provided by the board, to hold office during the pleasure of the board, and may assign them such salaries or remuneration, if any, as they think fit." The point as to the board having used ratepayers' money towards the expenses of the scheme, which was the point argued before the county court and the Divisional Court, is in my judgment untenable, for the contract between the plaintiff and the board makes no provision that the board shall use any of the ratepayers' money in carrying out the scheme, and, if they do so, that in no way makes the contract between the plaintiff and the board illegal, and the suggestion that the contract between the plaintiff and the board is ultra vires fails, and I agree with the Divisional Court upon this point.

But the other point, which came up during the argument in this court, still remains to be dealt with, and for the purposes of this case I will assume that the school board has contracted with the plaintiff to administer a trust by undertaking to administer the funds of the superannuation scheme in the manner above mentioned, and that no provision can be found in the Act authorizing the board to do this. I say I will assume but not decide that this is so, for in my judgment, even if this be so, it will not entitle the plaintiff to maintain this action either for money had and received, as being money paid without consideration, or for arrears of salary. If an action for money had and received would lie, the case of Lamb v. Great Northern Railway Co., 39 W. R. 475, [1891] 2 Q. B. 281, approved of in this court in Hewlett v. Allen, 41 W. R. 197, [1892] 2 Q. B. 662, was wrongly decided, and I am not by any means prepared to hold that it was. But, assuming that what the board is doing is not authorized by statute, either as regards expending ratepayers' money in the management of the scheme or without spending such money as regards the administration of a trust, can the plaintiff recover back the subscriptions she has heretofore voluntarily made to this fund, which have been applied to the purposes thereof in strict accordance with her mandate? This fund has been in existence from the year 1888 to the present time, and during the years 1889 to 1897 inclusive the plaintiff has been a voluntary subscriber of 2 per cent. of her salary to this fund, thus earning her right during all this time to come upon the fund, when, according to the scheme, upon her becoming disabled by permanent infirmity of mind or body, she would be entitled to do so. The other numerous subscribers to the fund, amounting, it is said, to 10,000 persons, were in like position as the plaintiff, the subscriptions of all going in aid of those who became incapacitated. I find that during this period—i.e., from 1889 to 1897—£7,175 has been paid by way of superannuation allowances to teachers and officers of the School Board when disabled, and that such allowances are continuing to be paid, and that upon the 25th of March, 1897, this fund had a balance in hand of £94,861. That the plaintiff has for years voluntarily contributed to this fund and acquiesced in its being managed and applied as it has been is beyond dispute. If the plaintiff was in a court of equity, what right would she have after this acquiescence now to demand back her subscriptions, which have been and are being dealt with in the way she has always desired, to the prejudice of the other subscribers who desire to continue to subscribe thereto and thus be protected in case of becoming disabled? She could have no such right after her acquiescence if she was in a court of equity. If she goes into a court of law, as she has done, and seeks to recover back her subscriptions as money had and received, which cause of action is applicable when the defendant has received money which in justice and equity belongs to the plaintiff under circumstances which render the receipt a receipt by the defendant to the use of the plaintiff (see per Lord Mansfield in Moses v. Macferlan, 2 Burr. 1005), what must she prove? She must prove that she handed the money she seeks to recover back to the defendants for a purpose, and that they have not applied it to that purpose, and that there has therefore been a total failure of consideration at the time she brings her action. This she cannot prove, for it is not the truth, for during all the time she has been subscriber to the fund she has had the right to a grant according to the provisions of the scheme,

Upon these grounds this action fails, as does also the action brought by Mrs. Cockerton. If the plaintiff can establish that the school board by reason of being the creation of statute cannot in the circumstances of the case administer the fund, it may be that the plaintiff by pursuing the proper course might obtain the appointment of a fit person for the purpose of administering the fund, or it may be that she might obtain a distribution of the fund between the different contributors according to their respective interests therein, but, though I offer no opinion thereon, she cannot maintain an action for money had and received to get back the subscriptions she has voluntarily for years subscribed to the fund and which up to action brought have been and were being applied to the very purposes for which she made her subscriptions, and during all which time she has had the right of participation in the scheme according to its terms and conditions; nor can she bring an action for arrears of salary, for no arrears exist. In my judgment the appeals in both actions must be dismissed with costs.

RIGBY, L.J., read the following judgment: The plaintiffs in these actions, Miss Phillips and Mrs. Cockerton, were formerly teachers in the employment of the School Board for London, and each of them brought her action in the county court for Westminster for the recovery, either as money had and received or as unpaid salary, of sums amounting to 2 per cent. on the total annual amount of their respective salaries, deducted each year during their employment, as contributions made by them to a superannuation fund arising from subscriptions made by officers of the school board. The county court judge dismissed both actions, and his decision was confirmed by a Divisional Court, consisting of Wright and Kennedy, JJ. Each of the plaintiffs appealed on leave given by the Divisional Court, and the appeals were argued together.

The grounds on which the appeals were based were substantially as follows—that the superannuation scheme, in furtherance of which the contributions of 2 per cent. were made, was in the nature of an insurance business carried on by the school board; that the carrying on of such a business by the board was illegal, as being ultra vires; that every part of the scheme was rendered illegal as being ancillary to the main illegal scheme; and that there was as a consequence a total failure of consideration entitling each plaintiff to a return of her contributions.

On the 24th of March, 1893, the School Board for London, through their clerk, sent to their officers and teachers, in the form of a series of resolutions numbered 1 to 8, a superannuation scheme with provisions for putting it into operation. The following resolutions and parts of resolutions are all that seem material for the purposes of these appeals: "(1) That every officer appointed on or after the 25th of March, 1893, be appointed subject to a deduction of 2 per cent. from his or her salary, the amount so deducted to be carried forward to the account of the superannuation fund. (2) That every teacher now in the service of the board be given the option until the 25th of March, 1893, of joining the superannuation fund, subject to the condition stated in resolution 1. . . . (4) That in the case of every teacher now in the service of the board who is not desirous of joining the superannuation fund under the conditions contained in resolution 2, the amounts already contributed to the fund be repaid, together with its accumulated interest, less the deduction of actual management expenses, upon condition that a receipt is given abandoning all further claims upon the fund. (5) That the board adhere to the following resolution of the 31st of March, 1892: 'That the board should continue their application to Parliament for authority (a) to defray the expenses of the management of the superannuation fund, and (b) to guarantee the safe keeping of the same'; but will make no contribution to the benefits or insure the solvency of the funds. (6) That pending the receiving of Parliamentary powers the board administer the superannuation fund upon the advice and recommendation of a committee of superannuation, consisting of members of the board and representatives of the various sections of the officers of the board. Also that for future applications for superannuation the scale of benefits prescribed by the following resolutions (here the then existing resolutions as to superannuation allowances are set forth) be suspended until aforesaid Parliamentary powers have been obtained, and that the committee of superannuation be empowered, after actuarial advice has been taken, to substitute therefor such a scale of benefits as the fund is able to provide, and shall, upon receipt of such Parliamentary powers, further review the new state of circumstances in reference to the contributions and benefits. (7) That the superannuation scheme constituted under the foregoing resolutions be put into operation as from the 25th of March next for all officers of the board who shall at that date be entitled to claim superannuation allowances under the above resolutions, and that it be referred to the finance committee to carry out this and the preceding resolutions. (8) That the committee on superannuation be constituted as follows: The chairman of the board ex officio; five representatives to be elected by the board; five representatives to be elected by subscribers to the fund—namely, one head teacher to be elected by the head teachers, three assistant teachers, one at least of whom shall be an assistant mistress, to be elected by the assistant teachers; one member of the non-teaching staff to be elected by the non-teaching staff."

As might be gathered from the above resolutions a superannuation fund had already been set on foot by the board, and resolutions with reference thereto had from time to time been passed by the board, but since both the appeals before us are concerned only with the superannuation scheme constituted under the resolutions above set forth, it is not necessary to refer to the terms of any earlier resolutions. The subscribers to the existing fund to whom the resolutions were sent were requested to exercise the option (1) of joining the superannuation fund under the conditions stated in resolution No. 2; or (2) of withdrawing their contributions to the fund on the terms prescribed in resolution 4.

The plaintiff in the first action, who had already subscribed to the superannuation fund, elected to join the fund under the conditions stated in resolution 2, and thus voluntarily submitted during the time whilst she continued to be a teacher to the deduction from her salary of 2 per cent., in accordance with resolution 1.

The plaintiff in the second action was appointed after the 25th of March, 1893, and therefore had, without the exercise of any option on her part, within the operation of resolution 1. Each plaintiff continued to be a teacher before bringing her action. The deductions were regularly made from the salaries of both appellants whilst they continued to be teachers, but neither of them received or ever became entitled to receive any payment out of the superannuation fund.

Turning now to the consideration of the superannuation scheme set forth in the resolutions, in order to determine the relations of the respective appellants to the school board and the other scribers thereto, if the school board, as contended by the appellants, undertook the duty of insuring them against certain risks, and has carried on the business of insurance, a business which certainly is not within the powers of the school board, a grave question might arise. But a careful examination of the resolutions shows these contentions to be unfounded. The school board in the case of the first appellant invite, and in the case of the second appellant impose as a condition of her employment, a subscription to the superannuation fund, but enter into no contract of insurance in either case. By the express terms of resolution 5 they made it plain that they would not contribute to the benefit of the fund or even insure its solvency. It is true that by resolution 6 they undertake the duty of administering the fund in the limited manner pointed out by that resolution. It is also true, as was pointed out in the argument, that they have allowed their paid officers to devote a portion of their time towards the service of the fund, and have incurred certain expenses in relation to the working of it; but there is nothing in the scheme to indicate that they intended to take any obligation upon themselves in regard to any such last-mentioned matters.

It may be, however, that the undertaking of the duty of administering the fund in the manner pointed out in resolution 6, or in the manner in which that obligation has been interpreted in practice, was a matter ultra vires the school board. It does not appear necessary now to decide any such question, since it may for the purposes of this case be assumed, without actually deciding it and without affecting the actual conclusion arrived at, that in the matters now referred to the board was acting ultra vires. This action of theirs would, however, in no way alter the essential nature of the superannuation scheme, which was the creation by the subscribers themselves of a fund which was to supply, in accordance with the directions of the superannuation committee, all the relief to which any subscriber could ever be entitled. The insurance scheme was, in fact, in the nature of a mutual insurance, and not an insurance by the board at all. The scheme was not originated in order that the board might administer it; but the administration by the board was ancillary to and not really necessary for the purposes of the scheme. If the board were restrained from administering the fund, the main purposes of the scheme could still be carried out successfully. It would be unreasonable to hold that the whole scheme failed because a subsidiary, and so far as the real objects of the scheme are concerned unessential, and even it may fairly be said an unimportant, part of it could not be carried out without a departure by the school board from their statutory powers. If the school board could not properly act as trustees, the remedy would be, not to declare the trust invalid, but to appoint other trustees. The court never permits a trust to fail for want of a trustee. Independently of the question of ultra vires, there could not be any ground for granting the plaintiff the relief claimed. Each subscriber paid his or her contribution to the fund for a purpose common to him or her and all other subscribers. The whole fund, by agreement of all the subscribers with one another, became liable for the payments which, under the advice and directions of the superannuation committee, might become payable to those of them whose expectation of benefit ripened into actual claims. It would be wrong to say that subscribers who received nothing from the fund had no consideration for their contributions. It was, of course, well known that some of them would never earn a superannuation grant; but that fact lies at the root of every scheme of mutual insurance. Those who do not earn a grant help to pay those who do, and it is the possibility of a grant, and not the grant itself, which forms the true and sufficient consideration for the contribution.

No difference arises between the cases of the two plaintiffs. Miss Phillips, as already stated, voluntarily elected to contribute to the fund. Mrs. Cockerton, coming in under resolution 1, could not, owing to the rule laid down, exercise any option. There appears to be no sufficient reason why, in fixing the remuneration of a teacher, the school board should not stipulate that 98 per cent. only should be paid in cash, and the remaining 2 per cent. by way of contribution for the benefit of the teacher to the superannuation fund; and that was, in substance, what was done here.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., read the following judgment: I agree that both these appeals ought to be dismissed. I have really very little, if anything, to add to the judgment of Wright, J. I do not feel at all satisfied that the school board have done anything ultra vires. Section 35 of the Elementary Education Act, 1870, empowers the school board to appoint officers and teachers to hold office during the pleasure of the board, and to assign them salaries or remuneration as they think fit. I see nothing in these words to prevent the school board, if they think that they will get better service thereby, making it a condition of service that the officers and teachers shall take their remuneration partly in deferred salary and that this part of the salary so deferred shall be devoted to a superannuation fund. The board may well think that officers and teachers who are willing to devote a portion of their remuneration to prudent provision for the future will be likely to render better service to the board. Assuming this view to be correct, that the board may make this condition in respect of the remuneration which they assign, I cannot see that it is ultra vires in the board to take upon themselves the duty of administering the superannuation fund, or to employ the clerical staff of the board at the expense of the board for the purpose of administering the fund. The whole thing seems to me incidental to the employment and remuneration of the staff. The fact that the board have chosen to apply for Parliamentary powers does not make that ultra vires which in itself is not ultra vires. No question arises as to guaranteeing the fund, because the board have not done this. I also agree that neither Miss Phillips nor Mrs. Cockerton can recover from the board, even assuming that the board has done that which is ultra vires, moneys which with their consent have been paid to a fund to which other persons have subscribed upon the basis of mutual subscription.

Appeal dismissed.

HOME MARINE INSURANCE CO. v. SMITH. (a.)

Insurance—Marine—Ship—Open cover—Re-insurance—Contract for sea insurance—Policy—Sum or sums insured—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 93.

A marine insurance company made a claim under an open cover of re-insurance subscribed by the defendant and other underwriters at Lloyd's on excesses over certain amounts upon certain risks taken by the plaintiffs. By the terms of the open cover £4,000 was specified as the limit of excess taken on any one ship, and £400 was specified as the defendant's proportion of this limit. The other underwriters' proportions were also specified, but beyond this there was no statement of the sum or sums insured.

Held, that this open cover was a contract for sea insurance within the meaning of section 93, sub-section 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891; but that it was not valid as a policy, because it did not specify the sum or sums insured as required by sub-section 3.

Appeal from a judgment of Mathew, J.

This was an action brought by a marine insurance company against an underwriter at Lloyd's to recover £350 16s. 5d. under a contract of re-insurance contained in a document called an open cover.

The plaintiffs alleged that by this contract the defendant and several other underwriters at Lloyd's agreed to re-insure the plaintiffs to the extent of the excesses over certain amounts, limited as therein agreed, upon risks which the plaintiffs had then taken, or might take, on goods by vessels of certain named steamship lines. The plaintiffs had, as original insurers, paid £5,008 4s. 5d. for a total loss in respect of certain goods covered by the re-insurance contract. The excess which fell upon the re-insurance contract was £3,508 4s. 5d., and the plaintiffs claimed the defendant's proportion of that excess. In the alternative the plaintiffs claimed that they were entitled to have issued to them by the defendant a duly subscribed policy in respect of the said goods, and to recover under such policy when issued.

The defendants contended, inter alia, that there was no contract of re-insurance expressed in a policy sufficient to satisfy the requirements of section 93 of the Stamp Act, 1891.

Section 93 enacts as follows: "(1) A contract for sea insurance . . . shall not be valid unless the same be expressed in a policy of sea insurance . . . A policy of sea insurance shall not be valid unless it specifies the particular risk or adventure, the names of the subscribers or underwriters, and the sum or sums insured, and is made for a period not exceeding twelve months."

The document in question was, as far as is material, as follows: "Open cover. 30/6/96. Dawson Brothers" (the plaintiffs' brokers). "Cash. Steamer or steamers. United Kingdom and (or) Continent and (or) America. West Indies. Merchandise. Re-insurance. Rates as per indorsement. Free of general average and York-Antwerp rules. Deviation clause. Old or new bill of lading, including all risks from warehouse, lighterage, and until delivered at destination. Negligence clause. £4,000." The last-mentioned sum was explained to be the limit of excess taken on any one ship. On the face of the document appeared the proportions of this limit taken by the several underwriters, and initialled by them. The defendant's proportion was £400. On the back of the document was a list of the steamship lines on which excesses on goods were insured. The document was not stamped.

By an order made at chambers it was directed that the question as to whether the requirements of the Stamp Act were satisfied should be tried as a preliminary question.

MATHEW, J., gave judgment for the defendant.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Carver, Q.C., and J. A. Hamilton, for the plaintiffs.—First, this is a valid policy of sea insurance. The requirements of s. 93, sub-section 3, are complied with. The sum or sums insured are not specified with absolute exactness; but they are specified with as much exactness as is possible in a contract of this nature. It may therefore be stamped as a policy on payment of the penalty prescribed by section 95. Secondly, in the alternative, this is not a contract for sea insurance at all, and therefore section 93 does not apply. It is merely a contract that, when certain risks arise, there shall be a contract of insurance.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and Scrutton, for the defendant.—This document is a contract for sea insurance, but it is not a valid policy because it fails to specify the sum or sums insured as required by sub-section 3 of section 93: Ionides v. Pacific Insurance Co., 21 W. R. 22, L. R. 6 Q. B. 674, L. R. 7 Q. B. 517, 28 W. R. C. L. Dig.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I am of opinion that this appeal fails, and it fails upon one point, with which alone I will deal. We have to consider a document which is called an open cover; or it might be called a slip. The question is whether, no policy having been issued, the plaintiffs can maintain an action upon this slip. Now, what is this slip or open cover? It certainly does not cover anything except marine risks. The intention of the parties conveyed by this document is quite clear. It is initialled by the underwriters to cover the Home Marine Insurance Co. as regards excesses which they had undertaken or might undertake upon goods by certain ships. I have not the slightest difficulty in saying that that is the meaning of this document and that it is a contract for sea insurance. A contract of re-insurance as regards marine risks is exactly the same thing as a sea insurance and nothing more or less.

That being so, the question arises whether this document, this open cover or slip, comes within the provisions of the Stamp Act of 1891. I say nothing about other slips, because they are not before me. The contention is that this document sins against the provisions of section 93, sub-section 3, of the Stamp Act, because, it being a contract for sea insurance, as I am clear it is, that sub-section enacts that a policy of sea insurance shall not be valid unless it specifies the sum or sums insured. Now, what sum or sums insured are specified in this document? None. The only limit to be found in the document is the limit that all the underwriters together are not to be called upon to pay more than £4,000 as regards any one ship. I say it is perfectly impossible upon the face of this document to say that it specifies the sum or sums insured so as to come within the provisions of section 93, sub-section 3, of the Act of 1891, so as to be a valid contract.

I am of opinion this is amply sufficient to support the judgment of my brother Mathew. I think, therefore, that this appeal must be dismissed, and that it ought to be declared that the plaintiffs cannot sue on this document.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. Many points of interest have been discussed during the argument, but I will only deal with one point which appears to me to be fatal to the plaintiffs' claim. We have here an open cover in form resembling, in some respects an ordinary slip; in others it differs considerably from an ordinary slip. The first question is whether it is a contract for sea insurance. Section 91 of the Stamp Act, 1891, deals with policies of insurance generally. Sections 92-97 deal with policies of sea insurance, and sections 98 and 99 deal with policies of insurance except policies of sea insurance. That this document falls within sections dealing with policies of sea insurance, and not within those dealing with policies except policies of sea insurance, I do not think can be a matter of doubt. It is a contract for sea insurance in a particular form—that is to say, a re-insurance of the original underwriters in respect of that interest which they acquire by undertaking the original liability. It is an insurance on the excess, and the risks that are insured against are marine risks. I cannot see my way out of it, that it is a contract for sea insurance both in the ordinary sense of the words and also within the meaning of this Act. Now, to be a valid contract for sea insurance it must be expressed in a policy of sea insurance, and a policy of sea insurance is not valid unless it specifies the sum or sums insured. Here the amount of the insurance is in no way dealt with, as far as I can see, except by saying that it shall not exceed £4,000 on any one steamer. If the document complied with the terms of section 93, it might perhaps be treated as a policy, but inasmuch as there is that vital defect in it, that it by no means mentions the sum insured, it must in my opinion be treated as null and void.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. STRANGE. (a.)

Estate duty—Exemption—Husband and wife—Income of wife's fund settled on husband for life—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 21 (5).

By a marriage settlement after-acquired personal property of the wife was settled upon trust (in the events that happened) for the husband for life, with remainder to the wife, the survivor, absolutely. The husband having died after the commencement of the Finance Act, 1894,

Held, that section 21, sub-section (5), of that Act did not apply, and that estate duty became payable immediately upon the husband's death.

This case raised a question as to the construction of section 21 (5) of the Finance Act, 1894, whereby, in certain events therein specified, estate duty is not to be payable until the death of the survivor of husband and wife.

By an indenture dated the 14th day of January, 1846, and made between James N. Strange of the first part, the defendant Charlotte M. Strange (then C. M. Eyre) of the second part, Dame Louisa Strange of the third part and certain trustees of the fourth part, being a settlement made in contemplation of a marriage then intended and shortly afterward solemnized between the said J. N. Strange and C. M. Strange, certain sums of consols and other personal property partly reversionary and partly in possession were settled upon trust to pay the income thereof to the said J. N. Strange for life and after his decease to the said C. M. Strange for life, with remainder as to the capital of the said trust funds for the children of the marriage as therein mentioned; and in the said indenture was contained a covenant by the said J. N. Strange and C. M. Strange to vest, any personal property to which the said C. M. Strange was then or should during the then intended marriage, or the said J. N. Strange in her right should, at any one time by gift, bequest, or otherwise become entitled of the value of £200 or upwards, other than a life interest only, and other than specific chattels not producing income, in the trustees or trustee for the time being of the said indenture, upon trust and to the intent that the same might be laid out by such trustees or trustee upon some of the stocks, funds, and securities prescribed by the said indenture, and that the stocks, funds, and securities upon which the same might be so laid out and the dividends, interest, and annual produce thereof might be held by such trustees or trustee upon trust to pay the income thereof unto the said J. N. Strange or his assigns during his life, and after his decease to the said C. M. Strange, or her assigns during her life, and from the decease of the survivor of them upon trust, if the said C. M. Strange should survive the said J. N. Strange then after his decease in trust for the said C. M. Strange, her executors, administrators, and assigns, but if she should die in his lifetime, then after his decease upon such trusts and for such purposes as the said C. M. Strange should by will appoint, and in default of appointment upon trust for her statutory next-of-kin.

The said C. M. Strange became entitled at different dates during the said coverture to personal property within the meaning of the covenant as to after-acquired property above set forth, and such property was got in by the trustees of the settlement and duly invested by them.

The said J. N. Strange died on the 1st of November, 1894, whereupon the said C. M. Strange became absolutely entitled to the investments representing such after-acquired property, and she accordingly required the trustees to transfer the same to her.

The case came before the court upon an information by the Attorney-General stating that estate duty under the Finance Act, 1894, became payable in respect of the said after-acquired property as property passing upon the death of the said J. N. Strange, but that the said C. M. Strange and her trustees refused to pay it, contending that no estate duty had become payable in respect of the property bound by the said covenant to settle other or after-acquired property by reason of the provisions of section 21 (5) of the said Act, but the information charged that the last-mentioned sub-section did not apply, the said C. M. Strange having become entitled, not to the income only, but to the capital of the property in question. The information prayed that it might be declared that upon the death of the said J. N. Strange estate duty became payable upon the principal value of all property coming within the terms of and bound by the said covenant to settle after-acquired property of the said C. M. Strange as property passing on the death of the said J. N. Strange.

By section 21 (5) of the Finance Act, 1894, it is enacted that: "Where a husband or wife is entitled, either solely or jointly with the other, to the income of any property settled by the other under a disposition which has taken effect before the commencement of this part of this Act, and on his or her death the survivor becomes entitled to the income of the property settled by such survivor, estate duty shall not be payable in respect of that property until the death of the survivor."

The case came before Vaughan Williams and Kennedy, JJ., sitting as a Divisional Court, on the 12th of August, 1897, when their lordships held that the case fell within the exemption, and that estate duty would not be payable until the death of Mrs. C. M. Strange.

Against that decision the Attorney-General appealed.

Sir R. E. Webster, A.G., Sir R. B. Finlay, S.G.,

(a.) Reported by W. SCOTT THOMPSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

and Vaughan Hawkins, for the Attorney-General.—In the first place the sub-section does not apply at all because this property was in fact settled by the husband; it only came into settlement under his covenant. Secondly, on the construction of the section we submit that the judgment in the court below gives no effect to the word "income." There is no need to read into the section the word "only." The object of the section is only to postpone payment when a wife succeeds, on the death of her husband, to the income of her own property.

Dicey, Q.C., and Butcher, Q.C., for the respondents.—The case exactly falls within the words of the Act. Can it be said that the widow has not the income because she has the corpus.

Sir R. E. Webster, A.G., was not called upon to reply.

LINDLEY, M.R.—In my opinion the interpretation of the Act is plain, and I am somewhat astonished that there is any difference of opinion about it. The settlement is plain enough. It is a settlement of certain personal estate upon trust for the husband for life, and after his decease it goes to the wife for life. But the settlement goes on to provide that if the wife survives then the property is to be held for her absolutely. The wife has survived the husband, and therefore, in the events that have happened, her life interest is absolutely immaterial, it merged in her absolute ownership. She became absolutely entitled to the property, and she has called upon the trustees to hand it over to her. The trustees had no choice, and were bound to hand it over. If they refused and she brought an action against them to compel them to transfer they would have to pay the costs—that is clear. I turn now to the Finance Act, 1894. It is admitted that the taxing sections (1 and 2) cover the case. Then comes the question, Does the case fall within any exemption? The answer to that question depends on the construction of section 21 (5). [His lordship read the section.] In the events which have happened in this case the husband was entitled until his death, and on his death the wife became absolutely entitled to the property—to the whole property—not to the income of it at all.

Two things are spoken of in the section, "income of property" and property, and the expression "income" of property is always used in the Act in contradistinction to the property itself. It is true in a sense that upon the death of her husband this lady became entitled to the income of the property because she became entitled to the corpus, but that is not the sense in which the expression is used. To hold otherwise would be merely to play upon words. The case is too clear for argument and the appeal must be allowed.

RIGBY, L.J.—First of all as to this settlement. In my opinion the meaning of it is clear, and in the event which has happened the wife surviving became absolutely entitled to this property.

Then as to section 21 (5) of the Finance Act. It is reasonably plain that the case contemplated is that of successive titles to the income of property as distinguished from titles to the property itself. You have to read in a most unnatural manner the words "becomes entitled to the income of the property settled by such survivor" in order to accede to the respondent's argument, and must read it as meaning "becomes entitled to the income of the property or to the property itself." That is clearly not what was meant. I agree that the appeal must be allowed.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, and have nothing to add.

Inland revenue — Income tax—Distress — Costs and charges—Man in possession—Constructive possession—Abandonment of possession—57 Geo. 3, c. 93, s. 1, Schedule—7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 17—Taxes Management Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 19), s. 86.

Where a distress is made upon the goods of a taxpayer for unpaid income tax not exceeding £20, the collector is not entitled to charge 2s. 6d. a day for a man in possession, if the man has only been in constructive possession and not in real possession of the goods distrained upon, unless the taxpayer, in order to avoid the inconvenience of having a man in real possession, has expressly agreed to pay that sum.

Appeal from the judgment of a Divisional Court (Day and Lawrance, JJ.) on an appeal from the Lambeth County Court.

The action was brought against a collector of Queen's taxes, who had distrained upon the plaintiff's goods for unpaid income tax, to recover damages for alleged illegal distress, and also to recover the sum of 15s. which had been paid by the plaintiff under protest as a charge for a "man in possession."

The question in this appeal was whether, when the amount of income tax due does not exceed £20 the collector is entitled to charge 2s. 6d. a day for a man in possession, where the man has not been in real possession but only in constructive possession of the goods distrained upon.

The circumstances under which the distress was levied are set out in the judgment of A. L. Smith, L.J.

The period of five days mentioned in section 86, sub-section 4, of the Taxes Management Act, 1880, having expired, the collector began to remove some of the goods, and thereupon the plaintiff, under protest, paid the collector the sum of £1 11s. 4d., being 13s. 4d., the amount of income tax, 3s. levy fee, and 15s. charge for man in possession for six days.

The county court judge held that there had been an illegal distress, that there had been an abandonment of the distress by the collector, and that the 15s. had been illegally charged, and he gave judgment for the plaintiff for £3 15s.—being £3 damages for illegal distress and 15s. for money illegally charged.

The Divisional Court reversed the decision of the county court judge.

May 11.—A. L. SMITH, L.J., read the following judgment: The amount in dispute in this appeal is insignificant, but the point raised is of some practical importance, and the case has acquired the name of "The Walking Possession Case." It raises the question whether a collector of income tax, when he distrains upon the goods of a taxpayer for unpaid income tax which does not exceed £20 (in this case amounting to the sum of 13s. 4d.), is entitled to levy upon the taxpayer, in addition to the tax due, 2s. 6d. a day for a man in possession, amounting in this case to 15s.—i.e., six days at 2s. 6d. per day, when in truth and in fact the man has not been really in possession, but at the most has been in constructive possession of the goods distrained. The facts are these. In the early part of January, 1897, the tax-collector, who is the defendant, left with the taxpayer, who is the plaintiff, a printed document which the plaintiff himself designated as being the "customary demand note." It is a document headed in large type, "Income Tax, House Duty, and Land Tax payable on or before the 1st of January, 1897." The document states the amount of duties payable for the year 1896-97 by the taxpayer, which in the present case was duty under Schedule D at 8d. in the pound, amounting in all to 13s. 4d. At the foot of this demand note, in large type, are the words, "This notice must be produced at the time of payment or sent with the remittance." Although the plaintiff was served with this demand for payment of income-tax, he wholly disregarded it and did not pay the 13s. 4d. due and demanded, Time went on without the tax being paid, and on the 29th of April, 1897, the tax-collector, accompanied by a man, went to the plaintiff's premises armed with two printed documents, the one being a document headed "Queen's Taxes, Arrears Warrant," which, when filled up as it subsequently was, gave the taxpayer notice that the collector had upon that day seized and distrained upon the taxpayer's goods and chattels for income tax, Schedule D, 13s. 4d. due upon the 1st of January, 1897, and also that, unless that amount, together with the charges attending the distress, was paid within five days from the 29th of April, 1897, the goods and chattels seized would be sold according to law. The charges mentioned in this document, in addition to the tax of 13s. 4d., were "levy, 3s.," "man, 2s. 6d. per day." The "inventory of goods seized" was thus filled in—"Shop, eight pair trousers." The other printed document which the collector then took with him to the plaintiff's house was the following: "To Mr. H. E. Burnett, 24, Queen's-road, S.E."—this is the name of the defendant, the collector—"or whom it may concern, —I hereby authorize you to re-enter at any time upon the premises . . . by force or as you may think fit, and to break open doors or windows for the purpose of taking possession under your warrant of distress; and I also undertake not to move away or allow to be moved away from the said premises any of the goods and chattels which are now therein until the amount levied for, together with all costs and charges of maintaining the levy, are duly paid and settled. And in the event of the man now in possession quitting the said premises temporarily or from any cause whatever previous to the removal by you of the said goods from the above-mentioned premises or the distraint being otherwise satisfied, it shall not be considered in any way an abandonment of the levy. I also undertake not to replevy the said goods and chattels, and not to bring any action or actions at law against you or either of you, or prefer any indictment, for any of your proceedings in this matter. Dated this day the 29th of April, 1897." The only person the tax-collector and his man found upon the plaintiff's premises upon the 29th of April, 1897, was the taxpayer's daughter, a child about 13½ years of age, whose signature the tax-collector then obtained to the printed document above-mentioned, having first demanded the tax of 13s. 4d. from her. This child had no authority whatever from her father, the plaintiff, to sign this document, then for the first time produced by the tax-collector, and, indeed, the father never knew of this document, nor that his child had signed it, till long afterwards, when the tax-collector was insisting that the taxpayer should pay him 2s. 6d. per day for the man having been, as he alleged, in possession for six days amounting to the 15s. then claimed by him. Upon his 29th of April, 1897, the collector, accompanied by the man as before stated, distrained upon the eight pair of trousers in the shop, and left the document headed "Queen's Taxes, Arrears Warrant" filled up as before mentioned upon the plaintiff's premises. The collector and his man then left the plaintiff's premises, taking with them the document signed by the plaintiff's child, neither the collector nor the man remaining in possession of the goods distrained, though it appears that during the six days the man daily returned to the neighbourhood to keep, as he said, watch on the premises, and to see that nothing was removed; and this man also stated that sometimes he was in possession of two houses in one day. It seems to me, for reasons hereafter, that the findings of fact of the learned county court judge, if they be findings of fact, are wholly immaterial to the decision of this case. If material, I could not agree with some of them, for in my opinion they are not only founded upon no evidence at all, but are directly contrary to the undisputed evidence in the case. For instance, the county court judge in his judgment states that no demand for the tax due was made upon the taxpayer other than the demand upon the child upon the 29th of April, 1897, ignoring altogether the service of the demand note on or about the 1st of January, 1897, and the continued and deliberate non-payment by the plaintiff of the tax due till the distress was made upon the 29th of April, 1897. Again, this continued non-payment the county court judge holds to be no evidence of a refusal to pay, for he holds that there was "no refusal to pay the tax in the sense intended by the Act of Parliament," whatever that may mean. The county court judge also states that the defendant levied a distress which was in the first instance improper; and that he afterwards abandoned it by not having a man in possession in such a way as to make it continuous possession. We held in this court not long since in the case of Bagshawes (Limited) v. Deacon, ante, p. 618, after full argument and discussing amongst other authorities Ackland v. Paynter, 8 Price 95, Swann v. Earl of Falmouth, 8 B. & C. 456, and Eldridge v. Stacey, 12 W. R. 51, 15 C. B. N. S. 458, that, where a sheriff goes out of possession, and the point arises as to whether he has abandoned possession or not, the question always is one of fact, and is whether the sheriff by going out of possession as he did has abandoned the possession. A sheriff in some circumstances may go out of possession and again re-enter without having abandoned possession, and the question always is whether what he has done amounts to an abandonment of possession. Although the document signed by the child in this case clearly does not bind the plaintiff and is no evidence against him, yet it is strong evidence to show that the collector did not abandon possession, and his employing and paying a man to go and see that the goods distrained were not removed affords corroborating evidence, if it were needed, that he went out with the intention of returning and not of abandoning possession. But these findings of the county court judge are immaterial to the real question he had to try, which is the right of the collector, apart from agreement, to levy upon the plaintiff for the 15s. for the man said to have been in possession, when the distress was for an amount not exceeding £20. This question has to be decided upon the statute regulating distresses for income-tax not exceeding £20, which appears to have been altogether overlooked by the county court judge, and is not alluded to by the Divisional Court, who decided the case upon the question whether there had been an agreement by the taxpayer to pay the 2s. 6d. per day whether the man was in real possession or not, of which, in my opinion, with submission to the Divisional Court, there was not a tittle of evidence. I am not aware of any Act of Parliament regulating the charges to be made when the sum distrained for exceeds the sum of £20, but from text books of repute I find that for such expenses the general practice appears to be to charge 1s. in the pound for the levy and 3s. 6d. per day for the man in possession. But there is an Act of Parliament which regulates what is to be charged by a collector for distress for income tax when such unpaid tax does not exceed £20, and this is the Act of 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 17). The matter stands thus: By the Taxes Management Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 19), section 86, sub-section 1, it is enacted that "If a person refuses to pay the sum charged upon him by virtue of the Tax Acts or this Act on demand made by the collector . . . such collector may and he is thereunto authorized and required for non-payment thereof to distrain . . . the person so charged by his goods and chattels . . . without any further authority from the commissioners for that purpose than the warrant to such collector delivered on his appointment." By sub-section 4 it is enacted that every distress levied by a collector shall be kept for the space of five days at the costs and charges of the person so refusing to pay; and, by sub-section 5, if such person does not pay the respective sums of money so due within the five days, the distress after appraisement may be sold by the collector for payment of the said money, and the overplus coming by the said distress (if any there be) after deducting the said money and also the costs and charges of taking, keeping, and selling the said distress, shall be restored to the owner. The question arises, What are these costs and charges? This brings me to the Acts of 1817 and 1827. By the Act of 1817 (57 Geo. 3, c. 93), after reciting that "divers persons acting as brokers and distraining on the goods and chattels of others . . . have of late made excessive charges to the great oppression of poor tenants and others," it is enacted that "from and after the passing of this Act no person whatsoever making any distress for rent where the sum demanded and due shall not exceed the sum of £20 for and in respect of such rent . . . shall have, take, or receive out of the produce of the goods or chattels distrained upon and sold or from the tenant distrained on . . . any other or more costs and charges for and in respect of such distress or any matter or thing done therein than such as are fixed and set forth in the schedule thereunto annexed and appropriated to each act which shall have been done in the course of such distress; and no person or persons whatsoever shall make any charge whatsoever for any act, matter, or thing mentioned in the said schedule unless such act shall have been really done." In this schedule, which is headed "Schedule of the limitation of costs and charges on distress for small rents," is set forth as follows: "Levying distress, 3s.; man in possession per day, 2s. 6d." Ten years afterwards, in the year 1827, by the Act of 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 17, all the provisions of the Act of 57 Geo. 3, c. 93, which related to distraining for rent not exceeding £20 were extended to any distress or levy made for assessed taxes, or any other rates and taxes whatever where the sum demanded and due for such taxes should not exceed the sum of £20. What, then, are the charges which can be made for a distress for income tax, when an amount not exceeding £20 is due? It is clear that in such a case by the statute the charge for a man in possession may be made of 2s. 6d. per diem, but only if the act for which the charge is made has been really done—i.e., if the man charged for has really been in possession. In the present case at the most the man charged for at 2s. 6d. per day has but been in constructive possession, and it is impossible to hold that constructive possession is the same thing as real possession, for the one is a reality and the other is not. For instance, how can there be real possession by one man of two, six, eight, or ten houses upon the same day? The thing is impossible. As, however, the statute 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 17, is a statute in favour of a taxpayer owing income tax not exceeding £20, I do not see why such a taxpayer may not agree with a collector, if the former desires neither to pay the tax due nor to suffer the inconvenience of having a man in real possession, to pay the 2s. 6d. per diem to the collector, even though the man does not remain in real possession, but unless such an agreement is made I am clear that the collector cannot claim the 2s. 6d. per day if the man does not remain in real possession. It is for these reasons I think, there being no agreement to the contrary, that the tax-collector cannot charge 2s. 6d. per day for the man who has not been really in possession of the goods distrained, when the income tax due amounts, as in this case, to less than £20. I think, therefore, that this appeal must be allowed with costs to the appellant here and below.

CHITTY, L.J., read the following judgment: I am of the same opinion. Upon the undisputed facts there was, first, a valid demand for the tax; secondly, a refusal to pay; thirdly, a right to distrain for the tax; and, fourthly, a valid distress actually levied for the amount of the tax, 13s. 4d., and the levy fee, 3s. The question of abandonment of the possession of the goods seized is one of fact. The document signed by the plaintiff's daughter does not bind him as an agreement; the daughter's signature was without any authority express or implied on his part. But the document is of importance on the question of abandonment. It shows an intention on the part of the defendant not to abandon the possession but to retain it. Taking into consideration the document, but merely for the limited purpose above stated, and the other undisputed facts relating to the watching of the shop by the defendant's man and his occasional entrances to see that the goods had not been removed, I say unhesitatingly that possession was not abandoned. As to the law on the subject it is sufficient to refer to Swann v. Earl of Falmouth, a case of distress, and to the recent case in the Court of Appeal of Bagshawes (Limited) v. Deacon, relating to the analogous case of the sheriff.

The real and important question in this appeal is whether the defendant was entitled to the charge of 2s. 6d. a day for the man in possession. By virtue of the statutes already referred to, the statute of 57 Geo. 3 is made applicable to a distress for income tax; and, inasmuch as the sum due for income tax did not exceed £20, that statute applies to this case. As appears from the preamble, the mischief against which the Act was directed was the oppression of poor tenants and others by excessive charges exacted in levying distresses. The enactments of the first section are clear, direct, and stringent. Where the sum demanded does not exceed £20, the section prohibits the having, taking, or receiving any other or more costs and charges for and in respect of the distress or any matter or thing done therein than such as are fixed by the schedule and appropriated to each act which shall have been done in the course of such distress, and the section concludes by declaring emphatically that "no person or persons whatsoever shall make any charge whatever for any act, matter, or thing mentioned in the said schedule unless such act shall have been really done." Clearly, then, the charge of 2s. 6d. for "man in possession per day" cannot be lawfully made where the possession is merely constructive or notional; to render the charge lawful within the Act the possession must be real or actual. In this case the possession of the defendant's man was constructive merely and not real.

Had the document signed by the plaintiff's daughter and taken away by the defendant been signed by the plaintiff or by his authority the case would have stood differently. The statute does not preclude the tenants and persons for whose benefit it was made from contracting themselves out of these benefits. It would often be to the advantage of the person, upon whose goods the distress is levied for a sum which he is not prepared to pay at once, to get rid of the inconvenience of having the bailiff's man in actual possession; and I can see no valid reason why he should not be at liberty to contract to pay the 2s. 6d. a day for the man in constructive possession. To hold that he cannot so contract would inflict upon him an unnecessary inconvenience.

Appeal allowed.

Chan. Div. Stirling, J. — June 30; July 1, 9.

CROYSDALE v. SUNBURY-ON-THAMES URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL. (a.)

Local government — Sewer made for profit — Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 13 (1)— Highways Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), ss. 66, 67.

The word "profit" in section 13 (1) of the Public Health Act, 1875, is not to be restricted to a direct money payment, and where a sewer is made, not for sanitary or mere ordinary drainage purposes, but in order to avoid an expenditure which would otherwise have to be incurred in order that the occupation might be equally beneficial, it will be deemed to have been made for the profit of the occupier within the meaning of that section.

This case raised the question whether a certain line of pipes formed a sewer within the Public Health Act, 1875, and, if so, whether it fell within the exception of section 13 (1) as being a sewer made by a person for his own profit.

The plaintiff was the owner of a house and grounds in Sunbury, known as Hooke House, including a field situated on the west side of a road known as Green-street, which runs nearly north and south. The said field slopes downward from Green-street and then rises again. In the dip are two ponds, the larger of which was formerly a gravel pit. On the west side of Green-street (in that nearest to the field) was at one time an open ditch from which there ran down to the pond a line of pipes which discharged into the pond. The end of this line of pipes next to the ditch was protected by a grating at a level of more than two feet below the surface of the road while the end next the pond projected to the extent of six inches or thereabouts.

The defendants became the urban authority of Sunbury on the 3rd of December, 1894.

In August, 1896, a portion of the ditch near the grating had become filled by an accumulation of rubbish which completely covered the grating so that there was nothing at the road to indicate the existence of it or of the line of pipes.

In December, 1896, the plaintiff, with a view to filling up the pond, removed the line of pipes so far as it existed on his own land.

Subsequently the defendants entered on the plaintiff's lands and cut a trench between the ditch and the field for the purpose of running off the surface water from Green-street. The present action was thereupon brought, and by the statement of claim the plaintiff claimed "(1) a declaration that the defendants are not entitled without the leave or license of the plaintiff to drain the surface water from Green-street or from any of the roads or streets in the parish of Sunbury-on-Thames into the plaintiff's said pond or land, or to lay down or make on the plaintiff's said land or use any drain, pipe, or trench for any such purpose, and (2) an injunction."

Butcher, Q.C., and Austen-Cartmell, for the plaintiffs.—These pipes do not constitute a sewer within the definition contained in section 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875, they fall within the exemption of section 13 (1), and do not vest in the local authority. In Durrant v. Branksome Urban District Council, ante p. 134, [1897] 2 Ch. 291, sections 16 and 17 were read together; the decision there was on section 16 and does not apply to the present case. If the defendants in fact made this drain, they did so by committing a trespass, and the drain will not vest in the defendants: Meaden v. West Cowes Local Board, 40 W. R. 676, [1892] 3 Ch. 18. In Ferrand v. Hallas Land and Building Society, 41 W. R. 580, [1893] 2 Q. B. 135, Lopes, L.J., gives, as an illustration of a sewer made for profit, the case of a drain for irrigation purposes; that is practically our case. Neither are the defendants justified by the Highway Act of 1835, ss. 66 and 67. This pond forms no part of the system of drains within their control: Croft v. Rickmansworth Highway Board, 39 Ch. D. 272, 37 W. R. Dig. 84.

Macmorran, Q.C., and Elgood, for the defendants.—Section 67 of the Highway Act, 1835, must apply to drains other than those within the control of the local authority: Denny v. Thwaites, 2 Ex. D. 21, 25 W. R. Dig. 120. The defendants have power to make watercourses, and so long as this pond is in existence they have the right to drain into it, therefore Croft v. Rickmansworth Highway Board does not apply. This is not a sewer made for profit: Minehead Local Board v. Luttrell, 42 W. R. 667, [1894] 2 Ch. 178.

Butcher, Q.C., replied.

STIRLING, J., stated the facts as above set forth and proceeded as follows: The defendants at the trial justified their acts under (1) the powers conferred as the urban district authority by the Public Health Act, 1875; (2) their powers as the highway authority under section 144 of that Act and the Highway Act, 1835. [His lordship then referred to the evidence, and came to the conclusion that the line of pipes was laid down between the pond and the road in 1858 or 1859 by the then tenant of the field for the purpose of getting a better supply of water in the pond for the use of the cattle and other stock feeding in the field, and that subsequently the surveyors of highways from time to time caused the rubbish deposited at the ditch end of the pipes to be removed, but that it was not established that such surveyors repaired or even cleaned the pipes themselves, and proceeded:] The first question is whether the defendants can justify what they have done under the powers conferred by the Public Health Act, 1875. The sections relied on are sections 13-17. It is in the first place contended that the pipes vested in the defendants by virtue of section 13. It is established by Durrant v. Branksome Urban District Council that the sewers to which the provisions of the Act apply include sewers for the removal of surface water as well as those for carrying off what is ordinarily termed sewage. That being so, the pipes constitute a sewer within the definition contained in section 4, for they do not fall within the exception in that section of "drains" vested in or under the control of any "authority having the management of roads," and not being a local authority under the Act—the defendants being themselves the highway authority for the district.

It is, however, contended for the plaintiff that they fall within the first exception in section 13—viz., sewers made by any person for his own profit. The meaning of this exception has been considered in several cases. In Minehead Local Board v. Luttrell it was held that sewers constructed by a landowner for the use of persons by whom he was to be remunerated by a direct money payment for the use of them fall within the exception. The word "profit," however, is not, in my opinion, to be restricted to a direct money payment. This was laid down in Ferrand v. Hallas Land and Building Society, both by Lopes, L.J. (pp. 141-2) and by A. L. Smith, L.J. (p. 144). When the object of making the sewer is not either for sanitary or mere ordinary drainage purposes, but to enable the land to be occupied more profitably or to avoid an expenditure which would otherwise have to be incurred in order that the occupation might be equally beneficial, it seems to me that the sewer is made for the profit of the occupier. In the present case the field was not adequately supplied with water for the use of the cattle fed in it; the tenant, in order to avoid the expense of bringing water from some other source of supply and to enable him to use the field for feeding cattle made this line of pipes, and I think he did so for his own profit within the meaning of the section.

Section 16 was referred to, but whatever may be done hereafter the defendants have not as yet brought themselves within its terms. So far as the evidence goes no report was obtained from a surveyor, nor any notice given to the owners and occupiers previously to the acts complained of nor down to the present time.

It is then to be considered whether the defendants derive any sanction for their acts from the Highway Act, 1835. The clauses relied on are sections 66 and 77. The former authorizes the highway authorities to "make, scour, cleanse, and keep open all ditches, gutters, drains, watercourses, and also to make and lay . . . trunks, tunnels, plats, or bridges . . . in and through any lands adjoining or lying near to any highway." That section, however widely it is construed, only authorizes the making and keeping open of ditches and drains in and through lands adjoining a highway and does not authorize the discharge of the contents of any ditch and drain into such lands. Unless, then, the pond can be treated as part of the drainage system under the control of the authorities those sections do not empower the defendants to discharge the surface water into the plaintiff's pond, and the case of Croft v. Rickmansworth Highway Board shows that the pond cannot be so regarded. In my judgment, therefore, this defence also fails the defendants.

It was lastly contended that an injunction ought not to be granted because the defendants may hereafter put in force the powers conferred in section 16 of the Public Health Act, 1875. At present, however, they do not show that they are in a position so to do. Down to this time they had been in the wrong; there ought therefore to be a declaration that the defendants are not entitled without the leave or license of the plaintiff or in due exercise of the powers conferred by the Public Health Act, 1875, to drain the surface water from Green-street or from any of the roads or streets in the parish of Sunbury-on-Thames into the plaintiff's said pond or land, or to lay down or make on the plaintiff's said land, or to use any drain-pipe or trench for any such purpose; and an injunction to restrain the defendants, their servants and agents, except with such leave or license or in exercise of such powers as aforesaid, from draining such surface water into the plaintiff's said pond or using or permitting any drain-pipe or trench to remain laid down or made for any such purpose as aforesaid, and from trespassing on the plaintiff's said premises.

LIFE INTEREST AND REVERSIONARY SECURITIES CORPORATION v. HAND-IN-HAND FIRE AND LIFE INSURANCE SOCIETY. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Sale by mortgagee under statutory power—Requisition by purchaser as to whether power exercisable—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 21), ss. 19, 20, 21 (2).

The protection conferred on a purchaser from a mortgagee selling under his statutory power of sale by section 21 (2) of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, is given only to a purchaser who has obtained a conveyance, and accrues only after a conveyance has been made. Consequently a purchaser is not precluded from requiring such a mortgagee-vendor to show that his power of sale is exercisable, and the vendor is bound to answer such a requisition.

Dicker v. Angerstein, 24 W. R. 844, 3 Ch. D. 600, distinguished.

This was a vendors' action for specific performance of an agreement to purchase a reversionary interest for £2,000.

In the course of the action a question arose as to the admissibility of certain evidence which really turned on the construction of sections 19, 20, and 21 (2) of the Conveyancing Act, 1881.

The facts were as follows: The contract was entered into on the 17th of December, 1896, and the day fixed for completion was the 25th of January, 1897. The contract contained the usual provision that objections and requisitions in respect of title should be sent to the vendors' solicitors within ten days from the delivery of the abstract and that all objections and requisitions not delivered within that time should be deemed to be waived. The vendors were selling as mortgagees, under a power of sale contained in a mortgage which was dated the 22nd of April, 1896, and was granted by H. C. Simonsen to J. B. Chapman to secure the repayment of £150. On the 23rd of October, 1896, Chapman transferred this mortgage to the vendors. The mortgage contained a covenant by the mortgagor to pay the principal sum on the 19th of June then next together with interest from that date in default of payment. Then followed an assignment of the mortgaged premises subject to a proviso for redemption on payment of the said sum of £150 on or before the said 19th of June next, or if after the said 19th of June then with interest thereon according to the foregoing covenant in that behalf from the said 19th of April next. And the deed contained the following power of sale: "Provided always and it is hereby agreed and declared that the power of sale conferred on mortgagees by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, shall apply to this security so as to be immediately exercisable on default by the mortgagor in the payment of the principal moneys or interest hereby secured at any time after the said 19th day of April next without the restrictions in the said Act contained as to giving notice or otherwise without any further consent on the part of the mortgagor or any other person or persons."

The purchasers took the objection that the power of sale was not exercisable till the 19th of April, 1897. The vendors replied that the 19th of April was a clerical error for the 19th of June, and offered to indemnify the purchasers against any liability in this respect. The purchasers declined to complete on this footing, and the vendors commenced the present action.

At the trial it was contended for the first time on behalf of the plaintiffs that, assuming the power contained in the mortgage deed ought to be read as it stood, they could, nevertheless, make a good title by virtue of the powers of sale conferred on mortgagees by the Conveyancing Act, 1881. The plaintiffs called no evidence in support of their case. The defendants maintained that, assuming the statutory power to exist, which they denied, it could not be exercised, the notice required by section 20 of the Conveyancing Act not having been served on the mortgagor. They called Mr. Chapman, who was the managing clerk of the plaintiffs' solicitor and the original mortgagee, and put to him this question: "Did you give notice to the mortgagor requiring payment of the mortgage money due under the deed of the 22nd of April, 1896?" The question was objected to.

Jenkins, Q.C., and Ribton, for the plaintiffs.—The question is irrelevant. A bonâ fide purchaser from a mortgagor selling under his statutory power is amply protected by the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and is not entitled to make any requisition as to whether the power is properly exercisable in the absence of any ground for the contrary belief. In any case the objection has been taken too late.

They referred to Selwyn v. Garfit, 38 Ch. D. 273, 35 W. R. Dig. 137; Dicker v. Angerstein, 24 W. R. 844, 3 Ch. D. 600; Upperton v. Nicholson, 19 W. R. 733, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 436; In Re Scott and Alvarez's Contract, 43 W. R. 694, [1895] 2 Ch. 603.

Butcher, Q.C., and P. M. Walters, for the defendants.—As to whether they were too late to take the objection, no requisitions having been made on this point, referred to In Re National Provincial Bank of England and Marsh, 43 W. R. 186, [1895] 1 Ch. 190. [They were stopped by the Court.]

STIRLING, J.—I am asked really upon a formal question as to the admissibility of evidence to decide a somewhat important practical question of law. The question arises in this way. An action was brought by vendors for specific performance. The vendors claim to be mortgagees of one Simonsen under a mortgage. By the contract for sale the date fixed for completion is the 25th of January, 1897. A defence is put in, by paragraph 4 of which the defendants deny that the plaintiffs were on the 25th of January, 1897, or at any time previously to that date, or that they are now entitled to sell the mortgaged premises comprised in the indenture of mortgage.

Now, upon the abstract being delivered the objection was raised that the power of sale which is expressly contained in the mortgage deed was inapplicable. I will assume, although I am not going to decide it, that that objection was well founded. The purchaser adhered to that objection and in consequence this action was brought, the defence I have mentioned was put in, and there was a counter-claim by the purchaser for a return of the deposit. At the trial it was suggested, as far as I understand it, for the first time that a title may be made otherwise than under the express power contained in the mortgage deed. That deed provides that the power of sale conferred on mortgagees by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, shall be immediately exercisable on default by the mortgagor in the payment of the principal moneys or interest thereby secured at any time after the said 19th of April, 1897, without the restrictions in the said Act contained as to giving notice or otherwise. So that the power of sale did not arise until a date subsequent to that fixed for completion. Now it is suggested that there is another power of sale which arises under the Conveyancing Act, not in the manner provided for by the deed, without the restrictions contained in the deed, and without any further consent on the part of the mortgagor, but subject to the restrictions and in fulfilment of the requirements contained in the Act. The case stands thus: the plaintiffs, very properly, simply put their case and take their stand on the deeds and documents. The defendants do not call any evidence in the first instance either of the defendants themselves or by any person acting for them, but they call the managing clerk of the plaintiffs' solicitor, who happens himself to have been the original mortgagee, and he is asked this question, which is objected to: Did you give any notice to the mortgagor demanding payment under the mortgage of the 23rd of April, 1896? The object of that is to show or to prove the issue raised by the defence that the plaintiffs had not, on the 25th of January, 1897, any title to sell. The answer to that is twofold. First of all, that there was title to sell; and, secondly, that having regard to the conditions of the sale the purchasers were too late to raise any such objection, and that a good title is shown according to the contract. Now, the first question is one of very considerable importance and turns on the provisions of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, ss. 19, 20, and 21. Section 19 provides: [His lordship read the section, and continued:] I observe as to that that the power of sale arose when the mortgage-money became due, that is here the 20th of June, 1896, and therefore it is possible that the power of sale had arisen. Section 20 provides: [His lordship read the section, and continued:] Now, if the case rested there, as a matter of construction that would prevent the mortgagee exercising his power of sale except under one of the events mentioned in section 20, and I apprehend that apart from the provisions of section 21, which I have still to consider, that the power of sale would not truly exist unless it were shown that one or other of the events mentioned in section 20 had occurred, The object of the purchasers in putting the question is to show that none of these events have occurred, and consequently that the vendors on that construction of the Act had no power to sell. If the question stood with reference to sections 19 and 20 I should be of opinion that the purchasers were right in that view, and that they could not be compelled to take the title unless the vendors satisfied them that one or other of the circumstances mentioned in section 20 had occurred, so that the power of sale was exercisable. But reliance is placed on the provisions of section 21 (2). Now, that requires to be carefully considered. It runs thus: [His lordship read the section, and continued:] And the way in which the objection to the question is put is that it is irrelevant on the ground that, having regard to this provision of the Act, the vendor can make a good title to a purchaser "who has no notice that no case had arisen to authorize the sale or that due notice was not given or that the power was otherwise improperly or irregularly exercised." That in point of fact the Act confers a power to "sell to that description of purchaser whom I may call a bonâ fide purchaser, and that the remedy of any person interested by reason of any improper or unauthorized irregularity in its exercise is in damages only. That view was taken of a power in Dicker v. Angerstein. Now, I have to observe that the power there was a very much wider one than that conferred by the Act. It was there stated thus: "That upon any sale purporting to be made in pursuance of the aforesaid power in that behalf, the purchaser or purchasers shall not be bound to see and inquire whether either of the cases mentioned in the clause or provision lastly hereinbefore contained has happened, or as to the necessity or expediency of the stipulations subject to which such sale shall have been made, or otherwise as to the propriety or expediency of such sale, and notwithstanding any impropriety or irregularity whatsoever in any such sale the same shall, as far as regards the safety and protection of the purchaser or purchasers, be deemed to be within the aforesaid power in that behalf and be valid and effectual accordingly, and the remedy of the mortgagor, his heirs or assigns, in respect of any breach of the clause or provision lastly hereinbefore contained, or of any impropriety or irregularity whatsoever in any sale, shall be in damages only."

Now, I observe, first of all, that that power applies to any sale purporting to be made in pursuance of the power, and, secondly, that it empowers the purchaser on such a sale and declares that he shall not be bound to inquire whether the event has happened, and provides that, notwithstanding any impropriety or irregularity whatsoever in any such sale, the same shall be deemed to be within the power of sale and that the remedy shall be in damages only. There the question arose, not between a vendor and purchaser, but between a purchaser and mortgagor or his assigns, and the decision of Jessel, M.R., was that the purchaser had a title even although the whole of the mortgage debt had been paid off at the date when the power of sale purported to be exercised. The ground on which the Master of the Rolls puts it is this: "It appears to me that this is put in about as plain language as you can put it, that the right to sell shall be so absolutely vested in the mortgagee as to give a good title to the purchaser—that is, to a bonâ fide purchaser, which this gentleman is—notwithstanding that the power of sale is not really exercisable, if it purports to be in exercise of the power, which this sale was, it is to be deemed within the power, which means that the remedy of the mortgagor is against the mortgagee in damages, which is supposed to be a sufficient protection to the mortgagor; and no doubt, in the case of a solvent mortgagee, it is a very efficient protection. But, then, it is said it does not apply to the case where the power of sale is not exercisable because the mortgage has been paid off. The answer is that it applies to that case as well as to every other. It is a case in which it is still a sale purporting to be made, although the mortgage money has been handed over, and the mortgagor has not taken either the precaution of getting back the mortgage deed, which he could have got back, or of getting a reconveyance or an indorsement, which would have the same effect." Now, the Master of the Rolls did not decide there that the purchaser could not have taken objection or could not have made inquiry whether the power had become exercisable. There would be something to say on that because the provision is: "Notwithstanding any impropriety or irregularity whatsoever in any such sale, the same shall, so far as regards the safety and protection of the purchaser or purchasers, be deemed to be within the aforesaid power in that behalf, and to be valid and effectual accordingly." It might be suggested that the clause was merely for the protection of the purchaser and did not extend the power of sale. I read, however, the judgment of the Master of the Rolls as implying that that is not the true view, but that it did extend the power, where there was impropriety or irregularity, in favour of the purchaser, which means the person who had entered into the contract for purchase. Now let me contrast that with the provision in the Conveyancing Act. That provides that "Where a conveyance is made in professed exercise of the power of sale conferred by this Act, the title of the purchaser shall not be impeachable." That gives protection only to the purchaser who has obtained a conveyance, and the protection accrues only after the conveyance has been made. I am asked to hold that in the case of a purchaser who might have been able safely to take a conveyance at the date fixed for completion he is yet to be precluded from inquiring whether a vendor was in a position to exercise the power of sale. I cannot ascribe such an effect to the provisions of section 21 (2) of the Act, which appears to me to be applicable only when a conveyance has been made. And these provisions appear to me to leave the purchaser, as between himself and the vendor, free to raise any objection which can properly be made as between them. As I have said, not only do the provisions not take effect until a conveyance is made, but what is protected is the title of the purchaser and not the title of the vendor. It seems to me that the true construction of the three sections of the Act which I have read is that they confer protection on only the purchaser who has obtained a conveyance without knowledge of any irregularity. In my judgment the vendor is bound to show, notwithstanding this clause of section 21, upon request of the purchaser, that his power of sale was exercisable, and secondly, that if the purchaser had made at the proper date a requisition to that effect the vendor would have been bound to answer it. Then it appears that the contract contains a clause in the very usual form for limiting the time for making requisitions. It is urged that it is now too late to make such a requisition. The answer of the purchasers to that is: "That may be so; but we take upon ourselves the burden of proving the allegation in the defence that at the date fixed for completion the plaintiffs were not in a position to sell. If that be so, we may not be able to recover the deposit, but we can resist specific performance." Therefore the question put is admissible and relevant, and I think it ought to be answered.

[The question was then put. Mr. Chapman replied that early in October, 1896, he instructed Mr. Stanley-Jones, who acted as his agent in the matter, to serve notice on the mortgagor demanding payment, and that such notice was served. Counsel for the defendants, being unable to elicit from the witness any particulars as to the nature of the notice, applied for an adjournment for the purpose of calling Mr. Stanley-Jones, but this was refused. STIRLING, J., in delivering judgment upon the whole case, held, first, that though the word "April" in the proviso for redemption required alteration to "June," the repetition of the word in the power of sale did not lead to any such manifest absurdity or incongruity as to justify the court in altering it, and that, consequently, the power of sale in the deed did not arise till the 19th of April, 1897; secondly, that no contrary intention was expressed in the deed so as to prevent the application of the power conferred by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, between the 19th of June, 1896, and the 19th of April, 1897, subject to the restrictions in the Act; thirdly, that the defendants had failed to prove that the requirements of the Act had not been complied with. In the result his lordship gave judgment for specific performance, but without costs, and dismissed the counter-claim also without costs.]

Lunacy—Maintenance—Committee of person—Liability to account—Allowance paid quarterly in advance—Death of lunatic before expiration of quarter.

Payment was made quarterly in advance by the committee of a lunatic's estate to the committees of the person of a fixed annual sum which the master had allowed for the lunatic's maintenance, but the order in lunacy did not expressly authorize payment to be made in advance. The lunatic having died shortly after the beginning of the fourth quarter, for which the allowance had been paid in advance as usual, the executors of the lunatic brought an action against the committees of the person to recover so much of the said quarterly allowance as had not been expended in the maintenance of the lunatic.

Held, that, inasmuch as the lunatic was only maintained for nine months and a few weeks, and the committees of the person had received a whole year's allowance, the lunatic's executors were entitled to recover such part as could not be said to have been properly expended by the committees in her maintenance, regard being had to the provisions of the order in lunacy.

The observations of Lord St. Leonards in In re Ponsonby, 3 Dru. & War. 27, 31, 2 Connor & L. 30, 32, must be considered to be made with regard to the ordinary case where the lunatic is properly maintained for the whole year.

By an order in lunacy dated the 24th of March, 1896, Isabella R. Read and the defendant, Constance R. Read, were appointed committees of the person and the official solicitor was appointed committee of the estate of Mrs. P., widow, a certified lunatic, and there was allowed for her maintenance £2.500 per annum from the 29th of January, 1896. The said order provided (inter alia) that the said defendant, as one of the committees of the person, should be at liberty to reside with the lunatic and to have the use of the lunatic's leasehold residence and stables in London, together with her furniture, horses, carriages, and other effects there, and the said defendant resided there accordingly until the death of the lunatic. After the date of the said order the committee of the estate paid to the committees of the person, out of the estate of the lunatic, the allowance of £2,500 per annum for her maintenance by equal quarterly payments, each payment being made in advance for the convenience of the committees of the person, and it was not disputed that the lunatic was always properly maintained until she died.

On the 26th of October, 1896, the sum of £625 in respect of the said maintenance allowance for the quarter ending the 29th of January, 1897, was paid to the committees of the person. On the 11th of November, 1896, the lunatic died.

The plaintiffs, who were the lunatic's executors, claimed that the defendant, Constance R. Read, and the estate of the said Isabella R. Read (who died in May, 1897) were jointly and severally liable to repay to the estate of the lunatic the proportionate part for the period subsequent to her death of the £625 paid for the quarter's allowance, or in the alternative to repay the £625, less any sums properly paid for the lunatic's maintenance between the 29th of October, 1896, and her death, with an inquiry in the latter alternative as to the amount of such sums, and payment in either alternative of any amount found due to the plaintiffs.

Proceedings had been first taken in lunacy, and the master made an order in those proceedings, but his order was discharged by the Lord's Justices sitting in lunacy, whereupon the above action was commenced by the executors.

Neville, Q.C., and R. J. Parker, for the plaintiffs.—The allowance ought to be dealt with on the footing of its accruing de die in diem, and the plaintiffs are entitled to an order on that principle for repayment by the defendants of a proportionate part of the last advance. If that is not so, they are entitled to be repaid so much as was not properly paid for the lunatic's maintenance. How can the defendants retain the whole year's allowance when they did not maintain the lunatic for a year, and payments have in fact had to be made by the plaintiffs which ought to have been paid by the defendants if the lunatic had lived and been maintained by them for the year? This belongs to the class of cases indicated by Lord Cairns, L.J., in In re French, 16 W. R. 657, L. R. 3 Ch. App. 317, in which he said the court clearly would have jurisdiction to direct an inquiry and account and to make some consequential order upon the committee of the person (see L. R. 3 Ch. App., pp. 318-320), because it is clear that there could be no expenditure for the lunatic here after her death. The order did not authorize any payments in advance, and such payments were not regular. They were made for the convenience of the committees of the person, and no right to retain can be founded on the fact of the whole quarter's allowance having been paid under the circumstances.

Farwell, Q.C., S. Dickinson, and E. F. Buckley, for the defendants.—The doctrine of equity in regard to money paid for maintenance of infants or lunatics is that no account can be required of any surplus if the duty is properly performed: Jodrell v. Jodrell, 14 Beav. 397, at p. 411. The scheme of the order here contemplated that the defendants should keep the lunatic for no more than nine months, and they therefore performed the whole liability imposed on them. [ROMER, J.—In taking an account regard should be had to the time for which the lunatic was intended to be maintained by the defendants under the order in lunacy.] In any case the defendants cannot be ordered to repay anything if, as is admitted to be the case, the lunatic has been properly maintained: In re Ponsonby, 3 Dru. & War. 27, p. 31, 2 Connor & L. 30, p. 32, per Lord St. Leonards, referring to Grosvenor v. Drax, 2 Knapp. 82. The principle is explained by Jessel, M.R., in In re Weld, 30 W. R. 385, 20 Ch. D. 451. The remuneration of the committee is within the purview of the order, so there is no equity. The true view of the allowance is that it was a quarterly allowance. But whether it were annual or quarterly what remains of the advance must be treated as savings out of the allowance which the defendants are entitled to keep for their own benefit. It was necessary to make the payments in advance, and there was, therefore, no impropriety in them. In order to succeed the plaintiffs must show a contract to return part of the advance if the lunatic died in the period for which the advance was made.

They also cited Whincup v. Hughes, 19 W. R. 439, L. R. 6 C. P. 78.

ROMER, J.—This is a novel point, and one of considerable difficulty; but, after considering the matter, I have come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs are entitled to such relief as I will hereafter indicate.

I will first take the order of the 24th day of March, 1896, and see what it authorized. It authorized the committee of the estate to pay the committees of the person a sum of £2,500 per annum from the 29th of January, 1896, for the maintenance of the lunatic; and, if it is looked at, it will be clear that that sum was fixed with reference to a whole year's maintenance, and not to the maintenance for any portion of a year. For example, one of the items of the scheme under which the total of £2,500 per annum was arrived at was this: "Board for nine months at £12 a week, £520"; because it was contemplated, having regard to the other part of this order, that the lunatic would not, in fact, be maintained at the expense of the committees of the person for the full fifty-two weeks of the year. Clearly, therefore, the allowance sanctioned of £2,500 was allowed only as a provision for the maintenance of the lunatic for a year taken as a whole, and clearly it was not an allowance which you could say was an allowance at the rate of £2,500 per annum to be taken or treated as if it was accruing or liable to be paid to the committees of the person de die in diem. It was not that, nor, so far as I can see, looking at the face of the order, was it an allowance fixed quarterly, to be paid at the rate of £2,500 per annum. Still less was it an order which sanctioned any payment, so far as I can see, in advance. It certainly did not do so expressly. All that the order did was to justify the committee of the estate, if the lunatic was maintained for a year by the committees of the person, to pay over to the committees of the person the full yearly allowance of £2,500. Now what happened upon that order? There is no other order directing payments to be made quarterly or otherwise, still less any other order sanctioning payments by the committee of the estate in advance. What happened was this: The committee of the estate met the representative of the committees of the person, and it was discussed how the payment should be made; and it was arranged, as a matter of arrangement between the parties, that the committee of the estate should make payments in advance on account—for that is what it really comes to. Now, no doubt that arrangement was come to in the expectation and on the footing that the lunatic would be maintained for the year, and in the expectation that in that case the committees of the person would be entitled to retain the full £2,500 paid. Taken in the light of a mere payment on account in that way, and on that footing and understanding, that was a reasonable temporary arrangement to have been come to between the committee of the estate and the committees of the person; but if it was to be taken as an agreement by the committee of the estate with the committees of the person that quarterly payments should be paid in advance to the committees of the person on the footing that the committees of the person should be able to retain that quarterly payment whether the lunatic was maintained for the full quarter or for the year or not, then I am of opinion that was not justified by the order, and was an improper payment by the committee of the estate. I think it would be justified, when taken on the footing I have indicated, that it was only intended to be taken on the footing and in the expectation of a payment on account of the full yearly maintenance, regarding the maintenance to be made for the year as a whole, and subject, if the lunatic was not maintained for the whole year, that the lunatic's estate should have such rights in that case as ought to have been provided for by express agreement between the parties.

Now, the lunatic was maintained for nine months and a few weeks, but the whole yearly payment has been made, although the lunatic was not maintained for a year; and it is clear from the evidence that, as a matter of fact the committees of the person are claiming to retain the whole yearly allowance, though they did not maintain the lunatic for a year, and though in fact payments have had to be made by the executors of the lunatic which ought to have been paid by the committees of the person if the lunatic had lived during the year and had been maintained by them. I cannot see how, in this case, the committees of the person can claim to retain the whole of the £2,500 as against the executors of the lunatic, and I am certain that the payments were never made by the committee of the estate on that footing to them; and if they had been it would have been unauthorized on the part of the committee of the estate, seeing that the committees of the person well knew under what order this money was paid, and that it was the lunatic's money, or a portion of the lunatic's money, which they are, in my opinion, not entitled to retain to the full extent of the whole yearly payment. That being so it appears to me that in some shape or form the executors are entitled to recover from the committees of the person such portion of that yearly allowance as could not be said to have been properly expended by them for the purpose of the lunatic, having regard to the nature of the allowance made as yearly allowance by the order of the 24th of March, 1896. Although in the form of the order which I propose to make I shall not say anything expressly about it, I think it right to say this. I quite agree, if, the £2,500 having been paid, the lunatic had been maintained for the whole year, that the committees of the person could not have been obliged to account at all for any portion of that £2,500 unless a case had been made against them that they had not properly maintained the lunatic in accordance with the provisions of the order. But the cases which have decided that no account can be taken as against the committees of the person who have received a yearly payment, and duly maintained the lunatic, of what was done by them with the yearly allowance, do not apply to the case before me at all. The cases which show that in the ordinary circumstances committees of the person are not bound to account are liable to this exception. The committees of the person are liable to account, even if they have maintained the lunatic for a year, if, having received the full yearly allowance, it be shown against them that they have not properly maintained the lunatic, and in similar cases.

Now, in estimating what sum ought to be allowed to the committees of the person for the time they have maintained this lunatic, certainly attention ought to be paid to the rate of allowance, and the scheme of allowance provided for by the order of the 24th of March, 1896, and to the other provisions of that order, and probably also to the circumstance that in a case of this kind in making an allowance to the committees of the person it is not intended, so long as the committees of the person discharge their duty, to make them account or to prevent them from possibly receiving indirectly some benefit from the order. I say that, so that when this inquiry is proceeded with, the committees of the person shall receive no injury. I shall take care myself—the inquiry being proceeded with in my chambers—to see that every just allowance is made to the committees of the person; but I do not think, they not having maintained this lunatic for the year, they can claim properly the whole yearly allowance. So far as I can see there is no authority which prevents my deciding in the way I am doing. The case of Grosvenor v. Drax is dealt with by Lord Cairns in In re French, and I need not again refer to it. But with regard to In re Ponsonby, I think the observations made by Lord St. Leonards—where he said of Grosvenor v. Drax that the great lawyers in the Privy Council who decided that case decided that the committee was entitled to retain the savings of the lunatic's maintenance—must be considered with reference to the ordinary case where the committee has duly maintained the lunatic for the full period for which the allowance was made, and no case was made against the committee of not having properly applied the allowance in accordance with the provisions of the scheme under which the order was made, or not having properly maintained the lunatic. I do not think Lord St. Leonards could have intended to lay down the general proposition that when once the committee has received the lunatic's money he is, under no circumstances, bound to account for the money so received.

I therefore propose to direct an inquiry what sum should be allowed for the maintenance of the lunatic during the time she was maintained, regard being had to the order dated the 24th of March, 1896, and what sums have been paid to the defendants by the committee of the estate on account of the yearly allowance provided by that order. Then there will be liberty to apply in chambers to the plaintiffs for the payment of any balance that may be found due to the lunatic's estate on taking those inquiries. I reserve the costs of the action until it is seen how the inquiries turn out. With regard to the minor point raised that one of the committees of the person died, it appears to me that the receipt by the two committees of the lunatic's money from the committee of her estate was a receipt of moneys in the circumstances, for which they were, both of them, bound to account in equity, and, inasmuch as both received it, the executors of the deceased committee are liable to account just as much as the surviving committee. I have assumed that the executors of the deceased committee admit assets. Is that so? [Buckley.—Yes, my lord, that is so.] If not, there must be liberty to apply.

In re CALCOTT AND ELVIN'S CONTRACT. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Order of adjudication—Middlesex Registry—Deed or conveyance—Priorities—Middlesex Registry Act (7 Anne c. 20)—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 20, 54 (4), 121.

An order under section 121 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, whereby a person is adjudicated a bankrupt is not a deed or conveyance within the meaning of the Middlesex Registry Act, so as to require, or be capable of, registration thereunder.

Decision of Kekewich, J., ante, p. 457, reversed.

Appeal from the decision of Kekewich, J., ante, p. 457.

Under an indenture of the 7th day of February, 1881, certain leasehold properties in Maida Vale, London, were demised to Michael Death for forty-one years.

By two indentures of mortgage dated respectively the 4th of September, 1894, and the 25th of December, 1894, Michael Death mortgaged the said premises to Calcott to secure the repayment of moneys advanced to him by Calcott. These mortgages were respectively duly registered in the Middlesex Land Registry on the 10th of October, 1894, and the 29th of December, 1894. Michael Death made default, and Calcott entered into possession of the mortgaged property, and subsequently on the 16th of November, 1897, in exercise of his power of sale as mortgagee, contracted to sell the premises to Elvin.

Prior to the completion of the sale Elvin ascertained that Michael Death then was and since 1887 had been an undischarged bankrupt, and that he had been adjudicated bankrupt by an order dated the 28th of January, 1887, made under section 20 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and also that on the 29th of January, 1887, an order had been made under section 121 of the same Act for the summary administration of his estate.

The official receiver, who by virtue of these orders became Michael Death's trustee in bankruptcy, had registered no memorial of his title of the premises.

In view of the above facts the purchaser refused to complete his contract.

A summons was issued by the vendor asking for a declaration that, notwithstanding Michael Death's bankruptcy in 1887, the vendor had a good title as mortgagee.

Kekewich, J., held that, as the order of adjudication in bankruptcy of Michael Death had not been registered, the title of the vendor-mortgagee took priority, and was a good title (see ante, p. 457).

The purchaser appealed.

Rowden and A. H. Carrington, for the appellant, the purchaser.—The vendor has no title as against the official receiver. The official receiver's title is not postponed or in any way prejudiced by non-registration. Under the Trustee Act, 1893, section 12 (4), the person making a vesting declaration is to be deemed the conveying party, but there is no such declaration in the present case. The order of adjudication was made under section 121 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and thereupon the property vests: section 20. A mere adjudication, however made, cannot comply with the rules which have been made as to the method of registration. [CHITTY, L.J. —You can only register what appears upon the deed or will.] It was not the order which passed the property; there is no magic in the word "conveyance": per Lord Cairns in Credland v. Potter, 23 W. R. 36, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 8. Further, in any event this is not such a title as ought to be forced on a purchaser. In re New Land Development Association and Fagence's 40 W. R. 551, [1892] 2 Ch. 138; Burrows v. Holley, 35 W. R. 592, 35 Ch. D. 123, were also cited.

Warrington, Q.C., and Muir Mackenzie, for the vendor.—The order appealed from is right. It is the order of adjudication, not merely the Act of Parliament, which passes the property. In In re Clayton and Barclay's Contract, 43 W. R. 549, [1895] 2 Ch. 212, the purchaser was compelled to take a title depending on the construction of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

Rowden was not called upon to reply.

LINDLEY, M.R.—The question raised is one of very great importance in dealing with property in Middlesex subject to the Middlesex Registry Act. What we have to consider is whether, if a person who has property in Middlesex is adjudicated a bankrupt, the effect of which of course is to transfer his property to his trustee in bankruptcy, the adjudication of bankruptcy is a deed or conveyance which has to be registered under the Middlesex Registry Act of Anne, and which if not registered will be postponed to some subsequently registered deed executed by the bankrupt.

Now, we have all had some experience in conveyancing, and in bankruptcy matters too, but I confess, speaking for myself, that the idea that an adjudication in bankruptcy requires to be registered in Middlesex under the statute of Anne, is an entire novelty to me, and I have never heard such a theory suggested. It does not follow that my recollection is accurate and it does not follow that there is not something in the Act of Parliament which I have forgotten, or which qualifies it, but still it is a novelty to all of us.

Just let us see how the matter stands. The Act of 7 Anne, c. 20, begins with a preamble, which is that by different and secret ways of conveying lands, tenements, and hereditaments, people who are disposed could commit frauds, and so on. Then it enacts, in section 1 (the expressions of which have received a very large construction and interpretation), that deeds and conveyances of lands in Middlesex should be registered. Then there is a section showing what the memorial is to contain. If asked whether an order adjudicating a man a bankrupt is a deed or conveyance, what would anybody say using the language in the ordinary sense? They would say that it is nothing of the sort; nor is it, and no amount of ingenuity can make an order adjudicating a man a bankrupt either a deed or a conveyance. It is an order. There may be some orders, and there are some orders, such as vesting orders, which may amount to a conveyance within the Act, but we have nothing to do with these. All we have to do with is an order adjudicating a man a bankrupt. Now that order is made, and in order to see the effect of it we must look at the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. That Act of 1883 is framed upon lines which are in some respects new. Before 1849 the old machinery involved the execution of deeds of assignment or a conveyance from the bankrupt to his assignee. When that was the machinery adopted those deeds of assignment came within the very words of the statute of Anne, and that statute applied to them. But when that machinery is done away with, when there is no conveyance and no deed of assignment at all, what is there left to come within the fair meaning of the words "deed" or "conveyance" in the statute of Anne?

Now let us consider what we have to deal with under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. Section 20 is the first one necessary to be referred to, and that says: "Where a receiving order is made against a debtor, then if the creditors at the first meeting or any adjournment thereof by ordinary resolution resolve that the debtor be adjudged a bankrupt, or pass no resolution, or if the creditors do not meet, or if a composition or scheme is not accepted or approved in pursuance of this Act within fourteen days after the conclusion of the examination of the debtor, or such further time as the court may allow, the court shall adjudge the debtor bankrupt, and thereupon"—that is, upon the adjudication of the debtor to be a bankrupt—"the property of the bankrupt shall become divisible among his creditors," and shall vest in a trustee. That is the effect of the adjudication of the debtor. Now, if we pass on to section 21 we have this: "Where a debtor is adjudged bankrupt, or the creditors have resolved that he be adjudged bankrupt, the creditors may, by ordinary resolution, appoint some fit person, whether a creditor or not, to fill the office of trustee"; and then, upon that person being appointed, a certificate by the Board of Trade is given certifying his appointment. I do not think I need pursue that further.

Then I think the next important section is section 54: "Until a trustee is appointed, the official receiver shall be the trustee for the purposes of this Act, and immediately on a debtor being adjudged bankrupt the property of the bankrupt shall vest in the trustee."

These are the sections we have to deal with. It follows that the order by which a man is adjudicated a bankrupt, and which by the rules has to be in writing and in a particular form, is simply to the effect that So-and-so has been adjudged bankrupt. Is that a deed or conveyance within the meaning of the statute of Anne? It appears to me to be scarcely necessary to ask the question to obtain the answer that it is not. No doubt the effect of it is that all the property vested in the debtor becomes vested in the trustee, but that does not make the order a conveyance. There is none of the framework of a deed or conveyance, there is no conveying party, no grantor, no grantee, and there is nothing which can by any stretch of imagination convert it from the one to the other. That is the simple answer to this question. It is not a deed or a conveyance. Neither is it a secret document which requires to be brought within the statute of Anne. Anybody can go to the place where a person has been adjudicated a bankrupt and make inquiries. It is neither difficult to find out nor is there anything secret about it at all, and it is not within the mischief. But then a difficulty is created by sub-section 4 of section 54, which, referring to the appointment of a trustee, says: "The certificate of appointment of a trustee" —that is, under section 21—"shall, for all purposes of any law in force in any part of the British dominions requiring registration, enrolment, or recording of conveyances or assignments of property, be deemed to be a conveyance or assignment of property, and may be registered, enrolled, and recorded accordingly." Why that is put in I am not prepared to say. In order to understand it, it would be necessary to go back more in detail than I have been enabled to do into the previous legislation and trace out and see the reproduction in a modern form of an old provision which is certainly to be found in the Act of 1849, and, I believe, in some previous Bankruptcy Acts. I have not worked that out, but there is this observation to be made upon it, that in 1883, when the Legislature was saying what should be a conveyance or assignment, they omitted the order of adjudication and said a "certificate"; and here there is no certificate required, in other words there is nothing which can by any fair interpretation be brought within the statute of Anne, and, as I have already said, it is not within the mischief at all.

Then some reliance was placed upon some general language of Lord Cairns in Credland v. Potter. But Lord Cairns was there dealing with an equitable mortgage and there was the creating of a further charge, and his lordship says it ought to come within the statute of Anne, and I have no doubt says so quite correctly considering the interpretation put upon that statute. It would be straining the language to hold that this adjudication in bankruptcy requires to be registered. The idea is perfectly new, and I say that the contention cannot be supported.

It is therefore quite unnecessary to say anything about forcing on the purchaser a doubtful title or a law suit, or anything of the kind. In my opinion the objection is a perfectly sound one and the vendor has no title against the trustee in bankruptcy. The appeal must therefore be allowed.

CHITTY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The contention of the respondent which was accepted by Kekewich, J., is that the order of adjudication was a conveyance within the statute of Anne, and, not being upon the register, this—I cannot say this order, but the conveyance effected by the Act of Parliament—is fraudulent and void. I accept entirely the statement by Lord Cairns in Credland v. Potter that there is no magical meaning in the word "conveyance," and his lordship there goes on to say it denotes an instrument which carries from one person to another an interest in land. An Act of Parliament would not be within the meaning of that language. Then is the adjudication order, on the true construction of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, a "conveyance"? In my opinion it is not. Now, the principal sections to be dealt with are the 20th and the 54th. It is by force of the enactment that the property passes, but it passes on the adjudication. It does not pass by virtue of the adjudication so as to make the adjudication order a conveyance. That, I think, is plain on the language of the 20th section, which says "thereupon" the property shall be vested in the trustee. Then as regards section 54, sub-section (4), I think it right to add an observation or two. That fourth sub-section appears historically to be a reproduction under a short form of the 143rd section of the Act of 1849, which was a reproduction almost in words of the enactment in the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 56, with the necessary modifications having regard to the change in the mode of passing the bankrupt's property. The Act of Will. 4 allowed the registration, to put it quite shortly, of the appointment of the assignees in bankruptcy. The old statute, as is well known, required a deed of conveyance; then there were again modifications which are also equally well known, resulting at last in a vesting through the statute. But then there were careful provisions introduced to show what should be registered for the purposes of the Registry Act. Now, in section 54 it is the appointment of the trustee which may be registered, and that is to be deemed a conveyance of the property. That was for the sake of convenience. We have therefore in the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, an express enactment with respect to the registration of the appointment of the trustee, but there is no such enactment with regard to the registration of the order of adjudication. It follows that the Legislature had its attention directed to the question of what should be deemed to be a conveyance, and what might registered under the statute of Anne, but it is nowhere said that the order of adjudication is to be deemed to be a conveyance, nor has it said one word about it being registered. I agree with what the Master of the Rolls has said, and I never heard of the registration of an adjudication in bankruptcy. To sum up my remarks on this point, it is by the force of the statute that the property passes, and not by virtue of the order as if it were a conveyance. The result is that I agree with the Master of the Rolls that this order cannot stand on the general point that has been argued.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, and I cannot usefully add anything to the reasons that have been given.

Married woman—Bankruptcy—Married woman not trading separately from her husband—Receiving order — Marriage after petition presented — Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1, sub-section 5.

A receiving order in bankruptcy cannot be made against a married woman not trading separately from her husband, notwithstanding that she was a spinster when the debt was incurred, judgment obtained, the act of bankruptcy committed, and the petition presented, and when, at a preliminary hearing of the petition, she admitted the debt and the act of bankruptcy.

Appeal by the debtor, a married woman, against a receiving order made by Registrar Giffard.

In December, 1897, proceedings were taken against the debtor, then a spinster, by a person who alleged himself to be her creditor for a sum of over £200.

In January, 1898, the plaintiff obtained judgment for a sum of £212 10s. 2d., respecting debt and costs. The debtor, having failed to comply with the requirements of a bankruptcy notice served by another creditor in November, 1897, in respect of another debt, the plaintiff then presented a bankruptcy petition against her.

The petition came on for hearing on the 22nd of February, 1898, when, the debt and the act of bankruptcy having been admitted, the further hearing was adjourned till the 3rd of March, 1898.

On the 2nd of March, 1898, the debtor was married. In the subsequent proceedings it was admitted that she was not trading separately from her husband.

On the 3rd of March, 1898, the debtor admitting the debt and the act of bankruptcy, and undertaking not to ask for costs against the petitioner if the petition should be dismissed, the hearing was further adjourned. After another adjournment the petition was disposed of on the 24th of March, 1898, when Registrar Giffard, following a decision of Registrar Linklater, in an unreported case in 1894, made a receiving order against the debtor. There was no other decision covering the question which arose in the present case as to the liability of a married woman in such circumstances to be made a bankrupt.

The debtor appealed.

F. Cooper Willis, for the appeal, referred to section 1, sub-section 5, and section 13 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882; In re Gardiner, Ex parte Coulson, 36 W. R. 142, 20 Q. B. [COLLINS, L.J., referred to Ex parte Jones, In re Grissell, 28 W. R. 287, 12 Ch. D. 484.]

The petitioning creditor did not appear.

LINDLEY, M.R.—I do not think we should gain anything by further consideration of this case. It appears to us that upon the true construction of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the order appealed against cannot be supported, and must be discharged. The case is certainly a peculiar one. An action was brought against this lady, the debtor, before she was married, and judgment was obtained against her. She committed an act of bankruptcy, and a bankruptcy petition was then presented. All that, of course, was regular enough. When the petition came on for hearing she succeeded in inducing the court to let it stand over for a time, and before a receiving order was made she got married; and now she says that no such order can properly be made against her as a married woman.

I think the view of the law put forward on her behalf is the right one. If you look at the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, and at the decisions upon it, such cases as Ex parte Holland, In re Heneage; In re Gardiner, Ex parte Coulson; and Ex parte Jones, In re Grissell, it is plain that a married woman can be made bankrupt in respect of her separate estate only when trading separately from her husband. The receiving order appealed against must therefore be discharged, but of course without costs.

Solicitor—Executor-trustee—Will—Power to solicitor to make professional charges—Insolvent estate—Creditors' action.

A professional trustee or executor is not entitled to charge profit-costs under a power in a will, if the testator's estate is insolvent.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 247, [1898] 1 Ch. 297), affirmed.

This was an appeal from a decision of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 247, [1898] 1 Ch. 297), that a solicitor-trustee who was empowered by a will to make professional charges was not entitled, on the estate being found insolvent, to any profit-costs of acting as solicitor to the estate as against creditors.

The testator, who died in 1891, appointed Mr. Franklin, a solicitor, with two other gentlemen, trustees and executors of his will. By a clause therein Mr. Franklin was to be allowed all professional and other charges for time and trouble which as a solicitor he would have been entitled to make had he not been an executor.

The testator's estate was insolvent, and the will was proved by Mr. Franklin alone, the other two executors having disclaimed.

An action being brought by creditors against Mr. Franklin as sole executor was defended by him in person, and he acted as solicitor for himself. A summons was then taken out by the creditors for a declaration that the testator's estate being insufficient to pay his debts in full Mr. Franklin was not entitled to any profit-costs by reason of the declaration in the testator's will.

Kekewich, J., following In re Thorley, Thorley v. Massam, 39 W. R. 565, [1891] 2 Ch. 613, held that the power to make professional charges given by the will was a legacy, and that the executor was, under the circumstances, not entitled to profit-costs.

The executor appealed.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and J. G. Wood, for the appellant, used arguments similar to those in the court below.

Farwell, Q.C., and C. G. Church, for the respondent, were not called upon to argue.

LINDLEY, M.R.—I do not think it is possible for us to differ judicially from the decision of the learned judge in the court below. This is a creditor's action. The defendant Franklin is a trustee who happens to be a solicitor, and happens to be the only trustee and the only executor of the testator. The two other executors and trustees disclaimed, and must therefore be disregarded. It is impossible to get over the authorities and the principles on which they are based. The estate is insolvent, and the solicitor is seeking to charge profit-costs upon the ground that the will of the testator contains a clause enabling him to do so. Kekewich, J., has declared that, having regard to the insolvency of the estate, the defendant is not entitled to any profit-costs, notwithstanding the declaration contained in the testator's will. Looking at the decision, I do not see how we can come to any other conclusion, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

CHITTY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I see no escape from the proposition of law laid down by Kekewich, J. The law is that, in the absence of a direction to the contrary, a trustee must give his services gratuitously. The declaration made by the testator is bounty on his part. No one can claim the bounty until the creditors are satisfied. The principle applies not only to solicitor-trustees, but to all trustees, to accountant-trustees, to architect-trustees, and surveyor-trustees; in fact, to all professional trustees.

Solicitor—Costs—Country solicitor—Attendance at hearing in London—Originating summons—R. S. C., 1883, App. N., Nos. 173, 174.

The taxing officer has a discretion, in rare and exceptional cases, to allow the costs of the attendance of a country solicitor at the hearing of a cause tried in London even where all the evidence is taken by affidavit.

Per Byrne, J.—The principles upon which taxation should proceed in a district registry are the same as those acted upon in cases commenced in London.

Summons.

This was an application to review taxation as between party and party in respect of allowances by the district registrar at Liverpool for the attendances of Liverpool solicitors in London on the hearing of an originating summons, all the evidence having been by affidavit. The originating summons had been taken out in the district registry at Liverpool by persons who were entitled to one-fourth of the estate of John Dixon (deceased) in the matter of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, and asked for the removal of the trustees of the estate, who were defendants, on the ground of misconduct, and was equivalent to a hostile action, although commenced by summons. It came on for hearing before Byrne, J., as the judge to whom the Chancery matters of the Manchester and Liverpool district registries were specially assigned, on the 18th of February last, and again on the 26th of the same month. Judgment was delivered on the 26th of March, when the summons was dismissed with costs. During these proceedings Messrs. Tyrer & Co., of Liverpool, as agents for Messrs. Donald & Co., of Carlisle, conducted the case for some of the defendants (including two of the trustees), coming up to London for the purpose; and Messrs. Norris & Sons, of Liverpool, did the same for the third trustee.

Upon taxation before the district registrar at Liverpool, Messrs. Tyrer & Co. brought in a bill of costs which included the following items:

161.—Feb. 18.	Attending court when case part heard and adjourned to the 26th inst. . .	6	6	0
62. ,, ,,	Paid railway fare and expenses	5	5	0
164. ,, 26.	Attending adjourned hearing	6	6	0
165. ,, ,,	Paid railway fare and expenses	5	5	0

Messrs. Norris & Sons' bill contained similar items.

The plaintiffs objected to the whole of items 162 and 165, and to so much of items 161 and 164 as exceeded the amount which would have been allowed had the solicitors instructed their London agents to make the attendances to which these items related, and they made the same objection to the corresponding items on the bill of Messrs. Norris & Sons. The registrar allowed these items. The plaintiffs now applied by summons that their objections might be allowed, and that it should be referred back to the district registrar to vary his certificate accordingly.

A. à Becket Terrell, for the applicants.—When a Liverpool solicitor conducts a case in the High Court in London he must do so upon the same terms as any other solicitor practising in the High Court, and cannot charge for coming to court merely because he lives at a distance (ord. 45, r. 27 (43)). The district registry is part of the High Court. Why should his expenses of coming to London be allowed any more than those of a barrister who has to do the same thing? The rule is that the attendance of the country solicitor at the hearing is not allowed: Ex parte Snow, In re Sherwell, W. N. [1879], p. 22. This rule is never relaxed in cases where the evidence is by affidavit, as here. The cases of The Soto, 41 W. R. 479, [1893] P. 73, and Bell v. Aitkin, 16 W. R. 704, L. R. 3 C. P. 320, were cases of evidence vivâ voce.

F. M. Preston, for some of the respondents.—The registrar has a discretion to allow for these attendances of the country solicitor: The Soto; Bell v. Aitkin; In re Forster, Ex parte Dickins, 26 W. R. 915, 8 Ch. D. 598; In re Storer, 32 W. R. 767, 26 Ch. D. 189. Here the registrar was right in exercising his discretion in favour of allowing the charges; the case was one where it was specially desirable that the country solicitor who knew all the facts should be present, as charges of gross misconduct were made.

Rotch, for other of the respondents, referred to Vol. 2 of the Annual Practice, 1898, App. N., Nos. 173 and 174, p. 202.

His lordship reserved judgment to consult the taxing-masters.

July 1.—BYRNE, J.—In my opinion, so far as the Chancery Division is concerned, the rules and practice in respect of the taxation of party and party costs are the same in the London taxing-masters' offices and in the offices of the district registrars of Liverpool and Manchester, and I consider that such rules and practice apply in respect of cases heard in London exactly as if proceedings had been initiated in any other district registry than those of Liverpool and Manchester and were taxed in London.

In other words the district registry in Liverpool and Manchester ought to act upon the same principles as the London taxing-masters act in taxing costs where the proceedings have been commenced in district registries in other parts of the country.

I have given the matter careful consideration and have made inquiry of two of the London taxing-masters.

In the result I am satisfied that there is no such hard-and-fast rule as that suggested by the plaintiff's counsel—namely, that in no case where all the evidence is taken by affidavit ought the costs of the attendance of the country solicitor to be allowed.

On the contrary I believe it to be in accordance with the existing practice to allow such costs in certain rare and exceptional cases in the exercise of the discretion of the taxing officer. This discretion ought to be and is exercised with the utmost care and caution. One of the London taxing-masters informs me that he does not think he has allowed such costs on a party and party taxation in more than about half-a-dozen instances. I can well understand that cases do occur where personal fraud or misconduct has been charged and has failed, where all the preliminary proceedings have been taken in the district registry, and where all these facts are known in the offices of the country solicitor, that the taxing officer may fairly consider the presence in London of the country solicitor to be reasonably necessary for the conduct of the defendants' case. At the same time it affords no reason at all for exercising the discretion that no London agent has been employed.

If the charges for attendance of the country solicitor are allowed in the rare and exceptional cases referred to, it is not in accordance with the practice as I understand it to allow charges also for the attendance of the London solicitor.

I have confined my remarks to cases arising in the Chancery Division, and I do not consider that I am departing from the general rule laid down in the case of The Soto, [1893] P. 73. My view is that upon a party and party taxation the costs of an unsuccessful litigant are not to be increased simply by reason of the opponent client, or his local solicitor in Liverpool or Manchester, electing that such solicitor should attend in London instead of employing a London agent; that no different rule or practice ought to prevail upon taxation before a Liverpool or Manchester district registrar than that prevailing upon taxation in London of the costs arising in any other of the numerous district registries throughout the country; and that the discretion of the taxing officer ought always to be exercised in such a matter (as I have no reason to doubt it is) with very great care and only in exceptional cases. The present case was a very exceptional one, and the discretion of the taxing officer having been exercised with care and after consultation with a most experienced London taxing-master, I am not prepared to interfere with such discretion or to go into the question of the amount of the allowances complained of.

I may add that the Forms 173 and 174 in Appendix N. to the R. S. C., 1883, Annual Practice, vol. 2, p. 202, cited by respondent's counsel, have no bearing upon the present case inasmuch as they do not apply to cases heard in London or Middlesex.

The plaintiff appealed.

A. à B. Terrell, for the appeal.

Preston (Eve, Q.C., with him), for certain defendants.

Rotch, for other defendants.

[The arguments were the same as in the court below.]

LINDLEY, M.R.—I am not disposed to quarrel with the judgment of Byrne, J. Bearing in mind the nature of the proceedings and the very serious character of the attack which was made on the conduct of both the defendants, I do not think it can be said to have been at all unreasonable that the solicitor in the country, who knew not only what was in the affidavits but a great deal more which was not in them, and who was in a position to explain a great many things which might be referred to in the course of so complicated a litigation—I do not think it was unreasonable that he should attend at the hearing in London. On the contrary, I think Byrne, J., was quite right in holding that it was reasonable he should so attend. That disposes of the case. The appeal must be dismissed.

CHITTY, L.J.—The rule as to allowances in such cases as this is not inflexible. The country solicitor's attendance in London may in proper cases be allowed for. Byrne, J., has held, after taking great care, and seeing a London taxing-master, that the circumstances here are very exceptional, and that the allowance ought to be made. Now, though it is more difficult where the case is presented by affidavit to make out that the circumstances are of that exceptional character which justifies the allowance, I think there is no inflexible rule against the allowance even where the case is proceeding upon affidavit evidence. Special circumstances are in any case required, and so the district registrar has certified in the answer he has given to the plaintiff's objections. On these grounds, and on these grounds only, I consider that the appeal fails. I say on these grounds only, because I am not disposed to go into the more general question to which the respondents' counsel was desirous of calling our attention, and on which we have not heard him, so that it would not be right for us to express any opinion adverse to what he has said. We sit here to dispose of appeals, and these considerations are sufficient to dispose of the present appeal. The general questions as to Liverpool and Manchester business, and as to originating summonses issued there and the special privileges they are alleged to have, must therefore be left to be settled hereafter when some case calls for a decision on those points.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion.

Married woman — Bankruptcy — Money lent for private purposes—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 3.

Section 3 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, does not apply to a case where money has been advanced by a wife to her husband for a purpose other than that of the husband's trade or business.

Appeal by a creditor from an order of Wright, J., admitting a proof carried in by the wife of the debtor.

The proof was in respect of money lent to the debtor by his wife for the purpose of defraying household expenses.

The Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 3: "Any money or other estate of the wife lent or entrusted by her to her husband for the purpose of any trade or business carried on by him, or otherwise, shall be treated as assets of her husband's estate in case of his bankruptcy, under reservation of the wife's claim to a dividend as a creditor for the amount or value of such money or other estate after, but not before, all claims of the other creditors of the husband for valuable consideration in money or money's worth have been satisfied."

The wife's proof was admitted for voting purposes by the chairman at the first meeting of creditors. Wright, J., held that the proof was rightly admitted.

One of the creditors appealed.

C. A. Russell, Q.C., and Hansell, for the appellant.—The operation of section 3 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, is not confined to cases where the wife advances money for the purpose of her husband's trade or business. The effect of the words "or otherwise" is to include advances for other purposes. It is true that in Ex parte Tidswell, In re Tidswell, 35 W. R. 669, Cave, J., decided contrary to our contention, but that case is inconsistent with the same learned judge's decision in Ex parte Nottingham, In re Tuff, 35 W. R. 567, 19 Q. B. D. 88, and ought not to be followed. Alexander v. Barnhill, 21 L. R. Ir. 511, 37 W. R. Dig. 5, is in point, and is in the appellant's favour.

Frank Mellor (Upjohn, Q.C., with him), for the respondent.—If the appellant's contention as to the effect of "or otherwise" is right, there was no necessity to mention trade or business at all, for the sections would apply to all loans by a wife to a husband. Ex parte Tidswell, In re Tidswell, was followed by Stirling, J., in Mackintosh v. Pogose, 43 W. R. 247, [1895] 1 Ch. 505.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—The appellant's contention in effect is that whenever a wife lends money to her husband and he becomes bankrupt, her claim must be postponed until all the other creditors have been satisfied. The question is whether that is the true construction of section 3 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. I am unable to read the section in that way, for it entirely ignores the words "for the purpose of any trade or business carried on by him, or otherwise." The section is not dealing with every kind of loan that a wife may make to her husband, but with loans for a particular purpose. The words "or otherwise" do no doubt raise a difficulty, but, speaking for myself, I am of opinion that, whatever the true meaning of those words may be, it cannot be that the limitation as to trade or business is to be cut out. I admit that I do not feel at all positive as to what they do mean. In Ex parte Tidswell Cave, J., dealing with this section, said: "I guess, rather than conclude, that the draftsman meant to say, 'any money of the wife lent by her to her husband for the purpose of any trade or business carried on by him, whether alone or in partnership with others, and whether personally or by an agent, &c.,' and that he did not mean to say 'for the purpose of any trade or business carried on by him, or for any other purpose.'" I do not say whether that suggested interpretation is the right one, but I agree with Cave, J.'s, decision that the section does not apply where the money is lent by the wife for purposes other than those of the husband's trade or business.

It is said that Ex parte Tidswell is in conflict with Ex parte Nottingham, In re Tuff. That is not so, for in the latter case the wife's proof was admitted not against the husband but against a firm of which he was a member. I disagree with the decision in Alexander v. Barnhill in so far as that case decides that section 3 applies to advances by a wife to her husband for any purpose whatever. I am therefore of opinion that the contention of the appellant fails and the appeal must be dismissed.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I confess that I have had great difficulty in coming to a conclusion as to what is the proper construction to be placed upon section 3 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. It seems to me to be impossible to give to that section an interpretation which is altogether satisfactory, for there is much to be said against either of the constructions which have been put forward. On the one hand it is contended that the section only applies to the case of a loan by a wife to her husband for the purpose of his business, and the way in which the matter is dealt with does confirm that view, for the Legislature appears to have thought that if a wife is prepared to invest money in her husband's business, it is not fair that she should compete with the other creditors. It is said on the other hand that the section applies to whatever the purpose for which the advance was intended, and that the words "for the purpose of his trade or business" were merely introduced by way of illustration. If that were so, one would have expected to find the word "whether" inserted before those words.

We have been referred to many other passages in the Act where the words "or otherwise" occur, but I do not think these instances afford any assistance, for the difficulty is to ascertain what is the antecedent to the words "otherwise than" in this particular section. The proximate antecedent is "carried on by him," and therefore primâ facie the words can be read so as to include any business whether carried on by the husband or by anyone else, but I do not think that the section was intended to have that wide application. On the other hand, if a business carried on by another person is excluded, then any business of the husband's, whether carried on by himself personally or through an agent, would be his business, and so the words "or otherwise" would be unnecessary. I prefer, however, to adopt the latter construction, which appears to me to be the most reasonable, for I do not think that the section was intended to cover loans to the husband for any purpose whatever, and I prefer to say that the words "or otherwise" must in some way or other be intended to be connected with the words "any business carried on by the husband."

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—Although I entirely agree with what has been said by the other members of the court as to the absurd practical result which would follow if the construction of the section contended for by the appellant were adopted, I wish to say that I think that the construction which the court has to-day put upon the section is that which the court ought to arrive at, by applying the ordinary canons of construction, quite independently of the result which would be the outcome of holding that the section applies to every kind of loan by a wife to her husband. The basis of the rule of construction is that general words following particular words must be restricted to the same genus as the particular words. Now, this section commences with a specific proposition, and that specific proposition is followed by the words "or otherwise," and it seems to me that just as general words are restricted to the same genus as the preceding specific words, so when you have a specific proposition in a section you ought in construing that section to assume, unless compelled to the contrary, that the general words are covered by the specific proposition. In fact general words of this sort can hardly avoid being ancillary to the specific proposition, and the general words ought not to be construed so as to do away with the specific proposition with which the section commences.

transactions applied to purchase of stock for investment—Non-delivery of stock—Damages—Deposit of sums as "cover"—"Cover" not used—Right to recover—Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 109), s. 18.

Gambling transactions between the debtor and the respondent in stocks and shares having resulted in the respondent's favour, the respondent directed the debtor to apply the balance due to him in the purchase of certain railway stock for investment. The debtor purchased the stock but died insolvent without having delivered the stock to the respondent.

Held, that the respondent could not prove against the debtor's estate for damages for non-delivery of the stock.

The respondent deposited with the debtor certain sums as "cover" to secure the debtor against loss on the gambling transactions, but as the transactions resulted in the respondent's favour the "cover" was not used for that purpose.

Held, that the respondent was entitled to prove against the debtor's estate for the amount of the "cover."

Appeal from the decision of Wright, J., admitting the proof of one Waud against the estate of the debtor.

The debtor, who had carried on business as an outside stock and share broker under the name of George Gregory & Co., died insolvent on the 16th of April, 1897. An order was made under section 125 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, for the administration of his estate and a trustee was appointed.

In the beginning of 1897 the debtor was indebted to Waud in a sum of £375, the result of transactions between them which in form purported to be sales and purchases of stocks and shares but which were in fact contracts for differences only. On the 8th of February, 1897, Waud gave an order to the debtor to purchase £200 Great Eastern Railway Stock for investment. On the same day the debtor telegraphed to Waud: "Sold you 200 Easterns 113⅜ invested," and sent a contract note stating that he had sold Waud the stock "to be taken up." The next day Waud instructed the debtor to pay himself for this stock out of the balance in his hands due to Waud. The debtor acquiesced in this arrangement. On the 3rd of April the debtor sold to Waud £200 Dover "A." Stock, payment for which was also to be made out of the balance held by the debtor. In neither case had the debtor at the date of his death forwarded transfers to Waud although continually requested to do so. Sums of money amounting in all to about £60 had been advanced at different times by Waud to the debtor by way of "cover" on specific gambling transactions, but the "cover" had never been appropriated or required because the transactions in respect of which the various sums had been deposited had resulted in favour of Waud. The return of the "cover" was not demanded till after the making of the administration order.

Waud claimed to prove against the debtor's estate for £347, the balance which was admitted by the debtor to be due and which Waud had directed to be applied in payment of the Great Eastern and Dover "A" Stocks, and for £60 the amount of the "cover."

The trustee rejected the proof. On appeal an issue was directed, and the jury found that the transactions between Waud and the debter were gambling transactions with the exception of the purchases of the Great Eastern and Dover "A" Stocks, which were bonâ fide transactions.

On the hearing of the appeal it was agreed that the proof should be amended by making it a claim for damages for the non-delivery of the railway stocks.

Wright, J., held that Waud was entitled to prove against the estate.

The trustee appealed.

Robson, Q.C., and Macaskie, for the appellant.—The jury have found that the balances due to Waud from the debtor resulted from gambling transactions. The Gaming Act, 1845, prevents those balances from being recoverable and Waud cannot put himself in a better position by agreeing to take stock instead of a cash payment, or by claiming damages for non-delivery of the stock. The amounts deposited as cover also come within the Gaming Act and cannot be recovered, for they are sums which "have been deposited to abide the event on which any wager shall have been made" within section 18, the event being the rise or fall of the stocks and shares gambled in.

H. Reed, Q.C., and Israel Davis, for the respondent.—There was a settlement of accounts between Waud and the debtor amounting to an account stated. That is evidence that there was a payment by the debtor to Waud of the amount owing for differences. Wright, J., has found as a fact that there was a payment and that Waud subsequently appropriated the amount to the purchase of the railway stocks. The case, therefore, does not come within the Gaming Act. [They cited Spargo's case, 21 W. R. 306. L. R. 8 Ch. App. 407; Ashby v. James, 11 M. & W. 542.] The sums deposited as "cover" were deposited as security in the event of a loss, which did not occur, and the "cover" was never appropriated or required for the purpose. The Gaming Act does not apply to a deposit made as security for differences: see Lord Herschell's judgment in Universal Stock Exchange v. Strachan.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—This is an appeal from the decision of Wright, J., allowing the appeal of Waud from the rejection by the trustee of the debtor's estate of Waud's proof against the estate, on the ground that the claim arose on contracts which were gaming transactions. The transactions between Waud and the debtor may be shortly summarized as follows: The debtor was an outside broker with whom Waud entered into certain transactions which, although in form they purported to be sales and purchases of stocks, were undoubtedly gaming transactions. The result of these transactions was that at a certain date there was a sum of £375 in the debtor's hands which had been won by Waud, and, apart from the Gaming Act, the debtor was indebted to Waud in that amount and bound in honour to pay. The debtor died insolvent, and an order was made for the administration of his estate in bankruptcy. Waud carried in a proof which was rejected by the trustee on the ground that the claim arose in respect of certain contracts which were gaming transactions. On appeal an issue was directed and the jury found that all the transactions which culminated in the balance of £375 were gaming transactions, but that the purchases of Great Eastern and Dover "A" Stocks which were made after the balance of £375 had been arrived at, were bonâ fide purchases for the purpose of investment, and were not made for the purpose of gaming. An affidavit has, however, been made by Waud which is in exact accordance with what I should have believed to be the case, and from that affidavit it appears that the two purchases of railway stock were to be delivered to Waud and accepted in payment of the £375 which the debtor owed him. It is clear, therefore, that the stocks were purchased with the winnings of the gaming transactions, and it is said on behalf of the trustee that Waud's claim cannot be shaped so as to get quit of that fact. An ingenious argument by Waud's counsel as to what the transaction must have been, induced Wright, J., to disregard the account given by Waud in his affidavit as to what the real transaction was. That argument was that there had been an account stated between Waud and the debtor, and that there was, therefore, evidence that there had been a payment by the debtor of the amount of the balance due to Waud appropriated to the purchase of the railway stocks. An account stated may be evidence of payment, but it is not conclusive, and the question is whether there has been payment or not. How can we say in this case that there has been a payment of the money when Waud in his affidavit says that there was not? It seems to me, therefore, that Wright, J., was wrong in holding that Waud could prove against the estate for the £375, and that upon the true facts he cannot recover it from the debtor's estate either as a balance due to him or as damages for the non-delivery of the stock. On this part of the case I think that the judgment of Wright, J., must be reversed.

Then there is another question, as to the £60 deposited by Waud with the debtor as "cover." Now, we know what "cover" is. It is a sum of money deposited with the broker to secure him against loss in the event of a fall in the stock dealt in. There is nothing in this case to show that the word "cover" was not used in the ordinary sense. The law as to such a deposit is very tersely stated by Lord Herschell in Universal Stock Exchange v. Strachan, [1896] A. C. 166, at p. 173: "It is said that although it may be a gambling contract, yet, nevertheless, the very provisions of the section against gaming and wagering prevent the plaintiff recovering the security which he deposited with the defendants inasmuch as it is 'an article of value' deposited with them to 'abide the event of a wager.' That seems to me not to be the case. It was deposited as security against a debt which might arise from a gambling transaction. What the defendants are really seeking is to avail themselves of that security by virtue of a void contract, and it is impossible to say that that was an 'article of value' deposited with the defendants to abide the event of a wager. That was not really the nature of the transaction at all." That is Lord Herschell's opinion in that case in the House of Lords, in which the decision of this court was affirmed. I only wish to add that I am prepared to abide by everything which I said in the second Strachan case, but I do not think that that applies to this case. Here £60 was deposited as "cover" with the debtor. The gaming transactions have come to an end, with the result that the debtor's estate still has this £60 which belongs to Waud, and which was never required or used for any purpose, and therefore no answer can be set up to the claim for repayment. No question of appropriation arises here as in Strachan v. Universal Stock Exchange (No. 2), because in this case the object with which the money was deposited has come to an end without any necessity having arisen for the use of the money to secure the debtor. As to this part of the case I think that Waud is entitled to succeed.

CHITTY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. A proof has been brought in by Waud against the debtor's estate. Waud has in his full and complete affidavit given a natural and reasonable version of what took place. The effect of it is that instead of receiving payment of the £375 which was owing to him he agreed to take instead the railway stock which had been purchased. Wright, J., disregarded that affidavit in favour of an argument addressed to him by Waud's counsel, but it seems to me that Waud ought not to be permitted to show that his affidavit is untrue. It is unnecessary for me to deal further with this point as I fully agree with everything that A. L. Smith, L.J., has said. I agree also with regard to the sums deposited as "cover." They were deposited as security, and the use of the word "cover" makes no difference. On this point the case comes within the decision of Lord Herschell in Universal Stock Exchange v. Strachan. These sums are free from the taint of gambling, but remain in the debtor's estate. The Gaming Act does not apply, and Waud is entitled to prove against the estate for the £60.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I only wish to add one or two words as to the money deposited. I quite agree that, having regard to a long series of decisions, it is impossible to contend that the Gaming Act prevents a person from recovering the money deposited in respect of a gaming transaction, and it makes no difference whether the money is deposited with a stakeholder or with the other party to the transaction. The result is that a person seeking to recover such a deposit is relegated to his common law rights. Now, what are those common law rights? As I understand the law, it is not true to say that such a person is entitled at all times to recover the deposit. On the contrary, he is only entitled to recover so long as the transaction is incomplete and the money has not been applied to the purpose for which it was intended when deposited. It is easy to dispose of the case where the depositee is the winner in the gaming transactions, for there nothing remains to be done, and the money can be appropriated in satisfaction of his winnings, and when that has been done it is too late for the depositor to recover. But the case is not so clear when the event has been determined in favour of the depositor. In that case we have to consider when can it be said that the transaction in respect of which the money was deposited has come to an end. It might be said that the transaction never comes to an end until the deposit has been returned, because it would always be true to say that the money has not been dealt with under a gaming contract, and therefore that it is open to the depositor at any time to bring an action to recover back the deposit. I am not sure that I should be prepared to go that length, but fortunately it is not necessary to decide that particular point in this case, because it seems to me that the money here was not deposited as a mere stake to pass to one or other of the parties, according as the event happened, but was deposited as security, the whole or part of which might, according to the event which occurred, have to remain with the depositee or be paid back to the depositor. In point of fact nothing could be done until the parties agreed as to how the deposit was to be dealt with, and I understand from the evidence that there was no agreement as to how the deposit was to be dealt with in the circumstances which have arisen. It follows that the depositor has at a time when the transaction is still executory elected to demand back the sums deposited and to say that he will not go on further with the gaming transaction in respect of which the deposit was made. That being so, I agree with the other members of the court that in such a case the depositor is entitled to have his money back.

PERRINS v. BELLAMY. (a.)

Trustee—Breach of trust—Sale of leaseholds—No power of sale—Court's power to excuse—Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 3.

Where leaseholds were held upon trust for certain persons for life, and after the death of the survivor of them upon trust for their children, and the trustees of the settlement, which did not contain a power of sale, acting bonâ fide, and, as they believed, in the best interests of the trust estate, sold the leaseholds, they were held to be entitled, under section 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, to be relieved from personal liability on the ground that they had acted "honestly and reasonably, and ought fairly to be excused for the breach of trust."

By an indenture of settlement dated the 23rd of October, 1879, Elijah Barnett assigned to trustees (inter alia) certain leasehold houses situated at Edgbaston for the respective residues then unexpired (which ranged from 52 to 73 years) of the several terms of years under which the premises were then held upon trust to pay the income thereof to his wife Charlotte Barnett for her life, and after her death to his daughters, the defendant Eliza Barnett and the plaintiff Alice Mary Perrins, during their lives in equal shares, and after the decease of one of them to pay the income of her share to her children as therein directed until the decease of the survivor of them, and in case there should be no child of the daughter first dying then upon trust to pay the whole income to the survivor of them for her life, and after the decease of the survivor upon trust to stand possessed of the trust estate and the proceeds thereof for the children of his daughters as therein directed. The settlement conferred no power upon the trustees to sell the leasehold property.

Alice Mary Perrins was married to the plaintiff F. H. Perrins on the 9th of September, 1880, and there were two infant children of the marriage now living. The defendant Eliza Barnett was not married.

Elijah Barnett died on the 10th of February, 1888, and Charlotte Barnett on the 26th of February, 1895.

On the 10th of May, 1895, the trustees of the settlement offered for sale by public auction at Birmingham in eleven lots the whole of the leasehold premises comprised in the settlement. The purchasers of nine of the lots completed, but an objection was taken with regard to the remaining two lots that the trustees had no power of sale, and upon that objection being upheld by his lordship on a vendor and purchaser summons, the respective purchasers of those lots refused to complete and the lots remained unsold.

This was an action by Alice Mary Perrins and her two infant children by their father as next friend, as plaintiffs, against the trustees of the settlement and Eliza Barnett, as defendants.

By their statement of claim the plaintiffs alleged that the trustees had committed a breach of trust in selling the leasehold property when they had no power of sale; that the property was sold contrary to the expressed desire of the plaintiff Alice Mary Perrins; that the property was situate in a good position and let to good tenants at good rentals, and ought to have been retained in the interests of the trust estate; that the trustees had committed a breach of trust in not investing £3,700, part of the proceeds of sale, until the 16th of January, 1898, and in not investing £700, part of the same moneys, up to the present time, and in not paying the proper amount of income to the plaintiff Alice Mary Perrins; and that the trust estate had been reduced in value by the alleged breaches of trust, and the income of the plaintiff Alice Mary Perrins greatly reduced thereby. The plaintiffs claimed (1) a declaration that the defendant trustees had been guilty of a breach of trust in selling the leasehold premises; (2) an inquiry as to the loss accrued to the trust estate and to Alice Mary Perrins by reason of such breach; and (3) that the defendant trustees might be ordered to make good to the trust estate all such loss. The plaintiffs also asked for the removal of the trustees, the delivery of proper accounts, and the execution of the trusts of the settlement by the court so far as might be necessary. In their defence the defendants admitted that they had no express power of sale under the settlement, but alleged that they had an implied power. They denied that the property was let at good rentals, that it should have been retained in the interest of the trust estate, and that they sold contrary to the desire of the plaintiff Alice Mary Perrins. They alleged that the making up of the accounts and the investment of the proceeds of sale were delayed by the vendor and purchaser summons above mentioned, and that they had no balance thereof in their hands, such balance having been expended in the payment of estate duty payable on the death of Mrs. Barnett. They submitted that if they had committed a breach of trust in selling the property they had acted honestly and reasonably in making such sale, and ought fairly to be excused for such breach of trust (if any) and for omitting to obtain the direction of the court in the matter, and they claimed the benefit of section 3 of the Trustee Act, 1896.

[The further facts and the evidence material to the present report are sufficiently set out in the judgment.]

Bramwell Davis, Q.C., and Tyrrell, for the plaintiffs.—It is not denied that the sale of these leaseholds was a breach of trust, and that being so, we ought to be put in the same position in which we were before the sale. The trustees did not take such steps as were reasonable before they sold. They did not take the opinion of counsel, nor did they consult with the tenants for life; in fact they sold in direct opposition to Mrs. Perrins' wish. They have not acted "reasonably" within the meaning of the Act, and they ought not to be excused for the breach of trust either wholly or partially: In re Kay, ante, p. 74, [1897] 2 Ch. 518.

Warrington, Q.C., and S. B. L. Druce, for the defendant trustees, were not called upon.

Bardswell, for the defendant Eliza Barnett.

KEKEWICH, J.—In this case the main question is, to my mind, one of extreme difficulty, and it has been so treated when it has arisen in different circumstances before other judges. That difficulty is to find out the real meaning which the court ought to put on section 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, and how that meaning ought to be applied to particular facts. The difficulty that is presented to my mind now, and that has presented itself to my mind for some time past, although the Act of course is not new to me, is that in a few words intended no doubt to be perfectly clear and expressive, the Legislature has thought fit to interfere with well-established doctrines of the Court of Chancery and the Chancery Division, doctrines which are to be found not only in numerous authorities, but also in text-books ancient and modern, which are accepted as authorities and as expressing the view of the profession respecting the law relating to trustees and their cestuis que trustent. It is extremely difficult—in fact I do not hesitate to confess at once that it is beyond my powers—to say within the limits of a judgment, or at all, what is the full extent of the Act. The difficulty arises from the fact that you are dealing with a large body of law, and a few words are intended to introduce large alterations in that law. What are those alterations? and how are they to be applied? That is the difficulty.

Now, before I go to the details of this case I will just apply the Act to the skeleton of it. Here there is a breach of trust. It is distinctly a breach of trust, and Mr. Warrington is unable, in this court at any rate, to say that the trustees had power to sell the leaseholds, and it follows that if any ill consequences result from that breach of trust the trustees are responsible in respect of them. How that responsibility ought to be enforced, and what are the extent and limit of the remedy of the cestuis que trustent is another question. Broadly speaking, they are responsible for it, but the foundation of this statute is that the trustee is or may be personally liable for a breach of trust. I am accordingly bound to look at the rest of the section from the point of view that the breach of trust itself is not to render the trustee personally liable for that breach of trust. I leave out the intervening words which only make the Act retrospective, and then I see why generally the trustee is to be excused. He is not to be held liable if he has acted "honestly and reasonably, and ought fairly to be excused for the breach of trust." "Honestly" I leave out of consideration, for in this case, as in a large majority of the cases which come before the courts, the trustees have acted honestly; sometimes there is dishonesty and then one has really very little concern with a breach of trust, because the dishonesty puts it out of sight, although, of course, the dishonesty and the breach of trust are intimately connected. The Legislature has made it a condition precedent to being relieved from liability that the trustee should act honestly, but that is not the gist of the position. The gist is in the words "and reasonably, and ought fairly to be excused for the breach of trust." How much those later words add to "reasonably" I am at a loss to say, but I suppose there are or may be cases in which a trustee may act reasonably and yet ought not fairly to be excused for a breach of trust. Here these trustees, perhaps it may be said, even though they acted reasonably in selling the property, ought not fairly to be excused because Mrs. Perrins objected to the sale when it was brought to her notice.

I can conceive such an argument because the copulative words are added, and the trustees are not only to be held to have acted reasonably, but it must also be held that they ought to be fairly excused for the breach of trust. But I venture to think, nevertheless, that unless some case can be made against the trustees of a strong character, if they are within the meaning of the Act then they are entitled to be relieved and may fairly claim to be relieved, and it would not be incumbent on the court to consider whether they ought fairly to be excused for the breach of trust unless there was evidence to show that that provision did not apply. I will not say anything more about that, because in this case I do not think that there is any reason why the trustees ought not fairly to be excused for the breach of trust if they acted reasonably. Here the question, and the only question, really is whether they acted reasonably. I say "the only question" knowing that there is something else towards the end of the section; and the presence of that something else must not be passed over, although it is almost as great a puzzle as the words to which I have just referred. I allude to the words "and for omitting to obtain the directions of the court in the matter in which he committed such breach." I have not yet mastered the sense of that, and I do not understand how a trustee is to be excused for a breach of trust without being excused also for omitting to obtain the directions of the court, nor do I understand how he could be excused for omitting to obtain the direction of the court without also being excused for committing the breach of trust. I do not see how he can be excused in the one case and not in the other. The additional words, if I may venture to guess, must, I think, have been by amendment to the original section without full regard to the meaning of that section. I hope that is not an improper aspersion on the wisdom of the Legislature.

It strikes me that the words have crept in there without due regard to the antecedent language. But it never was, so far as I know, a reason for holding a trustee liable that he omitted to obtain the direction of the court. It may sometimes be a reason for guiding the court in a matter of costs, and a reason for guiding the court in saying whether the trustee has acted reasonably or not; and particularly in these days, when the decision of the court on an originating summons may be obtained expeditously and cheaply. But, if the trustee has acted reasonably, I cannot myself see why, having come to the conclusion that he has acted reasonably, one should go on to consider independently whether he has omitted to obtain the direction of the court or not. So much on the meaning of the Act.

I now return to the question whether these gentlemen have acted reasonably, remembering, and I think it is so important to remember that I will repeat it, that it is "acted reasonably" in a breach of trust. Now, what was the breach of trust here? Selling this property. A great deal has been made on behalf of the plaintiffs of the trustees selling it when they had no power of sale. That was a breach of trust. If they had sold it, having a power of sale, of course the plaintiffs could not have succeeded at all without making out that they had exercised that power dishonestly or unreasonably. It is possible, of course, to make trustees liable for exercising a power without proper discretion, exercising it, perhaps, against advice, or under circumstances which lead the court to the conclusion that they really were not doing their duty at all. But the Act seems to me, for the purpose of construing it, to place a sale of property such as this, with or without power on the same footing. You cannot approach it, you cannot apply the Act at all if there was a power of sale, because then there is no breach of trust. Therefore the Act seems to say—applying it to this case—that where trustees, having no power or trust for sale of leaseholds sell those leaseholds, but reasonably, and they ought fairly to be excused, then they may be relieved. Therefore the point to be considered is whether they sold reasonably. If they sold reasonably, then, notwithstanding that the sale was a breach of trust, they may be excused. Therefore I repeat the real question is, whether they sold reasonably, and it is to that that I propose to devote the rest of my judgment.

This property was settled as leasehold. It consisted of a number of houses held for fairly long terms; some of them have been called short and some long, but they were fairly long terms, and it is quite possible according to my knowledge of what those competent to advise do advise on such subjects, that they would have realized quite as much a few years later as they did in 1895. But the terms were not so short, speaking only from my experience and from advice I have often heard, as to say that it became imperative to consider whether the houses should be sold or not. Some of the terms were short and some were long. The trustees' attention to the peculiar character of the property seems to have been called by the necessity of raising £600 for estate duty. If they had a power of sale I apprehend no reasonable man would say that they were wrong in raising that £600, possibly by mortgage, but raising it out of the leasehold property rather than by a sale of a first-class trustees' investment. Supposing that they had a power of sale, I cannot conceive that any question could be made or sustained against them for raising the money out of the leaseholds rather than out of the investments, so I pass that over and say no more about it. The payment of the duty is called to their attention, and they apparently determine, without much more consideration, to sell some of the shorter terms. But they inquired about the other property and they took advice. I have had before me to-day the gentleman by whom they were advised, about whose position and competency not a word has been said, therefore that is not in question. I have also his report. Now, for my present purpose I will assume that he is entirely wrong. I will assume that his view of this property was one which has not only been contradicted by facts up to the present time, but will be contradicted by facts in the future. That is by no means my conclusion on the facts I have heard, but I will nevertheless make that assumption. The trustees were entitled to be advised by a professional man. They would have acted to my mind unreasonably if they had not been advised by a competent man, and they are entitled to act on opinions so given. In my judgment they would act unreasonably, I do not say within the meaning of the Act, but they would act unreasonably if they did not act upon opinions so given, or at any rate take another opinion so as to correct the first. The advice they received was perfectly distinct. I have it before me in the report, and the evidence only went to show that the gentleman who conducted the personal investigation, with a knowledge of the neighbourhood, still stands by the opinion he then expressed. He says he finds the property very badly built, and in a very bad state of repair; the interior fittings of the houses require renewing in many instances. There are no bath-rooms, no hot water apparatus in the rooms; in only one instance is there a water-closet in the yard, the remainder of the closets being of the old-fashioned midden type which are being condemned by the corporation. To put these matters right and to bring the houses up to the standard of modern requirements would need a very considerable outlay. I leave entirely out of my consideration his conclusion that in his opinion the property is a very undesirable one to be held by trustees. He does say so, but that was a matter with which he was not directly concerned. It was not at all an improper remark for him to make in that connection, but it was for the trustees to consider, with the assistance of their legal adviser, whether, on the report on these houses, they ought or ought not to realize the property. It certainly strikes me that the trustees, having a power of sale, which they assumed they had—they did not doubt it—had no alternative; perhaps I ought not to go quite so far as that, for it was open to them to communicate with the ladies who were entitled to moieties for life, and to consult them as to whether it would be desirable to pay for all those repairs out of income, and establish a sinking fund to provide against what they might anticipate to be a large ultimate loss. That would have been reasonable enough, but I cannot say that the trustees were unreasonable in not doing that, if they supposed that they had a power of sale. Of course we all know that it would have been very much better if they had communicated with the ladies and not acted independently; but they thought they would act independently, and that was the essence of their breach of trust. Strange to say, I know from Mrs. Perrins that she only thought, and Mr. Perrins seems to have been of the same opinion, that the trustees could not sell without her consent. She never thought that they could not sell at all; and really she was right, because with the assistance of the Settled Land Act she, as tenant for life, and the trustees could have made a good title. A further appointment of the trustees would have been necessary under the Act which might have been carried through, and, indeed, that course was suggested subsequently. That was the position in which the trustees were. They had determined, and properly enough if they had the power, to sell some of the shorter leases for the purpose of raising the estate duty. Then they were confronted with this opinion, which told them, I think, as reasonable men either that they ought to sell the whole, or that they might possibly deal with the property in some other way. The only answer to that, so far as I know, and the only answer that has been attempted, is this: Mrs. Perrins was entitled —I say Mrs. Perrins, but Miss Barnett also—to have the income of this property during her life, in repair or out of repair, whether with bath-rooms and hot water or not. She was entitled to have such rent as could be got out of this property during her life; that is her view, and it is strictly the case. But the trustees had other duties to perform besides giving Mrs. Perrins what she was entitled to. They had to consider Mrs. Perrins' children, who will ultimately become entitled to this property (it being assumed that there will be no children of Miss Barnett), and that they will take the whole of it, at any rate in any event they will take half of it. The trustees were bound to consider these children, and I am a little astonished at the father coming forward as next friend and saying that it was not to the interest of his children that the property should be sold. I do not know Mrs. Perrins' age, but I will assume that she will live twenty, thirty, or more years; at the end of that time these leaseholds will be running out, even the longest of them will be a very short term. These children will then be perhaps married and started in life and wanting money; they will want to make a settlement, or to raise money on mortgage, or otherwise to provide for those that come after them. Where will that fund be? There will be nothing. In their interest I cannot for a moment doubt that the trustees have done the very best thing they possibly could. They have realized the property for as much as it was worth, and the result is that these children will be provided with a substantial sum in lieu of a wasting property which would be of very little use to them, and if they live the ordinary length of life would be all gone before themselves. As regards the children, I cannot see a shadow of damage, I cannot see how the action can be maintained at all, and having heard the evidence I have no doubt myself that had there been a reference to chambers it would have been decided that this was not an action for the benefit of the infants. There is no doubt, however, that it is sustainable by Mrs.

Perrins, but for the reasons I have given I think she fails to make out her case. I do not say what would have happened if it had not been for this Act of 1896. Probably I should have had to direct an inquiry, and make the trustees pay the costs up to and including the trial; but I am stopped, it seems to me, from going in to those matters by the conviction that although they have committed a breach of trust, yet they acted reasonably, and therefore they stand in the same position as if they had a power of sale and exercised it in such circumstances that there is nothing to be said against them. That being so, my conclusion is that on that, the main part of the case, Mrs. Perrins' action fails as well as that of the infants.

His lordship then considered the minor breaches of trust alleged against the trustees and decided that they ought not to be held liable in respect of them.

D'ESTERRE v. WAVERLEY TYPEWRITER. (a.)

Company—Winding up—Debentures—Floating charge—Preferential payment—Retrospective—Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 62)—Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Amendment Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 19).

The Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1897, is not retrospective in its action, so that those persons who, under that Act, are given priority for their wages, &c., over the debenture-holders are not entitled to the benefit of the Act where a receiver was appointed by the debenture-holders before the date when the Act came into force.

The Waverley Typewriter (Limited) had issued debentures creating a floating charge on all its capital. The company stopped business early in 1897, and on the 18th of May the plaintiff issued a writ on behalf of himself and the other debenture-holders to realize the debenture securites.

On the 19th of May a petition to wind up the company was presented. A receiver was appointed in the debenture-holders' action on the 21st of May, and on the 2nd of June a winding-up order was made.

On the 15th of July, 1897, the Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Amendment Act, 1897, received the Royal Assent. Section 3 of that Act is as follows: "In case a receiver is appointed on behalf of the holders of any debentures or debenture stock of a company secured by a floating charge, or in case possession is taken by or on behalf of such debenture-holders of any property comprised in or subject to such charge, then and in each of such cases, if the company is not at the time in course of being wound up, the debts mentioned in section 1 of the said Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888, shall be paid forthwith out of any assets coming to the hands of the receiver or other person taking possession as aforesaid in priority to any claim for principal or interest in respect of such debentures or debenture stock. And the periods of time mentioned in the said Act shall be reckoned from the date of the appointment of the receiver or possession being taken as aforesaid, as the case may be. And any payments made under this section shall be recouped as far as may be out of the assets of the company available for payment of general creditors."

The summons raised the question whether the Act was retrospective so as to give those persons mentioned in the Act priority over the debenture-holders.

C. T. Mitchell, for the plaintiff.—The Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1897, does not specificially state that priority is given by it over debentures creating a floating charge where the receiver has been appointed or the winding up of the company has commenced before the Act came into operation. Section 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875, was held not to be retrospective: In re Joseph Suche & Co., 24 W. R. 184, 1 Ch. D. 48. The Act of 1897 give priority to debts mentioned in section 1 of the Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888. Section 3 of the Act of 1888 only applies the Act to windings up "commenced after the commencement the Act," and the Act of 1897 is limited in the same way.

Percy F. Wheeler, for the official receiver and liquidator of the company.—The Act of 1897 is retrospective: In re Anglo-French Co-operative Society, Ex parte Pelly, 32 W. R. 748. In that case the Companies Act, 1883, was held to be retrospective. The Act of 1888, which repealed it, expressly stated that its effect was not retrospective.

Mitchell in reply.

WRIGHT, J.—This case is very much on the line, but on the whole I think the Act of 1897 is not retrospective. The reasons for my opinion are two. Primâ facie the Act is not retrospective, although the terms of section 2 are ambiguous. And, having regard to the terms of section 3, primâ facie that provision is prospective. The observations of Lord Selborne on Main v. Stark, L. R. 15 App. Cas. 384, support the contention that the Act is not retrospective, and the case of In re Joseph Suche & Co. is a strong one in support of the same view. In the case last mentioned Sir George Jessel went out of his way to decide as he did. He said in his judgment: "Since this question came last before me I have consulted several of the other judges," and, referring to section 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875, he said, "I prefer on this occasion to rest my decision on the more general grounds that the section was not intended to apply to any winding up which had been commenced before the Act came into operation. I so decide because it is a general rule that when the Legislature alters the rights of parties by taking away or conferring any right of action its enactments, unless in express terms they apply to pending actions, do not affect them. It is said that there is one exception to that rule—namely, that where enactments merely affect procedure and do not extend to rights of action they have been held to apply to existing rights, and it is suggested here that the alteration made by this section is within that exception. I am of opinion that it is not. This is an alteration, not merely in procedure, but in the right to prove for a debt, which is not distinguishable in substance from a right of action before winding up, being simply a legal proceeding to recover a debt against a company in liquidation." In this case the Legislature has interfered with the rights of debenture-holders if they have not taken steps to realize their securities before the passing of the Act, but it has not gone so far as to interfere with their rights when they have already taken those steps. The Act of 1897 seems to form part of the Act of 1888, which in terms only applies where a winding up has commenced after the commencement of the Act. The case of In re Anglo-French Co-operative Society, 32 W. R. 748, 50 L. T. Rep. 754, turned on the particular language of a different statute. No such words occur in the Act of 1897, and in this case I must hold that the workmen are not entitled to the priority which they claim.

"THE PACIFIC." (a.)

Ship—Salvage—Life salvage—Jurisdiction—Life salvage services "rendered to foreign vessel wholly or in part within British waters"—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 544.

An English vessel fell in with a Norwegian vessel in the North Sea, more than three miles from the coasts of the United Kingdom, flying signals of distress, waterlogged and unmanageable, in want of immediate assistance for herself and her crew, and rendered life salvage services to the crew of the distressed vessel by taking them off their vessel and bringing them into an English port in safety.

Held, that the English court had jurisdiction under section 544 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, to make an award of life salvage remuneration to the owners, master, and crew of the salving vessel; such services having in fact been rendered in part within British waters.

This was an action of salvage instituted in the Admiralty Division of the High Court in England, on behalf of the owners, master, and crew of the English steam trawler Jersey against the Norwegian barque Pacific, her cargo and freight, to recover life salvage remuneration for services rendered to the crew of The Pacific on the 27th and 28th of March last, when The Jersey, having fallen in with The Pacific flying signals of distress, waterlogged, and in want of immediate assistance for her and her crew, about ninety miles north-east of the Sperm, on the morning of the 27th of March, took on board her the crew of The Pacific, twelve in number, proceeded with them to Hull, and there landed them in safety.

The owners of The Pacific appeared to defend the suit, and pleaded that The Pacific was a Norwegian vessel, and the services of the plaintiffs were services in saving life only, and were rendered neither wholly nor in part in British waters, and that the English court had no jurisdiction to deal with the plaintiffs' claim or to award salvage to the plaintiffs for the said services, and that the action should be dismissed, with costs.

The action was now heard before the President (Sir Francis Jeune), assisted by two of the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House.

Butler Aspinall, for the plaintiffs.—In the somewhat similar case of the Willem III., 20 W. R. 216, L. R. 3 A. & E. 487, the actual point to be decided here did not arise, as the persons whose lives were saved were brought into an English port not by the salving vessel but by another vessel, but it was admitted in argument that f the salving vessel had herself brought the lives saved to Spithead, her owners master and crew would have been entitled to salvage remuneration under the 9th section of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10), for which is now substituted as the ruling enactment in this case section 544 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, which is as follows: "Where services are rendered wholly or in part in British waters in saving life from any British or foreign vessel, or elsewhere in saving life from any British vessel, there shall be payable to the salvor by the owner of the vessel, cargo, or apparel saved a reasonable amount of salvage, to be determined in case of dispute in manner hereinafter provided."

He also referred to The Johannes, Lush 182, 9 W. R. Adm. 21, and The Cairo, 22 W. R. 742, L. R. 4 A. & E. 184.

Carver, Q.C., and Stubbs, for the defendants.—The services in this case were on the facts completed directly the crew of The Pacific had been taken on board The Jersey. They were then in safety, and the bringing them from the point where they were so rescued into the port of Hull was not a salvage service.

The following judgment was delivered by the President on the question of jurisdiction:

JEUNE, P.—I think the construction to be put upon this section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, is sufficiently covered by authority to prevent my having serious difficulty or doubt about the matter. What I understand from the facts in this case is that there was The Pacific, a foreign derelict, outside British waters, from which were taken persons by the British vessel and brought within British waters, and landed on the English shores. That raises quite neatly the question whether the persons who so saved the seamen from the foreign vessel are entitled to salvage. It is clear they would not be entitled to salvage juri gentium, because before the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104) no one disputes that there could have been any life salvage in such a case. Then we have to see what the effect of the Act of 1854 was. The effect of that is well illustrated by the case of The Johannes. By section 458 of that Act salvage could be granted, amongst other cases, in the following case: "Whenever any ship or boat"—that is to say, including a foreign ship—"is stranded, or otherwise in distress, upon the shore of any sea or tidal water situated within the limits of the United Kingdom." Now, in the case before Dr. Lushington what happened was this: A Prussian vessel was wrecked seventy miles east of Yarmouth, and her crew were taken off her, other salvors afterwards bringing the ship into Grimsby. Life salvage was claimed by the persons who had taken these foreign sailors and brought them to Hull. Dr. Lushington decided that the claim under that section of the Act could not be maintained, because first of all the limits of the United Kingdom meant within three miles, and although the sailors had been brought within the limits of the United Kingdom, yet the words of the section were clear that the ship or boat must be stranded or otherwise in distress on the shore of any sea or tidal water situated within the limits of the United Kingdom. When the words of the section are looked at it is easy to understand the language of Dr. Lushington. He uses a phrase which might be taken to mean that the service of saving life was rendered outside the limits of the United Kingdom. By that, however, he does not mean that the whole of the services were rendered there, because all he meant to say and all that it was necessary to say was that the ship in distress was outside, not within, the limits of the United Kingdom. I have no doubt it was the hardship pointed out by Dr. Lushington in that case which gave rise to the 9th section of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, and in that statute the Legislature dealt with the matter and by section 9 provided that all the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854 in regard to life salvage should apply in the case "of any foreign ship where the services have been rendered either wholly or in part in British waters." I cannot doubt that that provision meant to deal with the case which had arisen in the case of The Johannes where the services were rendered in part within British waters, although the ship itself was outside British waters when in distress. It must be a question of fact in every case whether the service was rendered wholly or in part in British waters. The test appears to me to be whether what was done by the salvors for saving was done wholly or in part in British waters. I can easily imagine cases where people might be salved from a vessel and then might be taken very considerable distances, perhaps for a long voyage, by the vessel which salved them, and then might come within British waters. It could not be said that that was a case of salvage services being performed in part in British waters, because it is evident that the salvage services finished long before the vessel came within British waters at all. It is clear that one must be guided by practical considerations in each case, and what you have to look at is whether the vessel in the course of effecting the salvage service was within British waters. Then it is argued that one ought not to give so extended a meaning to the section in the Act of 1861, or to section 544 in the later Act of 1894, which practically repeated the former section, because you ought not to construe an Act of Parliament to affect foreigners by your legislation, unless it is clear that the words of the section do so, because for obvious reasons it would be contrary to the comity of nations for one nation to presume to legislate for the subjects of another. You must always consider what the meaning of the words are, and, apart from other considerations, where an Act of Parliament has said in terms that the services are to be performed wholly or in part within British waters, it must, I think, be understood to mean what it says, and so understood, it does not appear to me to conflict in any way with such comity as nations extend to one another in this matter, because if foreign sailors are saved from a foreign vessel and brought to an English port, in the course of saving their lives, it would seem that the English Legislature has a perfect right to say that the owners or the ship may be made liable for services rendered in part, at any rate, to foreign sailors within the limits of English jurisdiction.

That being to my mind the clear view to be taken of section 544 of the Act of 1894, I do not think it is to be regarded as cut down by section 545 of the same Act, because, although the exact words of section 544 are not followed, I think the reason for that amending of the sections has been very clearly put by Mr. Aspinall—namely, that the two sections come from different statutes, now consolidated. In those circumstances I do not feel any difficulty in saying that in such a case as this the salvage service is one for which a reward can be claimed, and I think the further decision in the case of The Willem III., and to some extent the case of The Cairo, bear in the same direction. I am not concerned to consider whether the decision in the case of The Willem III. was a correct decision or not. I assume that it was. I assume that it was quite correct to say that although the services were to be considered as a whole, still that they were not to be considered as services in the whole of which each salvor participated; and although, therefore, the whole of the services are to be considered as a whole for some purposes, they were not to be considered as a whole in the sense of saying that The Flora, which took part in the operation outside British waters, was entitled to life salvage, although The Scorpion, which performed a portion of the services in British waters, was so entitled. It is not necessary for me to consider that. It appears to me quite clearly that if The Flora had carried the persons within British jurisdiction it would have been decided that she would have been entitled to a salvage award. That is precisely the condition raised in the present case. I do not think it necessary to refer further to the case of The Cairo. Under these circumstances I think the plaintiffs have a right to claim as life salvors.

REG. v. CITY OF LONDON COURT JUDGE AND PARRATT. (a.)

County court—Ship—Wages—Ship's husband—Salary—The County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), s. 3—The Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10), s. 10.

A county court having admiralty jurisdiction has no jurisdiction under the County Court Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, over a claim by a ship's husband for his salary or other remuneration due to him in that capacity.

Motion.

This was an application on behalf of J. W. Matthews, mortgagee of the steamship Ruby, for a writ of prohibition prohibiting the judge of the City of London Court, and W. Philips, the plaintiff in an action in rem instituted in the City of London Court under the 3rd section of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, against The Ruby for the recovery of £42, from further proceeding in such action.

Laing for the applicant.

The plaintiff seeks, in the action he has brought in the City of London Court, to recover £42 remuneration due to him as a superintendent engineer and ship's husband of The Ruby under the name of "wages." But the amount so sought to be recovered is not "wages," and neither a county court having admiralty jurisdiction, nor the Admiralty Division can have jurisdiction over the action. The plaintiff is not a seaman and the remuneration in question was not earned on board The Ruby. The plaintiff only performed the duties usually performed by a ship's husband, and although it may be admitted that he went voyages in The Ruby on two or three occasions, he only went for the purpose of better performing his duties in attending to the passengers and collecting money due to the owners of The Ruby abroad. A party entitled to bring an action of wages must be a mariner.

L. Batten, on behalf of the plaintiff in the action sought to be prohibited, showed cause against the issue of the writ of prohibition.—It is a question of fact for the judge trying a case of wages to determine whether the claim set up in the action is properly a claim for wages, and in this case the judge of the City of London Court has determined that the claim is a claim for wages. This finding the court ought not to interfere with: Brown v. Cocking, 16 W. R 933, L. R. 3 Q. B. 672. The plaintiff is a seaman within the wide definition of that word in use in actions of wages (see The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, 57 & 58 Vict. c. 60, s. 742), and the remuneration he seeks to recover in the action can properly be described as wages. A surgeon and a woman who acted as shipkeeper have been held entitled to bring actions in rem for their wages: The Jane and Matilda, 1 Hagg. Adm. 187; The Lord Hobart, 2 Dods. 100, and the right to proceed in rem for wages extends to services rendered on shore equally as to services rendered on board a ship; the question being whether the services so rendered were, as is contended to be the case here, maritime services. Reg. v. The Judge of the City of London Court and Owners of the Ss. Michigan, 38 W. R. 638, 25 Q. B. D. 339.

Sir F. JEUNE, P.—This claim is on the face of it a claim in an action in rem for wages as ship's husband, and the learned judge in the court below appears to have held that as a matter of law the plaintiff had a maritime lien, and he therefore gave judgment for the amount of the claim. But was there anything to support this view? I think not. According to the particulars filed the claim is in terms for wages as a ship's husband, and that I think raises the question which I think can be decided on prohibition whether a ship's husband in the well-known and ordinary meaning of the expression, can so claim. But if we look at what was proved in the action the result is the same. From the evidence it is clear that the plaintiff's duties were the duties of a ship's husband, and that he made some voyages, not many, on the ship; but it does not follow that there was anything necessarily done on the ship, though it may be that the plaintiff incidently performed some of his duties on board the ship.

The question then arises, Does the plaintiff bring himself within the 10th section of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861? By such 10th section the claim over which jurisdiction is given must be a claim "by a seaman of any ship for wages earned by him on board the ship." I agree that the word "seaman" may be extended to any person who is employed in the practical employment or management of a ship; but the gist of the matter is that the employment must be to do the work of the ship, and I think you may go a step further and say you must look at the nature of the employment and see whether it is such work as is required to be done on board ship. I say that because in the case of The Chieftain, 11 W. R. 538, Br. & L. 104, Dr. Lushington, in dealing with the case of a captain who was employed a great deal on shore, looked at the nature of his duties, and held that he was entitled to a maritime lien for his wages. But having regard to the character of the duties of the plaintiff in this case, I do not think that they are duties of the nature of those of a seaman even in the most extended sense which can be given to the term. Under these circumstances the correct view seems to to me to be that a ship's husband acting as such and employed as such is not a person who comes within the 10th section of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, and consequently that his claim is not a claim within the 3rd section of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868. I do not think that the case of Reg. v. The Judge of the City of London Court and the Owners of The Ss. Michigan is at all contrary to this view, for there the plaintiff who claimed wages had been mate of The Michigan, and was still employed on her.

Under these circumstances I am of opinion that there was no jurisdiction for the City of London Court to entertain the claim, and that the prohibition must go.

ACCOUNT:—

Action for—Contract—Payment in currency of foreign country—Rate of exchange—Damages.—As a general rule the courts of this country have no jurisdiction to order payment of money except in the currency of this country. Whatever sum is ordered to be paid, whether for principal, interest, or damages, must be expressed in English money.

By a contract dated the 6th of October, 1891, P. agreed to pay (inter alia) to M. one cent. in Mexican currency per cubic metre of certain excavation works mentioned in the contract, to be payable as and when received by P. from the Mexican local authority. P. also agreed to make a monthly statement of the total number of cubic metres of excavation done during each month, when the amount payable under the contract would be ascertainable. M. died in June, 1894, down to which time all sums found due were punctually paid, but no legal personal representative to his estate was appointed until May, 1896. The excavation works were finished and paid for on the 31st of August, 1896.

In an action for an account brought in England by M.'s legal personal representative against P., judgment was given declaring that the plaintiff was entitled to an account of what was due to him by P. under the contract with M.; but the judgment contained no declaration or inquiry as to damages. Upon taking the account it was, on the 13th of November, 1897, found that a balance of 19·366 Mexican dollars was due by P. to the plaintiff. Upon a motion by the plaintiff to determine questions as to the currency, in which the account should be calculated and the balance paid,

Held, by the Court of Appeal (affirming Kekewich, J.) (dissentiente Vaughan Williams, L.J.), that having regard to the form of the judgment at the trial of the action, the balance found due must be turned into English money, as on the 13th of November, 1897, when the amount due was first ascertained. An action for an account is in equity an action for the balance found due on taking the account, and not a series of actions for particular items in the account.—MANNERS v. PEARSON, C.A., 498.

ADMINISTRATION:—

1. Assets—Insolvent estate—Crown debt—Legacy duty—Priority.—A debt due by a bankrupt to the Crown for legacy duty is entitled to priority over the general creditors of the bankrupt; and such priority can be asserted in the bankruptcy proceedings notwithstanding the vesting of the bankrupt's estate in his assignees.—GALVIN, RE, C.A. (Ir.).

2. Costs—Creditor's action—No assets.—In a creditor's action for administration of the personal estate of a testator it turned out, pending the administration action, by reason of the decision of another court, that the testator had no assets.

Held, that the rule in Bluett v. Jessop, Jac. 240, nevertheless applied, and that the plaintiff in the administration action should pay the costs of the executor.—HIBERNIAN BANK v. LAUDER, V.C. (Ir.)

3. Intestacy—Co-parceners—"Purchaser," tracing title from—Real estate—Inheritance, law of—Descent—Heir-at-law—Issue—Ancestor, standing in place of—Inheritance Act, 1883 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 106), ss. 1, 2—Lunacy—Real estate of lunatic—Sale—Purchase-money—Conversion—Lunacy Regulation Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 70), ss. 124, 135.—The doctrine of Cooper v. France, 19 L. J. Ch. 313—that on the death intestate of a co-parcener a co-heiress of the purchaser of land, her son, notwithstanding section 2 of the Inheritance Act, 1833, stands in her place quoad her share—applies equally in favour of her more remote lineal descendants. Accordingly, on the death intestate of a son of such a co-parcener, Held, that the entire share descended on the nephew of such son (the nephew being a grandson of the co-parcener), and that no part thereof descended to the descendants of a sister of the co-parcener.

The purchase-money of a lunatic's descended moiety of land sold in 1863 under section 124 of the Lunacy Regulation Act, 1853, Held, under section 135, transmissible, upon his death intestate, in precisely the same manner as the descended moiety if the same had not been sold.—RE MATSON, JAMES v. DICKINSON, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.

4. Practice—Priorities—Rates—Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 62), s. 1, sub-sections 1 (a), 6; s. 3.—The priority conferred by section 1, sub-section 1, of the Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888, applies in the administration of the insolvent estate of a person who has died since the 31st of December, 1888, the date of the commencement of that Act; but does not apply in cases of death prior to that date.—HEYWOOD v. HEYWOOD, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 72.

5. Testamentary expenses—Costs of unsuccessfully opposing probate—Order as to payment of costs by the Probate judge—Testator's personal estate insufficient.—The plaintiff took an action in the Probate Division against the executors, contesting the validity of the testator's will. That action was dismissed, but the judge of the Probate Division ordered the costs of both parties to the action to be paid out of the testator's estate. The personal estate being insufficient, the executors took out an administration summons to ascertain whether the plaintiff's costs of the probate action were payable out of the testator's real estate, which had been devised subject to the payment of testamentary expenses.

Held, that the costs in question were not testamentary expenses.—PRINCE, RE, GODWIN v. PRINCE, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

2. County court—Practice—Mode of trial—Meaning of term "actions" in consolidating and amending Act—County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 51), s. 2—Maritime cause—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 101.—The proper mode of trial in the case of a maritime cause over which a county court having admiralty jurisdiction has jurisdiction under the 2nd section of County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1869, is either by the judge alone or by the judge assisted by mercantile assessors.

The parties in such a suit are not entitled to a jury: section 101 of the County Courts Act, 1888, by which it is provided that, in all "actions" where the amount claimed shall exceed five pounds, it shall be lawful for the plaintiff or defendant to require a jury to be summoned to try the said action, unless the action is of the nature of the causes or matters assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice, not being by the context applicable to admiralty or maritime causes tried in a county court having admiralty jurisdiction.—"THEODORA," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 157.

3. County court—Ship—Wages—Ship's husband—Salary—The County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), s. 3—The Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10), s. 10.—A county court having admiralty jurisdiction has no jurisdiction under the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, over a claim by a ship's husband for his salary or other remuneration due to him in that capacity.—"RUBY," THE (No. 2), P.D. & Ad.D., 687.

ADULTERATION:—

Food—"Skimmed" milk—"Separated" milk—Disclosure of injurious alteration—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 9.—Section 9 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, enacts that "No person shall, with intent that the same may be sold in its altered state, without notice abstract from any article of food any part of it so as to affect injuriously its quality, substance, or nature, and no person shall sell any article so altered without making disclosure of the alteration under a penalty in each case not exceeding twenty pounds."

Held, that the question whether or not the alteration has been sufficiently disclosed is a question of fact.

Milk from which 97 per cent. of the fat had been abstracted was sold as skimmed milk. The magistrate held, on the evidence, that this was not a sufficient disclosure under section 9.

Held, that there was no appeal from his decision. Jones v. Davies, 69 L. T. Rep. 492, and Platt v. Tyler, 58 J. P. 91, commented on and explained. —PETCHEY v. TAYLOR, Q.B.D.

ANIMAL:—

1. Dog—Injury done to cattle or sheep—Liability of owner of dog—Dogs Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 60), s. 1.—A dog chanced to worry and kill a sheep which was trespassing on the land of the owner of the dog.

Held, that, the words of section 1 of the Dogs Act, 1865, being absolute, the owner of the dog was liable in damages.

Semble (per Collins, J.), there might be cases, however, where some qualifying proviso ought to be read into the section.—GRANGE v. SILCOCK, Q.B.D., 221.

2. Holding sale of swine—Taking round swine in cart and offering for sale—Diseases of Animals Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 57), s. 22, sub-section 19—Markets and Fairs (Swine Fever) Order, 1896.—By an order of the Board of Agriculture, dated the 11th of December, 1896, made in pursuance of section 22, sub-section 19, of the Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, "no market, fair, sale, or exhibition of swine shall be held in a district to which this order applies except as expressly authorised by this order," and "a sale of swine (not being in a swine fever infected area) may be held with the licence of the local authority."

The respondent was in charge of a horse and float passing along a highway containing pigs, two of which had been previously ordered, and, whilst so travelling, asked other people if they wanted to buy pigs, and subsequently sold them all to various people. This was not a swine fever infected area, and there had been no licence obtained from the local authority. The magistrates held that there had been no contravention of the order of 1896, and dismissed the information.

Held, that the magistrates were right, for, although there was a selling, there was no holding a sale.—MCLEAN v. MONK, Q.B.D.

ANNUITY:—

Deed—Charge upon corpus or income.—By marriage settlement the husband conveyed real estate to trustees upon trust to permit him to receive the rents and profits for life, and after his death, to permit his wife to receive £300 a year "out of the rents, issues, and profits thereof for and during her life, without impeachment of waste, and for her jointure, . . . and immediately after her decease" in trust for the settlor, his heirs and assigns. The settlor covenanted that any lands taken in exchange for the settled lands should, during the life of the wife, produce the clear yearly income of £300.

Held, that the annuity was a charge upon the corpus of the settled estate.—WEST'S ESTATE, RE, C.A. (Ir.).

2. Power—Period of ascertaining class—Gift over on marriage or death of surviving unmarried daughter—Remoteness.—In 1835 a husband and wife, in exercise of a power of appointment conferred upon them by their marriage settlement, appointed that a certain fund should be held by the trustees upon trust (in the events which happened) to pay thereout the sum of £1,500 to each of their three daughters, F., L., and S., who should thereafter marry; and upon further trust, so long as they or any or either of them should be from time to time living and unmarried, to pay the income of the fund to such of them as should from time to time living and unmarried, if more than one in equal shares; and in case one or two only of them should marry, then upon trust, after the decease or, as the case might require, the marriage of such one of them as should be last living and unmarried, to pay the fund unto the four other children of the marriage, and such one or more of them the said F., L., and S., as should marry as aforesaid, in equal shares.

Held (1) that the final gift over was void for remoteness; (2) that the appointment of the £1,500 to each of the three unmarried daughters was also void for remoteness; and (3) that the appointment of the income of the fund to the three unmarried daughters was a valid appointment of an equal undivided third share of such income to each of such daughters so long as she was living and unmarried, but that the gift over of such one-third share on her marriage was void for remoteness.

3. Power—Real estate—Power of sale—Appointment to trustees upon trust for sale—Legal estate—Proper persons to conduct sale.—A testator gave his daughter a power of appointment over certain real estate in favour of her children. The daughter by will appointed the property to trustees upon trust for sale and to stand possessed of the proceeds upon trust for the objects of the power.

Held, that the appointment was good; that in the circumstances, the legal estate was vested in the trustees of the daughter's will; and they were the proper persons to carry out the sale.

4. Power of—Rule against double portions—Appointment by mother—Person in loco parentis.—A lady, under a special power for the purpose in her father's will, appointed by will £10,000 equally among her three children. Subsequently by deeds-poll she appointed sums equal to one-third to one daughter.

Held, per Stirling, J., that the burden of proof lay on those who asserted that the mother intended to put herself in loco parentis to her daughter, and that, there being no proof that she did so intend, the rule against double portions did not apply, and the daughter was entitled to share in the unappointed residue equally with the other children.

But held, by the Court of Appeal, on further evidence, and without considering the point of law raised in the court below, that on the facts the appointments by deeds-poll were intended to be in satisfaction of the daughter's share in the £10,000, and that she was not entitled to share in the unappointed residue equally with the other children.

Decision of Stirling, J. (ante, p. 138, [1897] 2 Ch. 574), reversed on the facts.—ASHTON, RE, INGRAM v. PAPILLON, C.A., 231.

ARBITRATION:—

1. Arbitrators—Misconduct—Refusal to state case for opinion of court, or to adjourn that court may be applied to to order a case—Application for case made reasonably and bonâ fide—Remitting matter to arbitrator for reconsideration after award made—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 23 Vict. c. 49), ss. 10, 11, 19.—Where one of the parties to an arbitration, acting bonâ fide and on reasonable grounds, requests the arbitrator to state a special case raising a material question of law, or to delay his award until the party can apply to the court for an order directing a special case, the arbitrator, if he refuses and at once makes his award, is primâ facie guilty of a breach of duty amounting to misconduct within the meaning of section 11 of the Arbitration Act, 1889. In such circumstances the court is justified, under that section, in setting aside the award, or, under section 10, in remitting it for reconsideration, and may order the arbitrator to state a special case.—PALMER'S AND HOSKEN'S ARBITRATION, RE, C.A., 49.

1A. Costs—Award—Practice—No mention as to costs—Arbitration Act, 1889, ss. 14, 15 (2)—R. S. C., ord. 36, rr. 55b, 55c—Ord. 65, r. 1.—Where an action was referred to arbitration, and the order of reference and also the award were silent as to costs,

Held, that the costs of the action, reference, and award followed the event, because under section 15, sub-section 2, of the Arbitration Act, 1889, the award is equivalent to the verdict of a jury.—CARR v. DOUGHERTY, Q.B.D.

2. Partnership—Dissolution—Application to stay proceedings—Time—"Step in the proceedings"—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), s. 4.—The mere filing of affidavits by the defendant in answer to a motion for a receiver in an action for dissolution of partnership, is not a "step in the proceedings" within section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, the taking of which will preclude the defendant from moving to refer the case to arbitration under a clause in the partnership articles.—ZALINOFF v. ARMY:—

Volunteer—"Persons subject to military law"—"Being trained or exercised with" regular forces—Breaking up of camp—Subsequent detention—"Military custody"—Army Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58), ss. 43, 45, 158, 176, sub-section 8 (a).—The plaintiff, a member of a volunteer corps, was, with other members of the corps, in military training with a portion of the regular forces at a camp under a War Office order, which provided for the formation of a volunteer brigade at the camp from the 1st to the 8th of August. Upon the morning of the 8th of August, while the corps was still in camp, the plaintiff was, by order of the adjutant, placed under arrest on a charge of larceny in the camp, and taken to the railway station, where a special military train was waiting to convey the corps to their home destination, and he was then given into the custody of the defendants, three members of the volunteer corps, who, acting under orders, upon the arrival of the train at the home destination, took the plaintiff to the police-station and handed him over to the police. The defendants were then formally dismissed. The plaintiff was subsequently tried at quarter sessions and acquitted. In an action against the defendants for assault and false imprisonment,

Held, that the training or exercise of the volunteer corps with the regular forces, within section 176, sub-section 8 (a), of the Army Act, 1881, did not cease, as regards the plaintiff and the three defendants, until they were dismissed after the plaintiff had been handed over to the police, and that until that time they were subject to military law; and that, therefore, the defendants were not liable to the action.

Held, also, that the defendants could justify taking and keeping the plaintiff in military custody under section 158 of the Army Act, 1881, as that section applied to an offence alleged to have been committed by a person subject to military law.

Held, further, that, under section 43 of the Army Act, 1881, the plaintiff's only mode of redress was by complaint to his superior officer as therein provided, and that no action would lie.

Decision of the Queen's Bench Division (ante, p. 249) reversed.—MARKS v. FROGLEY, C.A., 548.

ASSIGNMENT:—

1. Debt—Mortgage—Absolute assignment with proviso for redemption—Implication of power to redeem—Assignment of part of an entire debt—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-section 6.—A mortgage of debts due to the mortgagor, made in the ordinary form with a proviso for redemption and reassignment upon repayment to the mortgagor, is "an absolute assignment (not purporting to be by way of charge only)" within section 25, sub-section 6, of the Judicature Act, 1873.

Tancred v. Delagoa Bay and East Africa Railway, 23 Q. B. D. 239, approved.

Where there is an absolute assignment of a debt, but by way of security, a right to a reassignment on redemption will be implied, and section 25, sub-section 6, of the Judicature Act, 1873, is applicable to such an assignment.

Quære, whether an assignment of part of an entire debt is within the enactment.

Judgment of Lord Coleridge, C.J., in Brice v. Bannister, 3 Q. B. D. 569, questioned.

A firm of builders delivered to the plaintiffs a document in the following terms: "Re Building Contract, South Lambeth-road.—In consideration of money advanced from time to time we hereby charge the sum of £1,080, which will become due to us from John Robertson on the completion of the above buildings, as security for the advances, and we hereby assign our interest in the above-mentioned sum until the money with added interest be repaid to you." The plaintiffs gave notice to the John Robertson named in the document, and brought this action against him to recover the amount.

Held, that the document was not "an absolute assignment (not purporting to be by way of charge only)" within section 25, sub-section 6, of the Judicature Act, 1873, and that the plaintiffs could not recover in the action.—DURHAM v. ROBERTSON, C.A.

Banking account of third party—Inspection before trial—Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879 (42 Vict. c. 11), ss. 3-7.—Section 7 of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879, was not intended to confer power on the court to order that a party to legal proceedings should have liberty to inspect and take copies of entries in a banker's books of the accounts of persons who are not parties to the action.—POLLOCK v. GARLE, C.A., 66.

BANKRUPTCY:—

1. Administration—Execution—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 46, 125—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 11 (2).—A judgment creditor levied execution upon goods of a judgment debtor. The sheriff seized and sold the goods, retaining the proceeds for fourteen days as required by section 11 (2) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890. Within the fourteen days the sheriff had notice of a petition in bankruptcy against the debtor, and therefore continued to hold the money after the fourteen days had expired. Soon after that date the debtor died, and the petition of which the sheriff had had notice was dismissed; but a petition was presented by a different creditor for administration under section 125 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, upon which an administration order was made.

The trustee in the administration and the execution creditor both claimed the money in the hands of the sheriff.

Held, that the execution creditor was entitled to the money, because it had become his property prior to the making of the administration order, and at that date no longer formed part of the debtor's property.—WATKINS v. BARNARD, Bkcy., 156.

2. After-acquired property—Assignment—Equitable chose in action—Bona fides—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 44, 54—Colonial law.—The principle that where a bankrupt deals bonâ fide and for value with his property acquired subsequently to his bankruptcy, but before his discharge, the transaction is valid against the creditors under the bankruptcy, applies to a case where the property dealt with is an equitable interest in a trust fund; and the assignee for value may demand payment of the trust fund from the trustees.

It makes no difference that the bankrupt had not informed his trustee in bankruptcy of his having acquired the equitable interest, and that the trustee was ignorant of the fact until after the assignment, and that the assignee for value was aware of the ignorance of the trustee, as the conduct of the bankrupt towards his trustee in bankruptcy is immaterial to the question of bona fides.

11. Judgment debtor—Foreign subject—Application for committal—Receiving order—Jurisdiction of court—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 5—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 6, 103, sub-section 5.—In the case of an application under section 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, for the committal of a foreign subject domiciled abroad, and who, within a year before the application, has not ordinarily resided in England or had a dwelling-house or place of business therein, the court has jurisdiction, under section 103, sub-section 5 (d), of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, if it think fit, to decline to commit, and in lieu thereof, with the consent of the judgment creditor, to make a receiving order against the debtor.—CLARK, RE, CLARK, EX PARTE, C.A., 102.

12. Lease—Assignment—Covenant to indemnify assignor—Bankruptcy of first assignee—Right to sue executors of deceased second assignee—Bankruptcy Act, 1886 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 20, 44, 50 (5), 56, 57, 168.—The lease of a house to A. contained a covenant that A. would pay rent and insure and perform other usual obligations. By deed A. subsequently assigned the lease to B., and B. subsequently assigned to C. Each assignment contained covenants by the assignees to perform the covenants contained in the original lease, and to indemnify the assignors. In June, 1895, C. died. On the 12th of June, 1897, B. was adjudicated a bankrupt, and D. was appointed his trustee. A. was called upon to pay, and did pay, the arrears of rent under the lease, and tendered a proof against B.'s estate for the amount actually paid and the estimated amount of his future liability under the lease. A compromise was then effected between A. and the trustee by a deed, whereby the trustee sold to A. the full benefit of the covenant on the part of C. in consideration of the sum of £5, and of his executing a release whereby A.'s proof against the estate of B. was withdrawn, and all claims and demands under or in respect of the covenants by B. with A. were released and discharged. Under this deed A. carried in a claim against C.'s estate for payment out of his assets of what A. had paid for rent and insurance and for future indemnity against liability against the covenants in the original lease.

Held, that the right of the trustee in bankruptcy to sue C. was property within the meaning of section 168 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and was assignable to A., and that the damages in an action by the trustee against C.'s executors would not be confined to the dividend payable to A. in respect of his proof against B.'s estate; and, (2) on the construction of the release, that, having regard to the terms of the deed and the release of B.'s estate, A. acquired a right to sue C.'s executors.—PERKINS, RE, POYSER v. BEYFUS, C.A., 595.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 457), reversed.—CALCOTT AND ELVIN'S CONTRACT, RE, C.A., 673.

15. Order and disposition—Debts growing due to bankrupt in the course of his trade—Unaccepted bills drawn in respect thereof—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 44, sub-section 2 (iii.).—Merchants in England sold goods to customers in Spain, giving them six months' credit, the customers undertaking to accept three months' bills for the price at the expiration of three months from the date of the invoices. The English merchants, in order to put themselves in funds, drew bills upon their Spanish customers at six months from the date of the invoices for the price of the goods, and handed these bills to their bankers in London, together with copies of the invoices and duplicate bills of lading. These bills were not presented for acceptance. Upon receipt of these documents the bankers handed their acceptances to the English merchants at three months for a sum less than the invoice price, which the merchants got discounted. Before the Spanish customers had paid for the goods, or had accepted bills for the price thereof, the English merchants became bankrupt.

Held, that the debts owing by the Spanish customers to the bankrupts for the goods supplied were debts due or growing due to the bankrupts in the course of their trade and business, and were in the order or disposition of the bankrupts at the commencement of the bankruptcy with the consent of the bankers within the meaning of section 44, sub-section 2 (iii.), of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.—GOETZ, RE, C.A., 469.

16. Personal earnings—Charge on fund—Personal promise to pay—Assignment not perfected by notice—Intervention of trustee—Stop-order—Title of trustee.—T. an undischarged bankrupt, who had prior to his bankruptcy been a wine merchant, while not a professional public-house broker, had since his bankruptcy habitually endeavoured to earn money by introducing buyers to vendors of public-houses, introduced to R. a purchaser for R.'s public-house, and on the 20th of April, 1897, obtained a judgment against R. for £258 commission. On the 6th of May, 1897, the trustee in the bankruptcy gave notice to T. and R. claiming the money for the estate, and on the 7th of May obtained a stop-order. The trustee was subsequently informed of two claims by C. and V. against this fund. C.'s claim was based on a letter by T. promising C. one-half the commission earned by T. on the sale by T. of public-houses introduced by C. to T. V.'s claim arose out of a written assignment by T. of his claim against R. executed two days prior to the trial of T.'s action against R. Neither C. nor V. had given notice of assignment to R., but R. in the course of the action became informed of C.'s claim.

Held, (1) that commission so earned was in the nature of earnings from a trade or business, and not in the nature of mere personal labour or personal skill, and passed to the trustee. (2) That C.'s claim was not a charge or assignment on the particular fund, but a mere personal contract to pay money in certain events. (3) That V. not having perfected his assignment by notice, the trustee by obtaining a stop-order had perfected his title.—MERCER v. VAN COLINA, Bkcy.

17. Practice—Application to set aside bankruptcy notice—Adjournment—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (g)—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886 and 1890, rr. 138 (2), 139, Form 8.—No adjournment of an application to set aside a bankruptcy notice can be granted if the debtor does not, in his affidavit in support of the application, rely on the statutory grounds for setting aside a bankruptcy notice—viz., "that he has a counter-claim, set-off, or cross-demand which equals or exceeds the amount of the judgment debt, and which he could not set up in the action in which the judgment was obtained."—COLE, RE, ATTENBOROUGH, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 352.

18. Practice—Evidence on appeal—Judge's note—Right to use shorthand-writer's transcript to supplement vital omissions—Order LVIII., r. 11.—On the hearing of an appeal, the judge's note may by special order be supplemented on vital points by a transcript of a shorthand-writer's note, but the whole of the shorthand-writer's note ought not to be referred to.—SPRANGE, RE, Bkcy.

19. Proof—Amendment—Secured creditor—Omission to value security owing to inadvertence—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), Schedule I., r. 10; Schedule II., rr. 11, 12, 13.—Rule 10 of Schedule I. of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, provides that "For the purpose of voting a secured creditor shall, unless he surrenders his security, state in his proof the particulars of his security, the date when it was given, and the value at which he assesses it, and shall be entitled to vote only in respect of the balance (if any) due to him after deducting the value of his security. If he votes in respect of his whole debt, he shall be deemed to have surrendered his security, unless the court on application is satisfied that the omission to value the security has arisen from inadvertence."

A secured creditor who, owing to false information, omits to value his security, does not omit to value such security from inadvertence within the meaning of the above rule.

A secured creditor who states in his proof the particulars of his security, and states that he considers it is worthless, does not (Collins, L.J., dissenting) omit to value such security from inadvertence within the meaning of the above rule.

Judgment of Wright, J. (ante, p. 207), affirmed.—PIERS, RE, PIERS, EX PARTE, C.A., 475.

20. Proof—Bill of exchange—Secured creditor—Consolidation of debts and securities.—In bankruptcy it would primâ facie be right for a creditor who had several debts due to him from a bankrupt to prove for the lump sum without distinguishing the debts. But if there were different rights over with respect to some of the debts as against third parties, or different securities given by the bankrupt for the different debts, it would be the duty of the trustee to require the person proving to specify the particular debts, or the security for each debt.

In re Smith and Logan, Ex parte Fletcher and Brandon, 43 W. R. 412, 2 Manson Bank., Rep. 70, explained.

The holder of four dishonoured bills of exchange sent in a proof in the liquidation of the estate of a firm which had endorsed each bill, for the aggregate amount of the four bills with noting expenses. The trustee in the liquidation had different rights of indemnity in respect of the four bills. In respect of two of those bills the holder had received more than 20s. in the £ upon his proofs against the various parties to the said bills, but the total amount received by him was considerably less than the aggregate amount claimed in respect of the four bills.

Held, that he could not be allowed to retain the surplus beyond the amount due on either of the two overpaid bills and attribute it to payment of the debts on the other bills.—JAMES v. LONDON AND COUNTY BANKING CO., MORRIS, RE, Ch. D. Romer, J., 627.

21. Proof—Debt contracted after notice of act of bankruptcy—Liability of bankrupt—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 9, sub-section 1; s. 37, sub-sections 2, 3.—A debt contracted after notice of an available act of bankruptcy, and before the receiving order is made, is a "debt provable in bankruptcy" within the meaning of section 37, sub-section 3, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, though the creditor is prevented by section 37, sub-section 2, from proving the debt; and therefore the creditor cannot, by reason of section 9, sub-section 1, sue the debtor in respect thereof.—BUCKWELL v. NORMAN, C.A., 339.

22. Proof—Verbal agreement to lend money—Receipt by lender of a share of profits of business—Bankruptcy of borrower—Postponement of lender's proof—Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), s. 2, sub-section (3); s. 3.—A verbal agreement to lend money on the terms that the lender shall receive a share of the profits of a business to be carried on by the borrower is within the provisions of section 3 of the Partnership Act, 1890; and therefore, in such a case, if the borrower is adjudged a bankrupt the lender is not entitled to recover anything in respect of his loan until the claims of the other creditors of the borrower have been satisfied.—FORT, RE, SCHOFIELD, EX PARTE, C.A., 147.

23. Property of bankrupt—Money paid into court by defendant with denial of liability—Bankruptcy of defendant—Secured creditor—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 22, r. 6—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 45.—Where the defendant in an action pays money into court with a denial of liability, and becomes bankrupt before the action can be tried, the plaintiff has a claim as a secured creditor upon the money paid into court to the extent to which the trustee in bankruptcy admits the claim in the action.—GORDON, RE, NAVALCHAND, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 31.

24. Protected transaction—Execution—Sheriff to hold goods for fourteen days—Notice of bankruptcy petition—Hours for service—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 11, sub-section 2—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, r. 90.—By section 11, sub-section 2, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, the sheriff is to retain the proceeds of an execution for fourteen days, and if within that time notice is served on him of a bankruptcy petition having been presented against or by the debtor, and a receiving order is made thereon, he is to pay the money to the official receiver. By rule 90 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, service of notice is to be effected before six in the afternoon, except on Saturday, when it is to be effected before two in the afternoon; and service effected after those hours shall, for the purpose of computing any period of time subsequent to such service, be deemed to have been effected on the following day, or, in the case of Saturday, on the following Monday.

Notice of a bankruptcy petition, and a receiving order made thereon against the debtor, was served upon the sheriff, who was holding the proceeds of an execution, after the hour named in rule 90, on the fourteenth day.

Held, that the notice was served in time, as rule 90 did not apply to such a notice, but only to service of notices of procedure in the bankruptcy; and, further, that, even if the rule did apply, it did not invalidate the service upon that day, but merely postponed the date for computing the time within which the next step in the proceedings was to be taken.—LOLE v. BETTERIDGE, C.A., 161.

25. Protected transaction—Statement of accounts—Payment to an accountant for preparation with a knowledge of an act of bankruptcy—Title of trustee.—Where an accountant, who had prepared a statement of accounts and sent to the creditors a notice which amounted to an act of bankruptcy, had received payment for his services,

Held, that the transaction was not protected within the exception of In re Sinclair, Ex parte Payne, 15 Q. B. D. 616, and that the money so paid was recoverable by the trustee in the bankruptcy.—WHITE, RE, WARD, EX PARTE, Q.B.D.

26. Receiving order — Application to rescind — Arrangement with creditors—Jurisdiction and discretion of registrar—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 104—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 3, sub-section 6.—A debtor presented a petition in bankruptcy against himself and obtained a receiving order. Subsequently to this he entered into an arrangement with all his creditors, under which they received a composition of 10s. in the pound, and released the debtor from their respective debts and withdrew their proofs. The debtor then applied to the registrar to rescind the receiving order. The registrar rescinded the order, though the debtor had undergone no public examination.

Held, by A. L. Smith and Collins, L.JJ. (Rigby, L.J., dissenting), that the registrar had jurisdiction to rescind the receiving order, and that, under the circumstances of the case, he had exercised his discretion properly.

This course should, however, only be adopted with great caution and under special circumstances, when there has been no misconduct on the part of the debtor, and it is for the benefit of the creditors that the receiving order should be rescinded.—IZOD, RE, OFFICIAL RECEIVER, EX PARTE, C.A., 304.

27. Settlement—Marriage consideration—Settlement in favour of purchaser.—By section 52 of the Bankruptcy (Ireland) Act, 1872, the following are excepted from the settlements avoided by the section: (a) settlements made before and in consideration of marriage; or (b) made in favour of a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith and for valuable consideration.

Held, that exception (a) is confined to settlements made on the marriage of the settlor; and that exception (b) is confined to transactions for valuable consideration in money passing between the parties.

Ex parte Hillman, In re Pumfrey, 10 Ch. D. 622, approved.—DOWNES, RE, Q.B.D. (Ir.).

28. Set-off — Mutual dealings — Bankruptcy Act, 1883, ss. 37, 38, 125.—Where there have been mutual dealings between a creditor and a debtor, the creditor is entitled as against the trustee to set off under section 125 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, against his indebtedness a debt due to him from the bankrupt, although it has only ripened into a debt after the bankrupt's death.—WATKINS v. LINDSAY, Bkcy.

BASTARDY:—

Summons—Simultaneous applications to three magistrates—One summons dismissed—Fresh summons—Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 65), s. 3.—On the 21st of October, 1896, the complainant applied to three magistrates separately for summonses against C. in respect of a bastard child born on the 9th of September, 1896. On the 28th of July 1897, one of the magistrates issued a summons, which was heard on the 3rd of November, 1897, and dismissed, on the ground that there was not sufficient corroboration of the complainant's evidence. On the 17th of November 1897, another of the three magistrates issued a summons, which recited that it was based on the application to this magistrate on the 21st of October, 1896. On this summons a bastardy order was made.

Held, that the three applications of the 21st of October, 1896, must be treated as one application only, and that that application was exhausted by the issue and dismissal of the summons of the 28th of July, 1897; and that consequently the summons of the 17th of November, 1897, was not based upon an application made within twelve months of the birth of the child, and must be quashed.—REG. v. ROBINSON, Q.B.D., 462.

BILL of EXCHANGE:—

1. Action on consideration—Bill outstanding—Dishonour.—Where a buyer of goods has given to the seller a bill of exchange for the price, and the seller has indorsed the bill over to a third party, an action for the price of the goods will not lie while the bill is outstanding, although it has been dishonoured, nor can the plaintiff succeed on the ground that he has got in the bill after action brought, but before trial.—DAVIS v. REILLY, Q.B.D., 96.

2. Indorsement—Bill not complete and regular—Indorsement by way of security—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), ss. 55, 56.—It was agreed between the plaintiffs and A., who owed them money, that they should draw a bill on him, and that the defendant, who was A.'s father, should indorse it to guarantee payment. They accordingly drew a bill on A. to their own order and, without indorsing it, gave it to A., who returned it to them accepted by himself, and indorsed by the defendant. They then indorsed it, and it was not paid at maturity.

In an action against the defendant,

Held, that he was not liable as indorser under section 55 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, nor as having incurred the liabilities of indorser under section 56, since at the time he put his name on the bill it was not complete and regular on the face of it, as it lacked the plaintiffs' indorsement; nor was he liable on a contract of suretyship, since the provisions of the Statute of Frauds were not satisfied.

The principles laid down in Steele v. McKinlay, 5 App. Cas. 754, are not affected by the provisions of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882.—JENKINS v. COOMBER, Q.B.D.

3. Maker of promissory note—Signature of maker obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation—Right of payee to recover against maker—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 29.—Where one of two joint makers of a promissory note, without any want of due care on his part, and without any intention of signing a negotiable instrument, has been induced to sign the note by the fraudulent misrepresentation made by the other joint maker that the document was a deed relating to private matters, the payee of the note, who takes the same in good faith and for value, cannot recover on the note against the joint maker who has been so induced to sign the note.

Semble, in such circumstances even a holder of the note in due course could not recover against such joint maker.

Foster v. Mackinnon, 17 W. R. 1105, L. R. 4 C. P. 704, followed.—LEWIS v. CLAY, Q.B.D., 319.

4. Notice of dishonour—Reasonable time—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 49, sub-section 12.—In an action on a bill of exchange it appeared that the holders handed the bill to their bankers, the Cardiff branch of the G. Bank, who sent it to their agents, the L. and W. Bank, to present for payment. The bill having been dishonoured, the L. and W. Bank sent notice of dishonour on the following day to the G. Bank, but addressed it by mistake to the Cirencester branch. On the next morning, having discovered their mistake, they telegraphed notice of dishonour to the Cardiff branch.

Held, by the Court of Appeal (Collins, L.J., dissenting), that, so far as regarded the giving of notice by the L. and W. Bank to their principals, the requirements of section 49, sub-section 12, of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, had been complied with.—FIELDING v. CORRY, C.A., 97.

BILL of SALE:—

1. Consideration—Payment off of a prior bill of sale with money advanced—Provision for repayment of principal and interest by monthly instalments of a specified amount—Right of grantee to interest as if the date for repayment had been inserted—Misdescription of grantor which is not misleading.—Where the money consideration as set forth in a bill of sale has been actually paid to the grantor it is not necessary to refer to the payment off of a prior bill of sale out of the proceeds.

Where the principal and interest advanced on a bill of sale is to be repaid by regular instalments of a specified amount, the holder is in the same position as if the date of repayment which can be gathered by calculation had been inserted in the bill of sale, and can only be redeemed by payment of interest to that date.

Semble, a misdescription of a grantor, which is not calculated to mislead, does not avoid a bill of sale.—DAVIES, RE, EQUITABLE INVESTMENT CO., EX PARTE, Q.B.D.

2. Execution creditor—Sale by sheriff by order of court—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 11—R. S. C., ord. 57, r. 12.—The jurisdiction conferred on the court by ord. 57, r. 12, ought not to be exercised against a mortgagee, unless there is a reasonable ground for assuming that the sale will produce more than sufficient to answer the just claims of the mortgagee, so as to leave a surplus available for the execution creditor.

Semble, the effect of section 11 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, upon the execution and the proceedings thereon, on request made by the official receiver for delivery of the goods, would be to preclude any proceedings being taken by the execution creditor under ord. 57, r. 12.—STERN v. TEGNER, C.A., 82.

3. Goods seized to protect security—Relief against seizure—Order as to giving up bill of sale—Jurisdiction—Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), s. 7.—The grantee of a bill of sale seized the goods upon default in payment of one of the instalments of interest. The warrant authorizing the bailiff to seize directed him to take and hold possession for the amount of interest in arrear. Upon a summons by the grantor for relief under section 7 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, the judge at chambers ordered that the grantee should give up the bill of sale upon the grantor paying the principal sum with the interest then in arrear.

Held, that, as the grantee had seized merely for the purpose of protecting his security, and not for the purpose of realizing it, the judge had no jurisdiction to order him to give up the bill of sale.

Ex parte Wickens, ante, p. 385, [1898] 1 Q. B. 543, distinguished.—ELLIS, EX PARTE, C.A., 531.

4. Seizure of goods—Entering into possession for purpose of realizing security—Non-production of last receipt for rent—Reasonable excuse—Relief against seizure—Jurisdiction to order bill of sale to be given up—Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), s. 7, sub-section 4.—Where the grantee of a bill of sale seizes the goods for the purpose of realizing his security, and the grantor makes an application under section 7 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, the judge has jurisdiction to order the bill of sale to be given up on payment of the principal sum and the interest then due.

Where the grantor of a bill of sale did not upon demand produce to the grantee a receipt for a quarter's rent which became due only a short time before, and of which the landlord had not yet required payment, Held (approving Ex parte Cotton, 32 W. R. 58, 11 Q. B. D. 301), that the grantor had not without reasonable excuse failed to produce the last receipt for rent within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 4, of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882.

Per Collins, L.J.—A grantee is not entitled under sub-section 4 to demand that the grantor shall send him his last receipt for rent by post.—WICKENS, EX PARTE, C.A., 385.

5. Validity—Address of grantees—Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), s. 9.—In a bill of sale the grantees were described as "The Staffordshire Financial Company, Limited," without any other description or any address being given.

Held, that the bill of sale was void, under section 9 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, as not in accordance with the form in the schedule to that Act.—ALTREE v. ALTREE, Q.B.D.

6. Validity—Filing of copy and affidavit—Date of execution—Omission from copy—Insertion in original and in affidavit—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 10, sub-section 2.—A bill of sale is not void because the copy of the bill of sale required to be filed by section 10, sub-section 2, of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, leaves the date of the execution of the bill of sale in blank, if the date is truly stated in the original bill of sale, and in the affidavit filed under the same section.—THOMAS v. ROBERTS, Q.B.D.

BUILDING SOCIETY:—

1. Fully paid-up shares—Loss written off by reducing shares—Resolution of special meeting— Ultra vires—Building Societies Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32), s. 1—Building Societies Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 42), ss. 7, 13, 16, 18—Building Societies Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 47), ss. 1 (f), 25 (2).—Section 18 of the Building Societies Act, 1874, confers upon "any society under this Act certified previously to the passing of this Act," a general power of altering its rules as to all matters affecting merely the rights of the members inter se.

A society certified after 1856, but before 1874, has, therefore, power to alter its rules so as to provide for losses incurred by reducing the shares; and it makes no difference whether this is done by amending the existing rules or by substituting a new set of rules.

Decision of Stirling, J., 45 W. R. 700, reversed.—STROHMENGER v. FINSBURY BOROUGH BUILDING SOCIETY, C.A., 69.

2. Unincorporated — Winding-up — Scheme of arrangement — Surplus assets — Priorities — Widows and children of deceased members—Building Societies Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32).—Rule 22 of a building society provided that "if more than one member shall give notice to withdraw at one time they shall be paid in rotation, according to the priority of notice; provided always that the widows and children of deceased members shall always have the precedence."

The rules also provided (clause 25) that, in case of a member dying, his shares and interest should belong to his executors or administrators, or other the person or persons thereinafter mentioned; that, when on the death of any member without leaving a will a sum of money not exceeding £50 should become payable, such sum should, in default of letters of administration being taken out to the deceased member, be paid to any person nominated by the deceased in writing (such person being husband, wife, father, mother, child, brother or sister, nephew or niece, of such member), and, in case there should be no such nomination, or the person so nominated should have died before the deceased member, or in case the member should have revoked such nomination, then such sum should be paid to the person who should appear to be entitled under the Statutes of Distributions to receive the same, without taking out letters of administration.

Held, on the winding up of the society, that the true construction of the rules was that, whenever there was a competition between persons who had given notice to withdraw their shares and the widows and children of deceased members whom the society was bound to recognize under clause 25, then the widows and children should always have precedence.

Held, therefore, that, under the scheme of arrangement, such widows and children were entitled to be paid in priority to the other shareholders of the society, such widows and children ranking inter se according to the dates of the deaths of the deceased members through whom they claimed.—WEST LONDON BUILDING SOCIETY, RE, C.A.

BURIAL:—

New burial-ground—Addition to an old burial-ground—Approval of Secretary of State—Burial Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 85), ss. 25, 26, 28—Burial Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 134), ss. 1, 6.—Under the Burial Act, 1852, a burial board can buy land or appropriate parish land, or accept a gift of land, for the purpose of a burial-ground without the preliminary sanction of a Secretary of State.

The restriction contained in section 6 of the Burial Act, 1853, as to the opening of any new burial-ground without the consent of a Secretary of State applies only to the "provision and user" of such burial-ground, and not to its acquisition by a burial board.

Consequently it is intra vires of a burial board, or their statutory successors, to acquire ground adjacent to their existing burial-ground as an addition to it without obtaining the approval of a Secretary of State.

So held by the Court of Appeal, reversing the decision of Byrne, J.—WARD v. PORTSMOUTH (MAYOR), C.A., 610.

CANADA, LAW of:—

1. Ontario — British North America Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 3), s. 92, sub-section 1, 4, 14—Powers of provincial legislature—Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1877, c. 139—Provincial bar—Power to issue patents of precedence.

Held, that, according to the true construction of the British North America Act, 1867, s. 92, sub-sections 1, 4, 14, Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1877, c. 139, which empowers the Lieutenant-Governor of the province to confer precedence by patents upon such members of the bar of the province as he may think fit to select, is intra vires of the provincial legislature.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR CANADA v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR ONTARIO, P.C.

2. Ontario—Company—Statutory duties of a corporation—Breach—Cause of action.—Where by an Act extending the powers of the respondent company certain duties and obligations were imposed on it for the benefit of its customers with a view to the reduction of the price of gas contingent on the amount of surplus net profit, but no pecuniary penalty was imposed for default and no right of action given to persons aggrieved, provision however being made for its accounts being audited by direction of the mayor of the corporation with whose assent the company was originally established,

Held, that no individual customer had a right of action against the company for non-compliance with the provisions of the Act. Such a right only arises where given by the Act, and especially so where the Act as in this case is in the nature of a private legislative bargain, and not one of public and general policy.—JOHNSTON TYPE FOUNDRY Co. v. TORONTO GAS CONSUMERS Co., P.C.

3. Ontario—Powers of provincial legislature—Appointment of Queen's Counsel—Powers of Lieutenant-Governor of province—Prerogative of Crown.—An Act of a provincial legislature empowering the Lieutenant-Governor to appoint by letters patent Queen's Counsel within the province, is within the limit of their legislative authority, and such appointments by the Lieutenant-Governor do not constitute an encroachment upon the prerogative of the Crown.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR CANADA v. ONTARIO ATTORNEY-GENERAL (No. 2), P.C.

4. Quebec—Underground wires—Power to lay wires underground for purpose of supplying electricity and gas—Right to excavate streets—Quebec Act (55 & 56 Vict. c. 77), s. 5—Construction.—Section 5 of the respondent company's incorporating Act (55 & 56 Vict. c. 77) empowered it on certain conditions (which have been complied with) to lay its wires underground as the same may be necessary, and in so many streets, squares, highways, lanes, and public places as may be deemed necessary for the purpose of supplying electricity and gas.

Held, that the power to open streets, that is, to break up their surface and excavate them, is plainly involved in this provision, and that an injunction obtained by the respondents to restrain the municipality from interfering therewith was properly granted.—MONTREAL (CITY OF) v. STANDARD LIGHT AND POWER Co., P.C.

Held, (1) that the proviso was not limited to such of the mines as the respondents possessed at the date of the agreement; and (2) that the respondents could not, by obtaining a supply of water gratis elsewhere, thereby deprive the appellants of their monopoly of supply.—KIMBERLEY WATERWORKS Co. v. DE BEERS CONSOLIDATED MINES, P.C.

CEYLON, LAW of:—

Registration—Priority—Mortgage bonds—Unregistered ante-nuptial settlement—Ceylon Land Registration Ordinance VIII. of 1863, s. 39.

Held, that under section 39 of the Ceylon Land Registration Ordinance VIII, of 1863, an unregistered deed of ante-nuptial settlement executed by a wife is postponed to subsequently registered mortgage bonds relating to the settled estates and jointly executed by both husband and wife, bonâ fide and for valuable consideration.—GAUDER v. DASSENAIKE, P.C.

CHARITY:—

1. Churchwardens—Income of charity estates—Banking account—Anticipation of rents—Charge on charitable property—Charitable Trusts Admendment Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 124), s. 29—Estates held on old parochial trusts, the origin of which was unknown, were in 1865 vested in trustees by a deed of appointment of new trustees upon trust to permit and suffer the churchwardens of St. B., in the City of London, to receive and take the rents as the same should from time to time grow due and be payable as formerly had been used, and for such charitable uses, intents, and purposes as the same had been usually employed by the parishioners of of the said parish, whether in or about the repairs of the church, the relief of the poor of the parish, or any other of the public affairs of the parish. The churchwardens kept an account with a bank headed as the account of the churchwardens, not mentioning their names, and for many years this account had been kept as a continuous account, an adverse balance at the end of one year being paid out of rents of subsequent years. From 1885 to 1888 the then churchwardens, there being a temporary diminution of income, obtained from the bank, without the sanction of the Charity Commissioners, advances amounting to £3,000, which were carried to the credit of the churchwardens in the account. In 1891 a scheme by the Charity Commissioners under the City of London Parochial Charities Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 36), came into effect, by which the estates were vested in the Official Trustee of Charity Lands, and the administration of the rents in the Trustees of the London Parochial Charities. The bank then sued the individual churchwardens in whose time the advances had been made for the advances; and the churchwardens brought an action against the Official Trustee of Charity Lands and the Trustees of the London Parochial Charities to be indemnified out of the rents against the claims of the bank.

Held, by Romer, J., that on the construction of the deed appointing new trustees, the churchwardens for the time being could only receive the rents as they became due and apply them, and had no power to anticipate the income so as to have a claim on the future income, and that their claim therefore failed:

Held, by the Court of Appeal, that whether this was a correct view or not the churchwardens' claim was defeated by the Charitable Trusts Amendment Act, 1855, s. 29, which prohibits any sale, mortgage, or charge of a charity estate without the approval of the Charity Commissioners.—FELL v. OFFICIAL TRUSTEE OF CHARITY LANDS, C.A.

2. Ecclesiastical charity—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), ss. 14, 70, 75.—A testatrix charged certain lands with the payment of £3 a year, to be paid on the feast day of St. Thomas the Apostle to the churchwardens of A., to be laid out by them in the purchase of flannel petticoats, stockings, or gowns to be given to six old and poor widows of the said parish whom they should judge to be the properest objects to receive the same, with preference to those who, not being disabled by infirmity or sickness, were most constant in their attendance on the public services of the church.

Held, that this was not an ecclesiastical charity within the meaning of section 75 of the Local Government Act, 1894, and that new trustees might be appointed under section 14 of that Act by the parish council, in the place of the churchwardens.—ROSS CHARITY, RE, Ch.D. North, J., 27.

3. "Ecclesiastical charity"—Member of Church of England as such—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), ss. 70, 75.—The founder of a charity required that the objects of it should be selected from persons who should have (1) regularly attended Divine service at the parish church for a fixed period; (2) been partakers of the Holy Communion; (3) lived a godly, righteous, and sober life, to the glory of God's holy Name; and that the trustees should be members of the Church of England.

Held that this was a charity for the members of the Church of England as such; and was therefore an ecclesiastical charity within the meaning of section 75 of the Local Government Act, 1894.—PERRY ALMSHOUSES, RE, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 360.

4. Mortgage of property of—Jurisdiction of Charity Commissioners—"Cathedral, collegiate, chapter, or other schools" — Words "ejusdem generis" — Charitable Trusts Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 137), s. 62.—By section 62 of the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, it is enacted that that Act shall not extend to certain kinds of charitable institutions therein specifically mentioned, but the said section concludes with a proviso that "the said exemption shall not extend to cathedral, collegiate, chapter, or other schools."

Held, that such proviso ought to be so construed as to apply only to schools ejusdem generis with cathedral, collegiate, and chapter schools.—STOCKPORT RAGGED SCHOOLS, RE, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 455.

5. Mortgage—Real estate held in trust for charity—Sanction of court—Practice—Service of petition—Romilly's Act (52 Geo. 3, c. 101).—The court may sanction a scheme providing (inter alia) for the mortgage of real estate belonging to a charity.

It is unnecessary to serve the Attorney-General with a petition under Romilly's Act for the sanction by the court of a scheme providing for the sale of real estate belonging to a charity and the purchase of new premises with the proceeds of sale, and additional moneys to be raised by mortgage of the trust property; but the trustees of the charity other than the petitioning trustees should be made respondents to the petition.—STOCKPORT RAGGED SCHOOLS (No. 2), RE, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

COMPANY:—

1. Articles of association—Winding up—Right of contributory to petition for—Limitations imposed by articles—Validity—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 79, 82.—It is not competent for a limited company to curtail by its articles of association the statutory right of any of its members to present a winding-up petition to the court.—PEVERIL GOLD MINES, RE, C.A., 198.

2. Debentures—Charge on all "property"—Uncalled capital.—In a charge created by debentures issued by a limited company on all present and future property of the company, the word "property" does not include uncalled capital of the company.—RUSSIAN SPRATT'S PATENT, RE, JOHNSON v. RUSSIAN SPRATT'S PATENT, C.A., 514.

3. Debentures—Equitable security—Option to call for debenture.—An option to call at any time for a specified amount of debentures in satisfaction of a promissory note may be exercised at any time while the issue is unexhausted. The holder of such a security is in equity a debenture-holder.

In re Queensland Land and Coal Co., Davis v. Martin, 42 W. R. 600, [1894] 3 Ch. 181, followed.—PEGGE v. NEATH TRAMWAYS CO., Ch.D. North, J., 243.

4. Debentures—No profits—Debenture interest paid out of capital—No obligation to recoup capital out of profits of subsequent year before paying dividend.—The principal mine of a mining company fell in, rendering further working impossible without a previous expenditure of large sums of money in re-opening it. To obtain the necessary funds for this purpose the capital of the company was increased by the issue of shares and debentures, and ultimately the mine was re-opened and working recommenced. From the date of the issue of the debentures to the date of the re-opening of the mine the company made no profits and the interest on the debentures was paid out of capital. When the working recommenced profits were made and the debenture interest and all outgoings were paid out of income. The directors then proposed to pay a dividend out of the profits for the year, and to carry over the remainder to a sinking fund which they opened with the object of recouping the amount paid out of capital for interest on the debentures. Upon a motion for an injunction to restrain them from paying a dividend out of profits until the amount paid out of capital for debenture interest in previous years had been repaid,

Held, that the company were not bound to apply profits in replacing the amount paid out of capital for debenture interest in previous years before declaring a dividend.—BOSANQUET v. ST. JOHN D'EL REY MINING CO., Ch.D. North, J.,

5. Debentures—Payment by instalments—Specific performance of agreement—Agreement to lend money—Damages.—Specific performance of a contract to lend money will not be granted, and this is equally so where the agreement on the one side is to lend money for a term of years, and on the other to give the lender certain specified security for his loan.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (45 W. R. 467, [1897] 1 Q. B. 692) affirmed.—SOUTH AFRICAN TERRITORIES v. WALLINGTON, H.L., 545.

6. Debenture—Power to appoint receiver—Fiduciary power—Jurisdiction of court.—Each of a series of debentures issued by a company and ranking pari passu, contained a condition that in a certain event a named debenture-holder should have power to appoint a receiver. The event having happened, that debenture-holder, who was a large shareholder in the company, appointed a receiver, not for the protection of the debenture-holders, but in the interest of the company and its shareholders.

Held, that the power was a fiduciary one, and must be exercised in the interest of the debenture-holders as such, and that the court had jurisdiction to interfere for their protection by appointing another receiver. Receiver appointed accordingly.—MASKELYNE BRITISH TYPEWRITER, RE, STUART v. MASKELYNE BRITISH TYPEWRITER, C.A., 294.

7. Debentures — Priority between equitable mortgagees — Notice — Negligence of first mortgagee in custody of deeds.—A company had created by way of equitable mortgage certain debentures, which were secured by a floating charge on all the property of the company. There was a condition that the company should not be at liberty to create any charge upon its freehold or leasehold property in priority to the debentures. The title-deeds of such property were left in the possession of the company, and were, subsequently to the issue of the debentures, deposited with the company's bank to secure an overdraft. The bank had then no notice of the existence of the charge created by the debentures. In the liquidation of the company the bank claimed to have a prior charge, and to retain the title-deeds until their debt was paid.

Held, that though, as between equitable incumbrancers, the general rule is that, where other equities are equal, the first in time has priority, that in the present case, having regard to the possession of the title-deeds and other circumstances, the bank had the better equity, and were entitled to priority for their charge.—CASTELL & BROWN, RE, UNION BANK OF LONDON, EX PARTE, Ch.D. Romer, J., 248.

8. Debentures—Redemption—"Redeemable" sinking fund—Prospectus.—Debentures issued by a company provided that the company should carry to the credit of a sinking fund in each half-year the sum of £2,500 which should be applied in redeeming at a specified premium, on the 1st of January and the 1st of July in each year, so many of the debentures issued as the sum from time to time standing to the credit of the sinking fund should suffice to pay off, the particular debentures to be redeemed on each occasion being determined by half-yearly drawings. The prospectus which the company had previously issued, inviting subscriptions for the debentures, stated that they were to be "redeemable within seventeen years by half-yearly drawings on the 1st of January and the 1st July in each year by the application of a sinking fund of £5,000 per annum."

Held, that, even if the prospectus could be looked at in order to ascertain the contract between the company and the debenture-holders, the word "redeemable" meant only that the debentures were to be liable to redemption during the seventeen years, but that there was no obligation upon the company that they should all be redeemed within that period.

Semble, however, that the debentures contained the whole contract between the company and the debenture-holders, and that the prospectus could not be looked at for the purpose of interpreting the contract.—CHICAGO GRANARIES CO., RE, MORRISON v. SAME, Ch.D. North, J.

9. Debenture-holders—Floating security—Execution creditor—Sheriff—Priority.—A trading company issued first mortgage debentures payable on the 31st of December, 1898. They were secured by a floating charge upon all the property of the company. Indorsed on the debentures was the provision that they should become payable "if an order is made, or an effective resolution is passed, for winding up the company"; also, "whenever the trustee of the within-mentioned trust deed shall have entered upon the mortgaged premises comprised in the trust deed, or appointed a receiver or receivers under the provisions therein contained." A further condition was that no part of the property subject to the security should be dealt with except in the ordinary course of business of the company.

The debenture-holders were entitled to the benefits and subject to the conditions of the said trust deed, which vested in a trustee for the benefit of the debenture-holders the leasehold property and the uncalled capital of the company, and gave to such trustee the right to call upon the company to vest in him all the property of the company, but the company was left free—until the trustee or the debenture-holders took action on the happening of any of certain events contemplated by the deed, one of which was "If any execution, sequestration, extent, or other process of any court or authority is sued out against the property of the company for any sum whatsoever," or until the happening of any of the events contemplated by the terms of the debentures—to carry on the business and deal, but only in the ordinary course of business, with the assets of the company.

The plaintiffs obtained judgment against the company for a sum of money, and a writ of fi. fa. was issued, under which the sheriff seized certain goods in the possession of the company which were charged by the debentures. The claimant then, for himself and the other debenture-holders, claimed the goods as theirs under the debenture securities. The sheriff thereupon interpleaded. The due date of the debentures had not then arrived, nor had any winding-up resolution been passed. No receiver had been appointed, nor had the trustee put in force his powers under the trust deed.

Held, that the rights of the debenture-holders prevailed against those of the execution creditor. The seizure under the execution on the judgment was not a dealing by the company in the ordinary course of business within the condition indorsed on the debentures. The security had become enforceable by reason of the fact that an execution had been sued out against the company. The goods seized were charged with the payment of the amount of the debentures, which exceeded the value of the goods, and the judgment debtor had therefore no interest in the property seized available to satisfy the judgment debt.—DAVEY v. WILLIAMSON, Q.B.D., 571.

10. Directors—Breach of trust—Ultra vires—Parties to sue—Laches—Statute of Limitations—Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59), s. 8—Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincoln (Various Powers) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. cxiv.), ss. 45, 47.—In July, 1890, the plaintiffs contracted with the Railways and General Co. (Limited) for the sale of certain stock in the Wrexham, Mold, and Connah's Quay Railway. The real purchaser, however, was the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincoln Railway, and the money was paid by that company in two sums, the larger on the 5th of August, and the smaller on the 10th of October, 1890. These payments were then ultra vires. But by their Act of 1891 they were authorized to subscribe towards the undertaking of the Wrexham Co., and to hold shares therein, and a resolution authorizing the Manchester Co. to so subscribe was agreed to the day after the Act passed. The books of the Manchester Co. did not accurately represent the facts. The writ was issued on the 6th of August, 1896, claiming against three of the directors repayment to the company of these sums.

Held, (1) that the purchase was not a subscription within the meaning of the Act of 1891, and was therefore ultra vires.

(2) That, as to the larger sum, the writ not having been issued within six years and no fraud being alleged, the Statute of Limitations afforded a good defence.

(3) That, as to the smaller sum, the evidence showed that the plaintiffs had purchased shares to enable them to bring the action, and that they were aware of the purchase by the Manchester Co. before October, 1890, and that, under the circumstances, therefore, the action ought to have been brought by the company and not by the plaintiffs.—WHITWAM v. WATKIN, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

11. Directors — Qualification — Casual vacancy— Calls on shares—Invalidity.—A clause in the articles of association of the A. Co. provided that any acts done at any meeting of the directors should, notwithstanding that it should be afterwards discovered that there was some defect in the appointment of such directors, or that they were disqualified, be as valid as if every such person had been duly appointed and was qualified to be a director.

N., who had been duly appointed a director of the A. Co., transferred all his shares, and for a few days was without a director's qualification. After re-acquiring his qualification he, without being formally re-elected, acted as a director, and, in conjunction with his co-directors, made a call on the shares.

Held (reversing Ridley, J.), that the acts done by N. in his capacity of a director were validated by the clause in the articles of association (as above set out).

Further, the clause operates not only as between the company and its members, but also as between the company and third parties.

Howbeach Coal Co. v. Teague, 8 W. R. 264, 5 H. & N. 151, explained.—DAWSON v. AFRICAN TRADING CO., C.A., 132.

12. Mortgage—Receiver — Principal and agent— Liability for goods ordered.—By an indenture of second mortgage all the land and property, and all the business and undertaking of a limited company were conveyed to the appellant as trustee for the second debenture-holders. By this deed it was provided that the trustee might appoint a receiver of the mortgaged premises, who should have power to enter into possession and carry on the business, and that the person so appointed should be the agent of the company, who alone should be liable for his acts and defaults. The trustee appointed K. receiver, the instrument appointing him containing certain regulations as to payment of money received into the appellant's bank, and that cheques drawn by him should be countersigned by the appellant's solicitor, who was also chairman of the company. Immediately after his appointment the receiver entered into possession and carried on the business, and goods were ordered by him signed in the company's name, with the addition "K., Receiver." Soon after the appointment of the receiver, an order was made for the compulsory winding up of the company, and a liquidator was appointed, who, however, did not displace the receiver. K. continued to carry on the business, and, in the course of doing so, ordered goods from the respondents in the abovementioned form.

Held, in an action brought by the respondents against the trustee for the price of the goods supplied to the receiver's order, that the receiver was agent for the mortgagors (the company), and that the trustee was under no liability.

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1896] 1 Q. B. 669) reversed.—GOSLING v. GASKELL, H.L., 208.

13. Reduction of capital—Capital lost or unrepresented by available assets—Arrears of dividends on preference shares—Inequality of reduction—Conversion of preference into ordinary shares.—An incorporated society whose articles of association did not give power to modify rights, or to subdivide shares, or to reduce capital, having issued both preference and ordinary shares of £5 each, finding that, owing partly to the defalcations and mismanagement of a former manager and partly to depreciation of property, its capital had been lost or was unrepresented by available assets to the extent of a large amount, and also that the arrears of dividends on the preference shares amounted to a considerable sum, added to its articles of association articles for the above-mentioned purposes, and then prepared a scheme which was approved by a majority of each class of shareholders, under which some ordinary shares which had been transferred to the society were cancelled, the preference shares were reduced to £2 shares and then divided into £1 shares, the ordinary shares were reduced to shares of 10s. each and then consolidated into £1 shares, the arrears of dividends on the preference shares were cancelled, and the preference shares were made to rank pari passu with and to have only the rights and privileges of ordinary shares.

The society then petitioned the court to confirm the reduction of its capital and to approve minutes for registration. The petition was unopposed.

The court confirmed the reduction and approved the minutes.—NATIONAL DWELLINGS SOCIETY, RE, Ch.D. North, J.

14. Register—Inspection—Right to take extracts— Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 32.—The right of inspection under section 32 of the Companies Act, 1862, includes the right of taking copies of the register.—BOORD v. AFRICAN CONSOLIDATED LAND CO., Ch.D. North, J., 150.

15. Sale of undertaking—Bonus to directors— Ultra vires—Notice of purpose of extraordinary meeting—Sufficiency of notice—Companies Clauses Act, 1845 (8 Vict. c. 16), ss. 71, 85, 86.—The directors of the C. Co. entered into a provisional agreement for the sale of their undertaking and assets to the T. Co. One of the terms of the agreement was that a lump sum should be paid to the directors and secretary of the C. Co. as compensation for loss of office. The agreement was conditional upon its adoption by the shareholders of the C. Co. in general meeting. The notice convening the meeting stated that the purpose of the meeting was to consider and, if advisable, approve the terms of the agreement.

Held, (1) that the agreement was not ultra vires on account of the compensation to be paid to the directors and secretary; but (2) that the notice convening the meeting did not sufficiently disclose the nature of the business to be considered at the meeting, and did not, therefore, comply with the provisions of section 71 of the Companies Clauses Act, 1845.

16. Shares—Contract—Conditional application for shares—Repudiation—Opposing winding up petition— Void contract.—A conditional applicant for shares in a company before allotment, to whom shares are allotted, may repudiate his shares if the conditions specified in his application are not fulfilled, as there is no consensus ad idem, and therefore there is no contract between the company and the applicant.

This right of repudiation is not taken away by his appearance on a petition to wind up the company as a contributory opposing such a petition.—BRINSMEAD & Co., RE, TOMLIN'S CASE, Ch.D. Wright, J., 171.

17. Shares — Contract — Fully paid-up shares — Registration of subsidiary contract only— Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25.—The contract to be registered under section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, prior to the issue of shares as fully paid must, in order to comply with that section, set forth all the material terms of such contract.

Therefore, where a subsidiary agreement only was filed, which recited merely that by another specified agreement, "for the considerations therein mentioned," it was agreed that certain shares should be allotted as fully paid up,

Held, that such registration was insufficient to protect the allottees.—KARASKHOMA SYNDICATE, RE, C.A., 37.

18. Shares — Contract — Fully paid-up shares — Statement of consideration—Particularity—Rectification of register—Order—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25.—The contract to be registered under section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, prior to the issue of shares as fully paid, must, in order to comply with that section, describe with some degree of particularity the consideration given for the shares. A mere recital in the filed contract to the effect that, by a previous unfiled agreement, it was agreed to allot the shares in consideration of the sale to the company of "the businesses and property mentioned in the first part of the schedule" to the previous agreement and "the leasehold hereditaments, short particulars of which are set out in the second part" of the same schedule, does not describe the consideration with sufficient particularity.

Form of order for rectification of register.—MAYNARDS, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 346.

19. Shares—Contract—Option of taking shares—Voluntary liquidation—Damages for breach of contract.—The fact that a company has given to any person the option of taking its unissued shares at a future date at an agreed price does not fetter the company in any way in the conduct of its business in the interval, and it may exercise all the powers conferred upon it by the memorandum of articles of association, and either dispose of its business to another company or agree to a voluntary liquidation.

After liquidation proceedings have commenced a person holding an option of taking shares is entitled, if he chooses to exercise his option, to have shares issued to him and to be put on the list of contributories, and if the liquidators refuse to do so, the measure of his damages is his share in the existing assets of the company after deducting the price he had agreed to pay for the shares.—HIRSCH v. BURNS, H.L.

20. Trade-name—Similarity—Name of new company incorporating name of existing company—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 20.—In 1888 the M. Co. and the N. Co. were carrying on business as separate limited companies, and continued to do so until 1897. In the latter year the N. Co. sold its business to R., who converted it into a company under the registered title of the N. and M. Co. The M. Co. having brought an action against the N. and M. Co. claiming an injunction, Held, that the N. and M. Co. must be restrained from using a name which included the name of the M. Co., and so nearly resembled the same as to be calculated to deceive the public, or induce the belief that the business carried on by the defendant company was the same as the business carried on by the M. Co., or in any way connected therewith.

The registration of the name of a limited company which includes the name of a town or place gives no monopoly to that company of the particular name so as to prevent its use by any other limited company, provided such use is not calculated to deceive the public.—MANCHESTER BREWERY CO. v. NORTH CHESHIRE AND MANCHESTER BREWERY CO., C.A., 515.

21. Winding up—Arrears of interest—Statutory powers—Specialty debt—Statute of Limitations (21 Jac. 1, c. 16)—Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), s. 3—Companies Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 118), ss. 22, 23.—Section 27 of the Companies Clauses Act, 1863, provides for the recovery of interest in arrear by action or suit against the company. The issue of warrants for arrears of interest does not operate as a satisfaction of the claims for interest. The cause of action is therefore in respect of a specialty debt, and is not within the Statute of Limitations, but of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, and the period of limitation is therefore twenty years and not six.—CORNWALL MINERALS RAILWAY CO., RE, Ch.D. Vaughan Williams, J., 5.

22. Winding up—Companies Arrangement Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 104)—Colonial creditor—Pleading—Foreign court.—Although the Companies Arrangement Act, 1870, extends to all creditors when their rights are in question in the courts of the United Kingdom, that Act does not extend to the Colonies; and therefore the proceedings in our courts cannot be pleaded in Victoria as a defence to an action by a Victorian creditor.

Gibbs v. Société des Métaux, 25 Q. B. D. 399, 39 W. R. Dig. 57, approved.—NEW ZEALAND LOAN AGENCY v. MORRISON, P.C., 239.

23. Winding up—Contributory—Removal of name —Fraud—Mistake as to identity of company.—Where a person is fraudulently induced to take shares in a company by reason of the misrepresentation that it is another company of very similar name, there is no contract at all, and he is entitled to have his name removed from the list of contributories in the winding up, though he has taken no steps to repudiate his shares before the company was wound up.

23A. Winding up—County court—Jurisdiction—Statement of affairs—Refusal of director to submit statement—Companies (Winding up) Act, 1890, s. 7. —Where a company is wound up in a county court, and the official receiver has required a director of the company to submit a statement of affairs of the company under section 7 of the Companies (Winding up) Act, 1890, if the director refuses, the county court judge has jurisdiction, notwithstanding sub-section 5 of section 7, to make an order directing the director to submit the statement.—NEW PAR CONSOLS, RE (No. 2), Q.B.D.

24. Winding up—Debentures—Floating charge—Preferential payment — Retrospective — Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 62)—Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Amendment Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 19).—The Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1897, is not retrospective in its action, so that those persons who, under the Act, are given priority for their wages, &c., over the debenture-holders are not entitled to the benefit of the Act where a receiver was appointed by the debenture-holders before the date when the Act came into force.—WAVERLEY TYPEWRITER, RE, D'ESTERRE v. WAVERLEY TYPEWRITER, Ch.D. Wright, J., 685.

25. Winding up—Defunct company—Petition—Advertisement—Companies Act, 1880, s. 7—Companies Winding-up Rules, 1890, r. 35.—Where the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies has struck the name of a defunct company off the register under section 7 of the Companies Act, 1880, the proper remedy of a creditor is to petition for a winding-up order. In such a case, special directions as to service of the petition must be obtained, as neither rule 35 of the Companies Winding-up Rules, 1890, nor the provisions as to service in the Act of 1880, apply.—ANGLO-AMERICAN EXPLORATION CO., RE, Ch.D. Vaughan Williams, J.

26. Winding up — Directors' fees — Creditors — Articles of association—Fixed remuneration—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 38 (7).—Where articles of association fix the fees of directors at a specific sum they are entitled to prove in the winding up with other creditors for such fees as were due at the date of the liquidation; for the fees being fixed by the articles, they were impliedly part of the contract between the company and the directors when they accepted their office. The directors therefore stand in the position of ordinary creditors, and not of members of the company, in regard to those fees; and section 38, sub-section 7, of the Companies Act, 1862, does not apply.

27. Winding up—Distribution of surplus assets—Articles of association—Repayment—Unequal contribution — Equalization. — If the articles of association of a company provide that, in the event of winding up, if the surplus assets (after payment of all debts and liabilities) shall be insufficient to repay the whole of its paid-up capital, such surplus assets shall be distributed so that, as nearly as can be, the losses shall be borne by members in proportion to the capital paid, or which ought to have been paid, at the commencement of the winding up other than amounts paid in advance of calls, and if at the commencement of the winding up some of the shares are fully and some partly paid up, the amounts paid up on the shares must be equalized by a call, actual or in account, on such partly-paid shareholders, and when the amounts paid by all the shareholders is thus made equal, the surplus assets are to be distributed equally.—ANGLO-AUSTALIAN CORPORATION OF WEST AUSTRALIA, RE, Ch.D. Wright, J., 413.

28. Winding up—Distribution of surplus capital—Fully paid and partly paid shares—Nominal amount of shares—Equalization—Unlimited liability.—In the case of a company not constituted under the Companies Acts, reference must be made to the deed or instrument under which it is constituted as to the distribution of surplus assets in the winding up. If the deed or instrument contains any provision with regard to the surplus, effect must be given to it; but a provision governing dividends ought not of itself to govern a distribution of surplus. If the capital of the company is limited by shares of an equal or commensurable amount, the same consequences ought to follow as if it were so limited under the Companies Acts.

Thus, where a company was constituted under a deed of settlement in 1835, and one of the clauses of that deed provided that upon a winding up, the residue, after payment of debts, &c., "was to be divided among the several proprietors for the time being in proportion to their respective shares," and part of the shareholders had paid for their shares in full, and others in part only: on the winding up of the company after payment of all debts and return of the paid-up capital, the surplus should be distributed in proportion to the nominal amount of the shares without regard to the manner in which dividends were payable or had been paid.

29. Winding up—Memorandum of association—Ancillary clauses — Substratum gone — "Just and equitable"—Companies Act, 1862, (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 79, sub-section 5.—A company formed to carry on a temporary business as its main object, but whose memorandum of association also stated other object clauses, not as defining a succession of objects different to the main object, but as referring to matters incidental to it, should be wound up and its surplus assets distributed among the shareholders by its directors, when the temporary business which was its main object has been accomplished, for it would be ultra vires to carry on any other business mentioned in the ancillary clauses.

Where, however, the directors propose to carry on such ancillary business instead of winding up the company, the court, on a shareholder's petition, will make a compulsory order.

30. Winding up — Misfeasance — Promoters — Directors—Secret profit—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63), s. 10.—In January, 1893, a syndicate of thirty-three members, of whom four were the founders and trustees as well as members, was formed to purchase the property known as "Olympia," then belonging to a company in liquidation, with a view to the resale thereof, either to a company to be registered under the Companies Acts, or to some other purchaser. Each member signed a form of agreement which, after reciting the object of the syndicate, provided that each subscriber was to subscribe a certain amount, paying a deposit on signing the agreement, and that the trustees were to do their best to purchase "Olympia" on behalf of the syndicate, and to resell it at such reasonable advance in price as would cover the charges and expenses and yield a bonus for division amongst the subscribers. The trustees also had power to purchase as an interim investment, any first mortgage bonds of the company in liquidation; and the syndicate accordingly purchased certain debentures for £100,000, and a second mortgage for £10,000, on the property, at very low prices. In February, 1893, "Olympia" was sold by auction by the chief clerk in the debenture-holders' action against the company in liquidation, to one of the trustees of the syndicate, acting for the others, for the sum of £140,000, which was sufficient, after paying the expenses of the liquidation, to pay in respect of the debentures and mortgage a sum giving a profit of over £20,000. By an agreement of March, 1893, entered into between the trustees of the syndicate and a trustee for an intended company (registered on the same day as Olympia (Limited)), the property was sold to the company for £180,000. One of the objects of Olympia (Limited), as stated in its memorandum of association, was to adopt and carry into effect the agreement of March, 1893, which was afterwards adopted by the company; and in a prospectus issued to the public, inviting subscriptions for shares and debentures, the fact was disclosed that the directors were also the vendors. The price paid by them for the property, and the price to be paid by the company was also disclosed, and the date and names of the parties to the agreement of March, 1893, were stated; but the profit made out of the debentures and mortgage was not stated. A summons was taken out by the official receiver and liquidator asking for a declaration that the four syndicate trustees were guilty of misfeasance or breach of trust in that they, being promoters and directors of the company, had secretly obtained and retained for their own use out of the purchase-money paid by the company for Olympia the sum of £6,341 (being the share of the four syndicate trustees in the profit of £20,000 made out of the debentures and mortgage); and that they might be ordered to pay that sum with interest.

Held, that the four syndicate trustees owed a duty to the company to inform the company of the profits which the four syndicate trustees had made at the expense of the company; that the fact that the company which had thus been kept in the dark as to these profits could not now rescind was no bar to relief; and that the four syndicate trustees were jointly and severally liable to replace the sum of £6,341.—OLYMPIA, RE, C.A.

31. Winding up—Mortgage of uncalled capital—Debenture-holders—Unsecured creditors—Priority—Companies Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 76), s. 5.—The M. Co. had power under its memorandum and articles of association to borrow money and issue debentures charged on (inter alia) its uncalled capital. Before this power was exercised the company, by special resolution, declared that a portion of the uncalled capital should "not be capable of being called up except in the event of and for the purpose of the company being wound up in accordance with the provisions of the Companies Act, 1879." The directors afterwards created and issued debentures charged on the company's undertaking and property, "including its uncalled capital for the time being." The company having gone into liquidation, and a winding-up order having been made, the liquidator called on the contributories for payment of that portion of the capital (the reserve capital) to be called up only in the event of a winding up.

The assets of the company, including the reserve capital, not being sufficient to pay the costs of the winding up and the creditors of the company, the debenture-holders claimed to have a valid first charge on the reserve capital, and to be entitled to be paid in priority to the other creditors and to the costs of the winding up.

Held, that the company had no power to create any charge on that portion of its capital which could only be called up in the event of and for the purpose of the company being wound up.

Held, on the facts (reversing the decision of Wright. J., ante, p. 314), that the defendant was under no obligation to account to the company.

Semble, money had and received to the use of the company, but not its property till received by the promoter, is included in the term "moneys or property of the company" in section 10 of the Winding up Act, 1890.—SALE HOTEL CO., RE, HESKETH'S CASE, C.A., 617.

The A. Co. was ordered to be wound up by the court, and the G. Co., being insolvent, passed an extraordinary resolution for voluntary winding up.

Held, that section 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875, did not enable the liquidator of the G. Co. to set

CONSPIRACY:—

Legal injury—Combination to induce a person not to employ another—Conspiracy to do an act not amounting to an actionable wrong—Employer and workmen.—A conspiracy to do certain acts (not being criminally punishable) gives a right of action only where the acts agreed to be done, and in fact done, would, had they been without preconcert, have involved a civil injury to the plaintiff, for which he would have had a right of action.

CONTRACT:—

1. Building—Contract abandoned by builder—Completion by building owner—Right to sue on a quantum meruit—Evidence from which new contract may be inferred.—A builder who contracts to erect certain buildings for a lump sum, and who, after performing part of the contract, abandons it, thus necessitating the completion of the buildings by the building owner, cannot sue the latter on a quantum meruit for the work done unless there is some evidence from which the inference can be drawn that there was a fresh contract to pay on that basis.

Munro v. Butt, 8 E. & Bl. 738, 7 W. R. C. L. Dig. 19, followed.—SUMPTER v. HEDGES, C.A., 454.

2. Building agreement—Default of builder—Re-entry of landowner—Damages.—A builder having made default under a building agreement, the landowner exercised the right reserved to him in such a case by the agreement to re-enter and take possession of the land and premises, with all the buildings, plant, and materials thereon.

Held, that an action would lie at the suit of the landowner against the builder to recover damages for the builder's breach of the agreement.—MARSHALL v. MACKINTOSH, Q.B.D., 580.

3. Employment—Breach of—Music-hall artiste—"Perform every evening"—Sunday—"Not perform at any club"—"Perform," meaning of.—The plaintiff K., a music-hall artiste, entered into contracts with each of the three defendant companies by which she agreed to perform for ten weeks certain, commencing at a certain date, every evening at the time notified by the management, in "her usual entertainment as mimic" in two of the contracts, "as singer and mimic" in the other, at a salary of £8 per week in respect of each hall, subject to the following conditions (inter alia)—viz., "that the said artiste shall not perform before nor during this engagement at any theatre, music-hall, club, concert, or place of entertainment within one mile of the said music-halls respectively." At the end of the contract was this clause: "In the event of the above-named artiste not observing these conditions in every respect, the company shall have the option of cancelling this agreement." During the fulfilment of the engagement she went to a smoking concert at a certain club one Sunday evening within a mile of these music-halls by invitation. Nobody except members and their guests were admitted to this club, and no admission money was paid. At this concert she sang a song and danced for a few minutes. The following night she performed at the halls, but at one of them the manager asked if she had sung at the club, and she replied she had done so. He told her it was against the rules, and that she must not do it again. The following night a letter was handed her cancelling the three engagements, and signed by the manager of the halls. These actions were then brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for wrongful dismissal and for breach of contract.

Held, that the word "engagement" did not include Sundays, that day in such contracts being a dies non. That the performance was not within the meaning of the word "perform" as contemplated by the parties, for the plaintiff did not use her powers of mimicry. That, although singing was included in one contract, singing before a private audience such as the present case was not a performance.—KELLY v. LONDON PAVILION, Q.B.D.

4. Evidence — Admissibility — Parol evidence.—Parol evidence cannot be said to be improperly admitted as contradicting or varying a written agreement, when it relates to the circumstances under which the plaintiff's name was appended to a document which was no part of the agreement, but which was placed before him for signature by the defendant after the agreement was concluded.—AUSTRALASIA (BANK) v. PALMER, P.C.

5. Licence—Revocation—Breach of contract by licensor—Licensee's right of action—Posting advertisements on hoarding.—Plaintiff and defendant agreed orally that defendant should let his wall to plaintiff, for bill-posting, at £2 10s. a year, plaintiff to erect a hoarding, on which the bills were to be posted. Plaintiff erected the hoarding, posted bills and made several payments. Defendant gave notice to plaintiff that the hoarding must be removed, and nearly a month later defendant took it down.

In an action to recover damages for breach of contract,

Held, that, although the permission to post bills was a licence, and therefore, not being by deed, was revocable, the action was maintainable for breach of contract, and therefore plaintiff was wrongly nonsuited.

Wood v. Leadbitter, [1845] 13 M. & W. 838, distinguished.—KERRISON v. SMITH, Q.B.D.

6. Master and servant—Wine merchants' traveller—Negative stipulation against doing other business—Injunction.—The defendant, under the articles of agreement regulating his employment as traveller for the plaintiffs, a firm of wine merchants, had bound himself to devote the whole of his attention and time during the usual business hours to the business of the plaintiffs, and not directly or indirectly to employ himself in any other business or transact any business with any other person than the plaintiffs for a period of ten years. There was no provision enabling the defendant to determine his employment, but he assumed to do so by writing a letter giving notice of his intention to leave, and entered the service of a rival firm. The plaintiffs moved for an injunction to restrain him from thus engaging himself in any other business than that of the plaintiffs' under his contract with them.

Held, that the negative stipulations in the contract were unreasonable, and ought not to be enforced.—EHRMANN v. BARTHOLOMEW, Ch.D. Romer, J., 509.

7. Restraint of trade—Covenant—"Neighbourhood"—Injuncton.—By an agreement dated the 18th of September, 1893, the defendant sold his retail milk business and goodwill to the defendant Stride, and covenanted "not to employ any one or retail milk on his own account in the neighbourhood of Southampton or Norham." On a breach of this covenant the county court judge granted an injunction in the terms of the covenant. The defendant appealed on the grounds that the covenant was wider than was necessary to protect the plaintiff, and therefore void, and that the injunction was bad, not being sufficiently definite in showing exactly where the defendant could not trade.

Held, that the covenant was not too wide to protect the plaintiff, and that the injunction following the terms of the covenant was not too indefinite as the parties must know its meaning, and that the word "neighbourhood" meant immediate neighbourhood.—STRIDE v. MARTIN, Q.B.D.

8. Sale by private treaty—Tender—"Highest net tender."—The liquidator of the H. Co. (in liquidation) offered for sale certain royalties on coal measures, and undertook to accept the "highest net tender" he received. The S. Co., by their agents, offered such a sum as would "exceed by £200 the amount offered by the other intending purchaser."

Held, that such an offer did not amount to a tender at all, and was therefore not binding on the liquidator.—SOUTH HETTON COAL CO. v. HASWELL, C.A., 355.

Tenant for life and remainderman—Custom of the manor—Leases for lives—No right of renewal—Arbitrary fines on renewal.—A tenant for life of a manor is entitled to use and enjoy his life estate according to the custom of the manor, and although he is seised of a limited interest only, yet as lord of the manor he may grant such estate as is authorized by the custom of the manor, notwithstanding that the interest so granted may continue longer than his own. Accordingly, where it is the custom of the manor for the lord to grant the copyhold lands of the manor on leases for lives, for the fines on renewal to be arbitrary, and for the tenants to have no right of renewal, a tenant for life unimpeachable for waste who is lord of the manor can grant valid leases for lives to the tenants, and is entitled as against the remaindermen to the whole of the moneys received by him in respect of the fines on renewal paid to him by the tenants during the continuance of his life estate.—MEDOWS, RE, NORIE v. BENNETT, *Ch.D. COPYRIGHT:—

1. Catalogue—List of articles for sale—Injunction.—A chemist and druggist carrying on business in a provincial town prepared and registered a catalogue of articles, medicines, and drugs sold by him, arranged under various headings and sub-headings, which contained under the heading "Drugs and Chemicals, including Veterinary Medicines and Photographic Chemicals," an alphabetical list, fifteen pages long, of such articles with their prices, and under the heading "Patent Medicines and Proprietary Preparations. Any preparation not in stock will be procured with as little delay as possible," an alphabetical list, twelve pages long, of such remedies with their prices. A limited company carrying on several businesses in the same town added a drug and dispensing department, and inserted in their catalogue copies of the abovementioned headings and lists from the chemist's catalogue, omitting two preparations only. They also copied from his catalogue several other entries. The copying was admitted.

On a motion for an injunction to restrain the company from infringing the chemist's copyright in his catalogue it was contended that mere dry lists of articles for sale with their prices could not be the subjects of copyright.

Held, that the lists were subjects of copyright, and an injunction was granted accordingly.—COLLIS v. CATER, Ch.D. North, J.

Public hospital—Honorary medical officer of—Post-mortem examination and attendance at inquest by order of coroner—Right of medical officer to recover fees—Coroners Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 71), s. 22.—A hospital chiefly intended for children, was founded to meet the requirements of a large population in a particular district and was free for the admission of poor patients from that district. It had a committee of management, governors—who were the subscribers—medical men, committees, and all the apparatus of an ordinary hospital. The plaintiff was honorary medical officer of the hospital, receiving no remuneration for his services, and as such medical officer he attended a patient who died in the hospital, and by order of the coroner he made a post-mortem examination of the deceased and attended at the inquest to give evidence. In an action by the plaintiff to recover his fees from the coroner,

Held, that the hospital was a "public hospital," and that the plaintiff, though he received no remuneration for his services, was the medical officer "whose duty it was to attend the deceased person as a medical officer of the institution," within the proviso in section 22 of the Coroners Act, 1887, and that he was therefore not entitled to recover his fees from the coroner under that section.—HORNER v. LEWIS, Q.B.D.

CORPORATION:—

1. Forfeited recognizance—Fines and Amercements—Construction of charter to corporation.—By a charter of Henry IV. the Crown granted to the corporation of Nottingham "all fines for trespasses and other offences whatsoever, and also fines for licence to agree, and all amercements, ransoms and forfeited issues, forfeitures year day waste and estrepement."

By a charter of Henry VI. the Crown granted to the corporation "all issues fines and amercements from whatsoever pledges and mainpernors" of persons dwelling in the borough.

Held, that under neither of these charters did a forfeited recognizance to appear to answer a charge of felony or misdemeanour pass to the corporation. —NOTTINGHAM CORPORATION, RE, Q.B.D.

2. Municipal corporation—Application of borough fund—Costs of chief constable in opposing renewal of licence—Borough Funds Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 91), s. 2—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 140-143, 191; Schedule V., Part II., clause 5 (d).—The borough fund cannot be applied by a municipal corporation in paying the costs incurred by the chief constable as a litigant party in opposing at licensing or quarter sessions the renewal of publicans' licences. — ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. TYNEMOUTH (MAYOR), C.A., 518.

3. Municipal corporation—Borough Funds Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 91)—Bill in Parliament opposed—Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 41).—A municipal corporation is not entitled to oppose a Bill promoted by a gas company in Parliament without first complying with the requirements of section 4 of the Municipal Corporations (Borough Funds) Act, 1872, when the Bill leaves untouched the power of the corporation to have fixed by arbitration under section 24 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871, the price of the gas used by the corporation.

4. Municipal corporation—Borough having population under 10,000—Separate court of quarter sessions —Liability for costs—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 169—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 38.—In the case of boroughs having a separate court of quarter sessions and containing a population of less than 10,000 the Local Government Act, 1888, has not transferred the obligation of paying the salaries of the recorders and clerks of the peace of such courts of quarter sessions from the borough to the county council.

Ex parte County Council of Kent and Council of Sandwich, [1891] 1 Q. B. 389, not followed.—THETFORD CORPORATION v. NORFOLK COUNTY COUNCIL, Q.B.D.

5. Municipal corporation—Street vested in corporation—Compensation—Sydney Corporation Act, 1879 (43 Vict. No. 3)—51 Vict. No. 37.—Under the Sydney Corporation Act, 1879, all public ways in the city of Sydney were vested in the council. A local Act (51 Vict. No. 37) enabled the Secretary for Public Works to form a tramway. In the course of construction it became necessary to take a small portion of a street in the city of Sydney, and the municipal authority claimed compensation under the Act, which entitles the owner of property taken to compensation.

Held, that the vesting of a street or public way vested [illegible]perty in the municipal authority beyo[illegible]ce of the street and such portion [illegible]y necessarily incidental to the [illegible]anagement of the street, and did not vest the soil or land in them as owners; and, consequently, that the surface of the street was not subject-matter for compensation.—SYDNEY (MUNICIPAL COUNCIL) v. YOUNG, P.C., 561.

6. Newspaper — Libel — Action against editor — Liability of proprietors—Indemnity—Ultra vires.—The editor of a journal owned by and published for the benefit of the members of a nursing association (incorporated by Royal Charter) inserted in the journal, on the express instructions of the executive committee of the proprietors, paragraphs which were alleged to be libels on one of the members of the association. An action for libel having been brought by the member against the editor alone, the executive committee resolved to defend such action and to indemnify the editor against costs and damages.

Held (reversing the decision of North, J.), that such a defence of the action was not a misapplication of the funds of the association; and a motion for an interim injunction by one of the members of the association to restrain such application of the funds was accordingly dismissed.—BREAY v. ROYAL BRITISH NURSES' ASSOCIATION, C.A., 86.

COUNTY COURT:—

1. Appeal—Action where the debt or damage claimed does not exceed £20—Injunction—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 120.—In an action for trespass brought in a county court, where the damage claimed did not exceed £20, the plaintiff recovered 6d. damages and was granted an injunction restraining the defendant from continuing the trespass.

Held, that an appeal lay from the injunction.—BRUNE v. JAMES, Q.B.D., 257.

2. Appeal—Point not raised at trial — County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 120, and following sections.—Under the provisions of section 120 and the following sections of the County Courts Act, 1888, the omission of the judge to direct the jury as to the law is a point of law, which must be raised and submitted to the judge at the trial in order to entitle the party complaining thereof to appeal.—CLIFFORD v. THAMES IRONWORKS CO., Q.B.D., 222.

3. Costs—Action founded on tort—Bailment—Agistment—Injury to animal—Negligence—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 116.—The plaintiff delivered a horse to the defendants to be agisted in consideration of a daily payment, and the defendants negligently turned the horse into a field in which there was a barbed wire fence covered with long grass, whereby the horse was injured. In an action to recover damages for the injuries to the horse, the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for £30.

Held, as the negligence relied upon was a breach of the common law duty arising out of the bailment, that the action was founded on tort within the meaning of section 116 of the County Courts Act, 1888, and the plaintiff was entitled to costs upon the High Court scale.—TURNER v. STALLIBRASS, C.A., 81.

4. Costs—Remitted action — Judgment in High Court for part of claim—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 65.—In an action brought in the High Court an order was made under order 14 that the plaintiff be at liberty to sign judgment for £27, part of the amount claimed, with costs, that the defendant be at liberty to defend as to a sum of £2 18s. 5d., the residue of the amount claimed, and that the action be tried in the county court under section 65 of the County Courts Act, 1888.

At the trial in the county court the plaintiff recovered £2 0s. 6d., with costs.

Held, that the plaintiff was only entitled to taxation of his costs on the lower scale in use in county courts where the sum recovered exceeds £2 but does not exceed £10—not on the higher scale, where the sum recovered exceeds £20 but does not exceed £50.—BAILEY v. WATSON, Q.B.D.

5. Costs — Security for costs—Jurisdiction — Remitted action—Bankruptcy of plaintiff—Joinder of trustee—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), ss. 65, 94.—Where an action of contract, brought in the High Court, is ordered to be tried in a county court, under section 65 of the County Courts Act, 1888, and before the plaintiff has lodged the original writ and the order with the registrar of the county court, he becomes bankrupt, and a trustee is appointed, and an order is made joining the trustee as plaintiff in the action, the judge of the county court has no jurisdiction to order the trustee to give security for the costs of the action under section 94.—HEMMING v. DAVIES, Q.B.D.

6. Jurisdiction — Company — Winding up—Committal order—Prohibition—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63), s. 1 (6).—A writ of prohibition does not lie in respect of a committal order made by a county court judge in the course of proceedings to wind up a company.—NEW PAR CONSOLS, RE, C.A., 369.

7. Practice—Action by solicitor on bill of costs—No signed bill—Statutory defence—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), s. 37—County Court Rules, 1889, ord. 10, rr. 10, 18.—The defence to an action brought by a solicitor to recover a bill of costs, that the solicitor had not delivered a signed bill of costs one month before action brought, as required by section 37 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, is a statutory defence within the meaning of ord. 10, rr. 10 and 18, of the County Court Rules, 1889; and when the action is brought in a county court notice of such defence ought to be given in pursuance of those rules.—LEWIS v. BURRELL, Q.B.D.

8. Practice—Pleading—Statute of Frauds—Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 4—County Court Rules, 1889-95, ord. 10, r. 18 (a).—If the defendant in an action on a contract for the sale of goods of the value of £10 intends to raise the defence of the Statute of Frauds he must give notice of that intention under ord. 10, r. 18 (a), of the County Court Rules.—BRUTTON v. BRANSON, Q.B.D.

9. Practice—Stamp on document—Appeal—Application of High Court rule—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 164—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 39, r. 8.—The ruling of a county court judge at the trial of an action, that a document offered in evidence is properly stamped, is not subject to appeal in the High Court.—MANDER v. RIDGWAY, Q.B.D., 366.

RIMINAL LAW:—

1. Cruelty to children—Proof of age of child—Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 41).—On the trial of an indictment for unlawfully and wilfully neglecting children under the age of sixteen, contrary to the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894, the children were not produced before the court, and the only evidence as to their ages was that of two persons who said that they had seen the children and stated what they believed were their respective ages, all of them being under sixteen, and that of the mistress of a school who said that the elder children attended a public elementary school, and she believed they were within the statutory age limit.

Held, that there was evidence proper to be left to the jury that the children were under sixteen.—REG. v. COX, C.C.R.

2. Evidence—Admissibility—Confession — Inducement to confess—Duty of prosecuting counsel and solicitor—Bail—Justices.—A confession made in consequence of an inducement held out by a person in authority is not admissible evidence. A statement made by an accused person after he has been told that it will be better for him to speak the truth, cannot be admitted as evidence against him.

Semble, it is the duty of prosecuting counsel and solicitors having the charge of prosecutions to satisfy themselves before putting in evidence a confession, that it was not made under such circumstances as to be inadmissible.

Semble, bail is not to be withheld unless it is otherwise impossible to ensure the prisoner's attendance at the trial.—REG. v. ROSE, Q.B.D.

3. Evidence—Admissibility of—Statement made by accused in answer to question by constable—Admissibility of question and answer—Voluntary statement.—A statement made by an accused person in answer to a question put by a constable is admissible in evidence against the accused as a voluntary statement, provided that such statement has not been brought about by any inducement or threat.

The defendant was charged with cruelty to his horse by causing the same to be worked while in an unfit state, and in support of the charge the inspector proposed to give evidence of a question put by him to the defendant, asking him if it were true that his carman told the police that he (the defendant) had sent the horse out knowing it was lame, and the defendant's answer thereto. The justices having refused to admit the evidence on the ground that the statement, being in answer to a question put by an inspector, was not a voluntary statement, and was inadmissible.

Held, that the defendant's statement in answer to the question, not having been brought about by any inducement of advantage or by any threat, was a voluntary statement, and ought to have been admitted.—ROGERS v. HAWKEN, Q.B.D.

4. False pretences—Obtaining credit by fraud—Obtaining food at a restaurant without having money to pay—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 13.—The prisoner was convicted on an indictment containing two counts, the first charging him with obtaining food and wine by means of a false pretence that he was then able to pay, and possessed sufficient money to pay, for what he ordered; the second charging him, under section 13 of the Debtors Act, 1869, with obtaining credit by means of fraud. It was proved that the prisoner entered a restaurant and ordered food and wine, which he consumed, and that he had no money or other means of paying for the articles so ordered and consumed by him. No statement was made by him and no inquiry was made of him at the time of his ordering the articles as to his ability to pay for them.

Held, that the count for obtaining the articles by false pretences could not be supported, but that he was rightly convicted of obtaining credit by fraud.—REG. v. JONES, C.C.R., 191.

5. Intimidation — Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), ss. 7, 16—Seamen—Seafaring men not actually employed on board ship.—Persons who follow the sea as a calling, but are not "seamen" within the meaning of the Merchant Shipping Acts, are not within the exemption in favour of "seamen" contained in section 16 of the Conspiracy and Property Protection Act, 1875, and may properly be convicted of an offence under section 7 of that Act.—REG. v. LYNCH, C.C.R., 205.

6. Larceny by bailee—Habeas corpus—Extradition—Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 3.—On an application for a writ of habeas corpus, the evidence showed that a loan was raised on a bond by a person authorized so to raise the loan, and that there was a fraudulent appropriation by him of the money so raised.

Held, that (following the decision of Reg. v. De Banks, 50 L. T. Rep. 427) that amounted to evidence of larceny by a bailee under section 3 of the Larceny Act, 1861, and the rule was accordingly discharged.—REG. v. GOVERNOR OF HOLLOWAY, GEORGE, EX PARTE, Q.B.D.

7. Malicious damage to property — Assertion of supposed right — Unnecessary violence — Malicious Damage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 51.—On an indictment under the Malicious Damage Act, 1861, for malicious damage to property, it was proved that the defendants wilfully damaged the property in question, in exercise of a supposed right to remove the property from the land on which it stood, and that in so doing they interfered with the property more than was necessary for the assertion of the right.

Held, that they were guilty of malicious damage.—REG. v. CLEMENS, C.C.R., 416.

8. Malicious damage to property—Diluting milk—Fraudulent motive—Absence of malice—Malicious Injuries to Property Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 52.—K., the servant of a milk salesman, was employed by the latter to carry milk round and deliver it to customers. He fraudulently added water to it with the intent of adding to the bulk and putting money into his own pocket by selling and not accounting for the surplus; he, however, had no malice towards, or intention to injure, the owner of the milk.

Held, that he had wilfully committed damage to property within the meaning of section 52 of the Malicious Injuries to Property Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97).

It is not necessary in committing the damage within the meaning of that section that there should be malice towards or intention to damage the owner of the property. It is sufficient if the act be done wilfully, and with the knowledge that it will cause damage.

Hall v. Richardson, 54 J. P. 345, overruled.—ROPER v. KNOTT, Q.B.D., 636.

9. Malicious damage to property—Trespass on grass field—Actual damage—Malicious Injuries to Property Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97), s. 52.—The appellant, a trespasser, walked across a grass field of the respondent's. The grass was long, and the damage done by the appellant was of the value of sixpence.

Held, that he was liable to be summarily convicted under section 52 of the Malicious Injuries to Property Act, 1861, which makes it an offence to "wilfully or maliciously commit any damage, injury, or spoil to or upon any real or personal property whatsoever . . . for which no punishment is hereinbefore provided."—GAYFORD v. CHOULER, Q.B.D.

10. Master and servant—Sale of goods—False trade description—Criminal liability of master for acts of servant—Absence of mens rea—Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), ss. 1, 2, 5.—A salesman and an assistant employed by the appellant in his business of a provision dealer sold as a Scotch ham (stating it on the invoice to be such) a ham which was in fact an American ham. The sale was effected in the absence and without the knowledge of the appellant, who had directed the persons employed in his business not to sell hams under any specific name of place or origin.

Held, that the appellant was properly convicted of selling goods to which a false trade description was applied.—COPPEN v. MOORE (No. 2), Q.B.D., 620.

11. Misdemeanour—Committal for rape — Indictment for misdemeanour—Commencement of prosecution for misdemeanour—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), s. 5.—A prisoner was committed by a magistrate for trial on a charge of rape alleged to have been committed on a day less than three months before the date of the committal. At the assizes, more than three months after the commission of the alleged offence, an indictment was sent up to and found by the grand jury for a misdemeanour only, under section 5, sub-section 1, of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885. The prisoner was convicted.

Held, that the prosecution before the magistrate for rape was also a prosecution for the misdemeanour, and that the prisoner was not entitled to be acquitted by reason of the proviso contained in section 5, that "no prosecution shall be commenced for an offence under sub-section 1 of this section more than three months after the commission of the offence.—REG. v. WEST, C.C.R., 316.

CROWN:—

Prerogative of—Action against Lords of Admiralty—Trespass—Right of subject to maintain—Action, form of—Amendment.—The head of a Government department is not liable for the neglect or torts of any subordinate official, unless it can be shown that the act complained of was substantially the act of the head himself, in which case he would be liable as an individual, despite of his being an officer of State.

The court holding that the above action, which was for trespasses to land, was against the defendants, the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty and the Director-General of Naval Works, in their official capacity and not as individuals, and the plaintiffs having asked leave to amend, if necessary, by also suing the defendants individually, and by adding as parties the persons by whose hands the alleged trespasses had been actually committed,

Held, that leave to amend ought not to be given, for what the plaintiffs were seeking to do was to change one action into another of a substantially different character; and that the action must be dismissed.—RALEIGH v. GOSCHEN, Ch.D. Romer, J., 90.

DEBTORS ACT, 1869:—

Practice—Judgment in High Court—Order in county court for payment of judgment debt by instalments—Subsequent proceedings to levy execution—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 5.—The effect of section 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, is that, if a plaintiff, who has obtained judgment in an action in the High Court, goes to the county court, and accepts an order there for payment of the judgment debt by instalments, he thereby consents to have the judgment of the High Court modified to the extent of that order, and he is not entitled to afterwards issue execution upon the judgment in the High Court, without at any rate getting the order made by the county court discharged.

DEED:—

1. Construction—Estate clause—Recitals—Mortgage omitted—Estoppel—Priority.—General words, whether descriptive of parcels or in the estate clause, are susceptible of being controlled or modified by other parts of the instrument, and by the scope of the deed read as a whole, and for this purpose negative words are not requisite.

By a settlement made on the marriage of M. T. it was recited that certain lands were, subject to two mortgages in fee to A., limited to C. in fee, subject to a limitation over in favour of T. for life, in the event of C. having no issue (which happened), and C. and T. "according to their respective estates and interests" conveyed the fee simple "and all the estate, right, title, claim, and demand of the said C. and T. respectively in or to arise out of the same premises" to trustees to hold (subject to the two mortgages to A.) to the use of C., T., and M. T. for successive life estates, with remainder to secure a jointure to the wife of M. T., with remainders over.

At the date of the settlement T. was absolutely entitled to a mortgage whereby C. out of the fee created a term of five hundred years to secure £2,000 and interest, but no reference was made to this in the settlement. T. afterwards voluntarily transferred this mortgage to M. T., who charged it in favour of the plaintiffs, who had no notice of the settlement. C. and T. having died, an action was brought by the plaintiffs for a declaration that the £2,000 and interest was a charge on the land subject only to the two mortgages to A.

Held, that, on the true construction of the settlement, the mortgage did not pass, as the estate clause was controlled by the scope of the instrument; and that it had priority over the interests of all persons under the settlement.

Held also, that no estoppel as to the mortgage was created by the settlement on account of any representations made by T. in the recitals, or by any standing by on his part.—WILLIAMS v. PINCKNEY, C.A.

2. Escrow—Delivery to stranger, whether necessary to make deed an escrow—Misappropriation of consideration money by person who is agent of both parties—Money never received by grantor—Failure of consideration.—A deed, though delivered to a person who is one of the grantees, may, if such was the intention of the parties, be an escrow in his hands, and evidence is admissible to show upon what terms it was delivered.

A mortgage deed, duly executed and delivered to the mortgagee's solicitor, cannot be impeached in equity on the ground that such solicitor, who acted also in the capacity of banker as well as solicitor for the mortgagor and had authority to receive the mortgage money, becomes bankrupt without paying it to the mortgagor.

DENTIST:—

Registration—Pupil—Declaration—Dentists Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 33), ss. 6, 7, 37.—A person who, at the date of the passing of the Dentists Act, 1878, was articled as a pupil to a dental practitioner, and whose articles expired in October, 1878, held not to be entitled to be registered under section 37 of the Act, unless he complied with section 7 by sending to the registrar before the 1st of August, 1879, the information and declaration therein mentioned.

DESIGN:—

Registration—Applicable for pattern—Coffin-plates—Drawing furnished to comptroller—"New or original"—Novel combination of old designs—Marking goods—Statutory requirements—"All proper steps"—Motion to expunge—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), ss. 47, 51, 60—Designs Rules, 1890, rr. 8, 9.—It is not necessary for a person who registers a design under Part III. of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, to describe on his application by means of cross sections or otherwise how the article, for the pattern of which the design is applicable, is to be carried out in manufacture, and it is immaterial whether or not the design can be so carried out in more ways than one.

Although the word "ornament," which is used in section 60 of the Act of 1883, is not used in rule 9 of the Designs Rules, 1890, "pattern" in that rule must for the purposes of that rule be taken to include it.—ROLLASON'S DESIGN, RE, C.A.

DIVORCE:—

1. Adultery of husband coupled with desertion—Offer by husband to resume cohabitation.—A husband, shortly after deserting his wife, had requested her to resume cohabitation, which request the wife disregarded as not made bonâ fide, and had on the few isolated occasions, on which they met casually, disregarded her or made insulting gestures, but not otherwise communicated with her for nine years.

Held, that the facts constituted such a sufficient desertion as coupled with adultery to give the wife a right to a divorce.—MARTIN v. MARTIN, P.D. & Ad.D.

2. Conduct conducing to adultery.—Where a wife has committed several acts of adultery with a co-respondent, and the husband has been guilty of conduct conducing to some of these acts, the husband will not lose his right to a divorce if the first of these acts occurred prior to any such conduct.—MILLARD v. MILLARD, P.D. & Ad.D.

3. Costs—Husband's right to costs against the co-respondent.—The question of condemning the co-respondent in costs is entirely in the discretion of the court.

If a co-respondent who has misconducted himself with a woman in ignorance of the fact that she was a married woman continues to live in adultery with her after being informed of that fact, he will not necessarily be condemned in costs. —ROBINSON v. ROBINSON (No. 2), P.D. & Ad.D.

4. Costs—Wife's costs—Husband dead just before trial—Order against executors—Taxation.—Where a husband, respondent in divorce proceedings, died on the eve of the trial, an order for the wife's costs, limited to the amount lodged in court, was afterwards made against the husband's executors, to whom leave was given to attend the taxation.—CUNNINGHAM v. CUNNINGHAM, P.D. & Ad.D.

5. Costs—Wife's costs—Husband's liability to pay costs where no real defence.—The costs of a wife who is respondent will not be allowed as against the husband where facts have come to the knowledge of her solicitors or their London agent which ought to convince them of her guilt.

Such costs may, however, be ordered to be taxed against the co-respondent by the husband, and if recovered to be paid to the wife's solicitors.—TOWNSON v. TOWNSON, P.D. & Ad.D.

6. Desertion—Intention at time of leaving—Criminal proceedings pending.—A husband left his wife in 1895 after divorce proceedings in which he had appeared as co-respondent (the jury disagreeing). At the last interview, he left her under the impression that this was the cause of his departure, and that he would return in a few months. He was in financial embarrassment, his firm immediately became bankrupt, and ultimately the official receiver applied for a warrant against him. He had carried on an intrigue with an actress in 1893 and 1894 unknown to his wife. He sent one letter to his wife begging for money, but with no address; but otherwise he did not communicate with or see her.

The court held that, at the time he left his wife, he intended to desert her, and, adultery being proved, granted a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage.—WYNNE v. WYNNE, P.D. & Ad.D., 560.

7. Divorce bill—Definitive decree of divorce—Action for criminal conversation—Standing Orders, Nos. 175, 177—Domiciled Irishman—Jurisdiction of the English Court—Evidence taken in India.—Great caution ought to be observed in allowing a petition for divorce to proceed in the English Divorce Court where there is ground for supposing that the parties are domiciled out of the jurisdiction.

It is not necessary for the first reading of an Irish divorce bill that a definitive sentence of divorce a mensâ et thoro should have been pronounced in the Irish courts.

Where in the proceedings upon an Irish divorce bill it appears that no action for criminal conversation has been brought against a co-respondent who was not domiciled and could not be served in Ireland, the House of Lords may allow the bill for divorce to be received.

Where there is no means of enforcing the warrant of the House of Lords to take evidence in parts of India the evidence as taken and used in a previous suit in the English Divorce Court may be allowed to be used quantum valeat.—SINCLAIR'S DIVORCE BILL, RE, H.L.

8. Divorce bill—Infant—Custody.—In an Irish divorce bill, although no separate action has been instituted in Ireland to obtain the custody of infant children after a decree for separation à mensâ et thoro has been pronounced, the House of Lords will sanction a clause giving the custody of the children to the innocent party.

9. Evidence — Statements to third persons. — A witness called to prove a husband's cruelty may be asked whether the wife made a complaint about the husband on a certain occasion.—BERRY v. BERRY, P.D. & Ad.D.

10. Judicial separation — Cruelty — Habitual drunkenness—Charges of præ-marital misconduct—Admissibility of evidence.—If a woman marry a drunkard, with full knowledge that he is a drunkard, she is not on that account to be held to take, without redress, the risk of anything that may happen to her as a result of his continued drunken habits.

In a case where a wife charges her husband with cruelty, and complains (inter alia) that he has made against her in the presence of other persons charges of præ-marital misconduct, which he stated to her he had discovered some time after the marriage, although documents may be admitted as tending to prove the bona fides of the husband in making the charges, yet, neither oral evidence nor documents are admissible in proof of the facts alleged by the husband against the wife, unless he himself be called to state upon oath that he believed and acted upon the reports which reached him as to his wife's former conduct.—WALKER v. WALKER, P.D. & Ad.D.

11. Judicial separation—Cruelty—"Legal cruelty" —Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 22, and 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 68).—A false charge of having committed an unnatural criminal offence brought by a wife against her husband, although published to the world and persisted in after she did not believe in its truth, is not sufficient evidence of legal cruelty to entitle the husband to a judicial separation.

So held, by the majority of the House of Lords (Lords Herschell, Watson, Macnaghten, Shand, and Davey; Lord Halsbury, L.C., Lords Hobhouse, Ashbourne, and Morris dissenting).

The effect of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884, discussed.—RUSSELL v. RUSSELL, H.L.

12. Judicial separation—Domicil—Residence within jurisdiction at commencement of suit—Divorce Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 22—In a proceeding for a divorce a mensâ et thoro on the ground of cruelty, where the parties resided within the jurisdiction at the commencement of the suit, the Ecclesiastical Court would have granted relief irrespective of their domicil, and it would have made no difference that the cruelty was committed outside the jurisdiction, when the apprehension of further acts of cruelty remained.

Held, that the Divorce Division had under section 22 of the Divorce Act, 1857, the same jurisdiction as the Ecclesiastical Court to entertain the suit.—ARMYTAGE v. ARMYTAGE, P.D. & Ad.D.

13. Judicial separation—Practice—Counter-claim for restitution of conjugal rights—Cross-petition—36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, s. 24, sub-section 3.—A wife petitioned for a judicial separation on the ground of the respondent's cruelty. The respondent, in his answer, denied the cruelty, and claimed a decree for restitution of conjugal rights.

Held, that the respondent's proper course would have been to file a cross-petition, and that the relief prayed for could not be granted on a mere counter-claim in the answer not verified by affidavit.—WINGFIELD v. WINGFIELD, P.D. & Ad.D.

14. Nullity—Provision for wife—20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 35.—Where a petition is brought for a declaration that a marriage ceremony is null and void on the ground that the respondent had a husband living at the time of the ceremony, the court cannot ordinarily make it a term of granting a decree that the petitioner shall make provision for the respondent.

Wilkins v. Wilkins, 74 L. T. Rep. 62, [1896] P. 108, explained.

A petitioner is entitled ex debito justitiæ to a declaration of nullity of marriage when the respondent's husband was alive at the time of the second marriage, and the court has no discretion as to withholding relief.—BATEMAN v. BATEMAN, P.D. & Ad.D.

15. Permanent maintenance—Basis of calculation.—On an application for permanent maintenance by a wife who had obtained a decree nisi on the ground of the husband's cruelty and adultery, the registrar, treating the husband's property as producing 4 per cent. per annum, recommended that an annual sum should be secured to the wife on the husband's property, such sum amounting to one-third of the income thereof at 4 per cent.

The court varied the report by ordering that this sum should be secured on a third only of the husband's property, and that, as to the difference between this sum and the sum produced by such third invested in trust securities, the wife must be content with the husband's personal covenant.—SHORTHOUSE v. SHORTHOUSE, P.D. & Ad.D.

16. Permanent maintenance—Clause "dum sola" without "et casta."—An order for permanent maintenance may be made containing a clause "dum sola vixerit" without the addition of "et casta."—SMITH v. SMITH, P.D. & Ad.D.

17. Permanent maintenance—Husband's property—Adequate jointure—"Dum sola et casta" clause.—A wife obtained a divorce on the ground of the adultery and cruelty of her husband. The husband's income had been £19,000 per annum, and the wife, who had brought nothing into settlement, was entitled under the marriage settlement to £1,400 a year.

The court, on the petition of the wife for permanent maintenance, considering that £3,000 a year would have been an adequate jointure for the widow of a man in the husband's position, granted her £1,600 a year in addition to her present allowance, such additional income being payable "dum sola et casta vixerit."—KETTLEWELL v. KETTLEWELL, P.D. & Ad.D.

18. Permanent maintenance—Order on husband to secure annual sum for wife—Power of wife to release or alienate—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 32.—Where a decree for dissolution of marriage has been made and the husband has been ordered, under section 32 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, to secure an annual sum to the wife, she can release or alienate it.

A decree for dissolution of marriage having been made on a wife's petition an order was made directing her husband to secure to her on certain property the sum of £90 per annum, payable monthly, as permanent maintenance, and directing him to execute an assignment of the property to secure that sum.

By agreement between the parties the deed was not executed, and after several payments had been made under the order the wife by deed released her husband from further payments in consideration of a gross sum then paid to her.

Held, that, although monthly payments were directed, the order was made under section 32 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, and that the wife had power to release the husband.

Held also, that, although the deed of assignment had not been executed as directed, the court had no jurisdiction to direct the order to be perfected now by the execution of the deed.—MACLURCAN v. MACLURCAN, C.A.

19. Practice—Application for rehearing, whether to be made to Divisional Court or to Court of Appeal—Trial without a jury—Divorce Rules, 1865, r. 62—Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 44), s. 1.—An application for leave to serve notice of motion for a rehearing of a petition for divorce must, if the petition was heard by a judge without a jury, be made to a Divisional Court of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, and not to the Court of Appeal.—SMITH v. SMITH, C.A., 24.

20. Practice—Costs—Pauper—Queen's Proctor.—A pauper petitioner who is unsuccessful upon the intervention of the Queen's Proctor is liable to be condemned in the full costs of the intervention.—WHITE v. WHITE, P.D. & Ad.D.

21. Practice—Leave to proceed without co-respondent—Discretion of judge—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 28.—The mere belief of a petitioner, founded on the evidence then before him, that a person accused of being the adulterer is not guilty, is not in itself sufficient to excuse him from making that person a co-respondent; if, however, the court is satisfied that no evidence can be obtained against the accused person, it may exercise its discretion under section 28 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, and allow the petitioner to proceed without joining him as co-respondent.

22. Practice—Unknown adulterer—Wife's statement—Alleged adulterer named by wife—No other source of information—Motion for leave to proceed without citing any co-respondent—Motion adjourned—Inquiries ordered to be made from the wife.—A wife, in answer to inquiries by her husband touching the paternity of a child with which she was pregnant, and of which he could not be the father, gave the name of a man, and made certain statements which she said were within the petitioner's knowledge, but of which he declared he knew nothing; neither did he know of the existence of such a man.

After petition filed, and upon motion by the husband (petitioner) for leave to proceed without citing any person as co-respondent,

The court directed the petitioner's solicitor to write to the respondent with a view to having a personal interview with and obtaining an explanation from her, and refused to make an order in the petitioner's favour until this had been done and the result made known to the court.—GROSE v. GROSE, P.D. & Ad.D.

23. Practice—Substituted service.—Though the fact that the respondent's whereabouts cannot be discovered may be due to the petitioner's delay in bringing his petition, substituted service of the petition and citation may be allowed.—JENSON v. JENSON, P.D. & Ad.D.

24. Rape—Divorce Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 27.—A respondent, who had been convicted under section 4 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, of an attempt to have unlawful and carnal knowledge of a girl under the age of thirteen, was found to have been guilty of rape, and a decree nisi granted for the dissolution of his marriage.—COFFEY v. COFFEY, P.D. & Ad.D.

25. Restitution of conjugal rights—Alimony pendente lite—Answer of husband—Cross-examination—Registrar—Discretion—Divorce Court Rules, 1865, rr. 86, 191—Practice—Proceedings in chambers—Evidence—Note of registrar or master.—Upon a petition before the registrar for alimony pendente lite, the wife is not entitled as a matter of course, under rules 86 and 191 of the Divorce Court Rules, 1865, to an order for cross-examination of her husband upon his answer, even though there may be a great discrepancy between the amount of his income as alleged by her in the petition and the amount as stated in his answer.

Whether the husband should be ordered to attend for cross-examination is a matter entirely for the discretion of the registrar, and the court will not interfere with the exercise of his discretion unless satisfied that he has either proceeded on a wrong principle or has exercised his discretion wrongly.

Where there is no very great discrepancy between the two figures, it is not the practice of the court to order the attendance of the husband for cross-examination.

Where a wife in her petition for alimony pendente lite put the income of her husband, a baronet, at £70,000 a year, while the husband in his answer put it at £16,000 only, supporting his statement by full and detailed particulars, the registrar, on the hearing of the petition, and the judge, on appeal from him, refused an application by the wife for an order on the husband to attend for cross-examination, and allotted the wife £3,000 a year as alimony. On appeal to the Court of Appeal,

Held, that £3,000 a year was an adequate allowance for the wife pendente lite, and that as the registrar had properly exercised his discretion in allotting that sum, the court would not interfere by ordering the husband to attend for cross-examination as to his means.

On an appeal from an order of a registrar or master the court will only recognize a note of the registrar or master as evidence of what took place before him, an affidavit by either party being inadmissible.—SYKES v. SYKES, C.A.

26. Separation deed—Covenant not to molest—Divorce proceedings in foreign country.—The taking of proceedings in a foreign court to procure a divorce is not of itself, without evidence of an intention to annoy, a breach of a covenant by the husband not to molest the wife contained in a separation deed.—HUNT v. HUNT, C.A.

27. Variation of marriage settlement.—Where under a marriage settlement a wife has power to resettle settled property in the event of surviving her husband and marrying again, and, having been divorced, has married the co-respondent during her husband's lifetime, the court may make an order preventing any resettlement on any husband married, or children born, during the husband's lifetime.

Noel v. Noel, 10 P. Div. 179, commented on, but followed.

The court will not make payment to a father, for maintenance of a child, conditional on the latter residing with the father and being under his control, on the ground that after sixteen the child may wish to reside with the divorced wife.

Payment to a child of an annual sum after attaining majority, to which he is not entitled under the settlement, will not be refused on the ground that he may receive larger benefits from the wife.—BRANTON-DAY v. BRANTON-DAY, P.D. & Ad.D.

28. Variation of marriage settlement.—The fact that, by reason of dissolution of a marriage in consequence of a wife's misconduct, an annuity provided by the husband will not be payable to the wife, and will be lost to the family, is a detriment to the children, and a ground for compensating them out of the wife's property brought into settlement.—NEWALL v. NEWALL, P.D. & Ad.D.

29. Variation of settlements—Motion upon registrar's report—Legitimacy of child born in wedlock—Motion adjourned—Petition to be presented to decide question of legitimacy.—In the course of an undefended suit for dissolution of marriage presented by the husband, it appeared that the respondent had made a written statement in the form of a letter to the petitioner as to the paternity of the only child with the object of retaining its custody. Upon petition for variation of the marriage settlement, it was urged on behalf of the trustees of the settlement that the respondent's statement was inadmissible, and that so important a matter as that of the legitimacy of the child ought not to be dealt with upon motion. The court thereupon adjourned the motion as to variation, and directed the official solicitor to present, on behalf of the child, a petition for declaration of legitimacy. — DOUGLAS v. DOUGLAS, P.D & Ad.D.

DOMICIL:—

Husband and wife—Mutual rights as to unsettled movables—Matrimonial domicil—Change of domicil.—The rights of married persons in each other's unsettled movable property are governed by the law of their domicil, even if that be a domicil different from the matrimonial domicil, and acquired after the marriage.

So held (reversing the decision of Kekewich, J., ante, p. 326), on the authority of Lashley v. Hog 4 Paton's Sc. App. Cas. 581.—DE NICOLS, RE, DE NICOLS v. CURLIER, C.A., 532.

EASEMENT:—

Opening locks on river—Dominant and servient tenement—Prescription—Presumption of legal origin—Lost grant—Prescription Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 2.—An easement, exercised for the benefit of the dominant estate, is not invalid merely because from the very nature of the right its exercise by the dominant estate confers some benefit upon other tenements.

The corporation of Godmanchester as owners of certain lands had for more than 200 years opened as of right the gates of certain locks belonging to the appellant upon the River Ouse in time of flood or danger of flood, in order to prevent damage to those lands.

Held, that that was a good easement, and was none the less so because its exercise also benefited the lands belonging to other persons; and that the corporation could maintain their right either by section 2 of the Prescription Act, 1832, or by the fiction of a lost grant.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW:—

1. Churchwardens—Criminal suit against—Jurisdiction—Duty of churchwardens to obtain faculty

before removing human remains—Burials Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 81), s. 23—Faculty to carry out directions in Order in Council for preventing vaults becoming dangerous to public health.—The churchwardens of a parish church wholly closed for burials, who, purporting to act under the provisions of an Order in Council under the 23rd section of the Burials Act, 1857, directing the removal and reinterment elsewhere of human remains underneath the church, do or cause to be done the acts therein directed without obtaining a faculty from the Ordinary, are guilty of an offence against the laws ecclesiastical, in respect of which they may be cited to appear to answer articles to be administered to them in a criminal suit.

The 23rd section of the Burials Act, 1857, provides (inter alia) that it shall be lawful for Her Majesty, upon the representation of one of Her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, by and with the advice of her Privy Council from time to time, to order such acts to be done by or under the direction of the churchwardens or such other persons as may have the care of any vaults or places of burial, for preventing them from becoming or continuing dangerous or injurious to the public health, and such churchwardens or other persons shall do or cause to be done all acts ordered as aforesaid.

Orders in Council issued under the above section and served on the churchwardens of a parish church ordered that the churchwardens or the persons having the care of the vaults under the church should adopt or cause to be adopted the following measures—namely, that the whole of the human remains lying beneath the floor of the church should be removed, and reburied in a specified cemetery or in some other legal burial-ground. In consequence of the service of these Orders in Council, the churchwardens, without having obtained any faculty from the Ordinary, pulled down all the pews in the church, took up the flooring and monumental slabs in the same, and removed certain coffins and human remains buried thereunder, for the purpose of reinterring them elsewhere. It appeared that burials in the parish had been by law wholly discontinued in the year 1853, and that since that year no burial was recorded to have taken place there.

Held, that the acts of the churchwardens, not having been authorized by a faculty, were illegal, and the Orders in Council afforded no justification for what had been done by them; such Orders being either wholly ultra vires or to be construed as merely directing an application for a faculty to carry out their terms.

Held, also, that, on the petition of the rector of the parish church and the churchwardens, a faculty might issue authorizing for sanitary reasons the removal of the remains and their reinterment in consecrated ground.—LEE v. HAWTREY, Q.B D.

2. Clergy—Offence against morality—Deprivation—Subsequent sentence of deposition—Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 32), s. 8.—Where a clergyman is convicted of an offence specified in the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892, and the bishop of the diocese passes sentence of deprivation, the bishop may, under section 8 of the Act, on a subsequent occasion pass the further sentence of deposition from holy orders.—REG. v. DURHAM (BISHOP), C.A., 36.

3. Faculty—Application to open coffin—Jurisdiction of Chancellor—Licence of Home Secretary—Prohibition—Burials Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 81), s. 25.—A Consistory Court has jurisdiction to issue a faculty for the removal of remains in consecrated ground, and has also jurisdiction to issue a faculty authorizing the opening of the coffin for the purpose of inspecting its contents.

If it is necessary that a licence should be obtained from the Home Secretary before a coffin can be opened for such a purpose as was contended by the interveners (on which point the court gave no decision), that licence, being in addition to, and not in substitution of, the faculty required to be obtained from the ecclesiastical court, would be inoperative unless and until the ecclesiastical faculty had been duly issued.—REG. v. TRISTRAM, Q.B.D., 653.

4. Faculty—Footpath across churchyard for use of parishioners and public—Proviso for closing footpath on one day in the year.—In a faculty granted for a fenced-in footpath across a closed parish churchyard for the use of the parishioners with right of way for the public, a proviso was inserted for the footpath to be closed on one day in the year in order to show that it remained an integral portion of the churchyard with certain limitations on its use.—ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST, CARDIFF (VICAR OF) v. PARISHIONERS OF SAME, P.D. & Ad.D.

5. Faculty—"Stations of the Cross"—Crucifix—Communion rails—Chancel platform—Darkening of windows in chancel—Lamps reflecting light on communion table—Faculty—Communion table—Reredos—Second communion table in side chapel.—The incumbent of a parish church having without a faculty, and contrary to the vote of the vestry and the wishes of the parishioners, introduced into the church pictures representing the "Stations of the Cross" proved to have been used superstitiously and four crucifixes, placed curtains over the Ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer, and the Apostles' Creed engraved on the east chancel wall, and darkened the chancel by affixing permanent blinds on the east window and a side chancel window, the court ordered that within three months the "Stations of the Cross," the crucifixes, and the curtains should be removed out of the church by the incumbent, and the outside blinds over the above-mentioned windows taken down by him.

If the incumbent should not comply with the order of the court within three months of its date, the court would be prepared to issue a faculty to the parishioners' churchwarden to carry out the order.

The erection in the chancel of a communion table with a reredos in substitution for the communion table formerly there, though made by the incumbent in opposition to a vote of the vestry, was sanctioned by a confirmatory faculty from the court, on the ground of its being an artistic improvement to the church, subject to the platform on which the communion table stood being extended round the north end of the table so as to enable the minister to officiate during the communion service standing at the north end.

The court also sanctioned by confirmatory faculty the erection in the church of a side chapel with a communion table in it, though objected to by the parishioners, subject to the chapel being separated from the church on a plan to be approved of by the court.

6. Jurisdiction—Criminal suit against rector for non-repair of chancel—Appeal—Practice—Surrogate—The Ecclesiastical Courts have no jurisdiction to entertain a criminal suit against a lay rector who has neglected to perform his duty of repairing the chancel of the church of which he is rector, unless the chancel was out of repair at the time of the institution of the suit.—NEVILLE v. KIRBY, Q.B.D.

EDUCATION :—

School board—Superannuation fund—Deductions from salaries of teachers—Ultra vires—Elementary Education Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 75), s. 35.—A school board established a fund, to be formed by means of deductions from the salaries of the teachers, for the purpose of providing superannuation allowances for the teachers. The board did not contribute to the fund nor insure its solvency, but they administered it under the advice of a superannuation committee, and they incurred certain expenses in the working of it.

A teacher who, by an agreement in writing with the school board, had contracted to come under the superannuation scheme and to permit deductions from her salary to be made, subsequently brought an action to recover the amount of the deductions so made.

Held, that the contract between the plaintiff and the school board was not illegal as being ultra vires of the board; and that even if the board had acted in any way ultra vires in administering the fund the plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

ELECTION LAW:

1. County council—Election of—Practice—Death of candidate between nomination and poll—Duty of returning officer to countermand poll—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 58—Ballot Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 33), s. 1.—Where, at a contested election for a county council, a candidate dies between the nomination and the poll, it is the duty of the returning officer for the division in which he was a candidate to countermand notice of the poll.—REG. v. STEWART, Q.B.D.

2. Municipal election—County council—Death of candidate—Injunction—Prerogative mandamus—Ballot Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 33), s. 1—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 58.—The last paragraph of section 1 of the Ballot Act, 1872, is incorporated in the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, by virtue of section 38 of the latter Act.

Semble, for the purposes of municipal and county council elections, the paragraph must be read as if the words "as if the notice required by section 54 of the Municipal Corporations Act had been given . . ." were substituted for the words "as if the writ had been received . . ."

In an election for a county council the poll was fixed to take place on the 3rd of March. The nomination of candidates took place on the 23rd of February. On the 26th of February one of the candidates nominated died. The returning officer, though acquainted with the fact of the candidate's death, refused, on a request to do so by another of the candidates, to countermand the poll.

Held, that an injunction restraining the returning officer from proceeding with the poll was not the proper remedy, but that a prerogative writ of mandamus was, under the circumstances, the proper remedy.—WESTACOTT v. SMITH, Q.B.D., 379.

3. Municipal election—District council—Nomination paper—Election Order, 1897, r. 7 (2).—A nomination paper of a candidate as a rural district councillor is not invalid because it was signed by the proposer and seconder before the name of the candidate was filled in.—COX v. DAVIES, Q.B.D.

4. Municipal election—Election of councillors—Unopposed candidate—Return of expenses—No expenses in fact incurred—Municipal Elections (Corrupt and Illegal Practices) Act, 1884, s. 21, sub-sections 4, 7.—Every candidate is required, under the Municipal Elections Act, 1884, to send to the town clerk, within twenty-eight days of the election, a return of his expenses with the accompanying statutory declaration.

By section 21, sub-section 4, if, after the time for making such return, the candidate in default shall, before the date of the allowance of such authorized excuse as is mentioned in the Act, sit or vote in the council, he shall forfeit £50 for every day on which he does so to any person who sues for the same. By sub-section 7, if a candidate appeals to the High Court, and shows that failure to make such return and declaration has arisen by reason of inadvertence or by any reasonable cause of a like nature, the court may make such order and declaration as to them seems just, notwithstanding the lapse of the prescribed statutory period for making the return.

P. was returned unopposed at a municipal election for the county borough of H., and believing that as he had incurred no expenses of any kind no return and declaration was required, omitted to return his expenses as "nil" until after the statutory period for making such return and declaration had expired.

Held, that there was sufficient evidence before the court that the omission had been under such circumstances as to amount to an authorized excuse under the Act, and that the relief sought ought therefore to be granted.

5. Parliament — Election expenses — Return — "Transmit"— Corrupt Practices Prevention Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 51), ss. 33, 34.—The fact that the return of election expenses transmitted to the returning officer under section 33 of the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act, 1883, contains an error does not make it a nullity so as to render the candidate liable to the penalties imposed by sub-section 5 of that section for sitting and voting before the return has been transmitted.—MACKINNON v. CLARK, C.A.

6. Parliament—Election petition—Claim of seat—Scrutiny—Particulars—Election Petition Rules, 1868, rr. 6, 7.—Where the petitioner in a parliamentary election claims the seat on the ground that he had a majority of lawful votes at the poll, rule 6 of the Election Petition Rules, 1868, does not apply, but rule 7 applies exclusively. The respondent, therefore, has no right to an order for particulars, as in the case of a petition where an election is sought to be avoided on the ground of corrupt and illegal practices, but is only entitled to a delivery of the list of the votes intended to be objected to and the grounds of objection, six days before the day appointed for trial.

ciency of—Representation of the People Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102), ss. 3, 6, 27—Representation of the People Act, 1884 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 3), ss. 2, 5.—In Division I. of the occupiers' list of voters in a county, the description of a voter's qualification was entered as "dwelling-house joint." A notice of objection that the voter's qualification was "expressly forbidden by law" had been duly given. The voter had not made either a new claim or a statutory declaration to amend the entry. The qualifying property was in fact a dwelling-house inhabited by the voter jointly with others, the annual value of which was more than sufficient to give £10 a year to each occupant.

Held (reversing the revising barrister), that the objection should be disallowed, as the description of the qualification was sufficient to describe an occupation qualification.

8. School board election—Recount as between two candidates only—Finality as regards candidates not petitioned against—Ballot Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 33), s. 2.—At a school board election, at which there were eight candidates for five seats, the result of the poll was duly declared by the returning officer. A petition was presented on behalf of the first unsuccessful candidate against the last successful candidate, asking, for a recount as between these two candidates only, and claiming the seat for the candidate for whom the petition was presented. No petition was presented against any of the first four successful candidates, and no recount of their votes was asked for. The result of the recount as between the two candidates was to place the unsuccessful candidate in a majority of lawful votes over the candidate petitioned against.

Held, that, as there had been no petition presented against the first four successful candidates, the numbers of the votes declared for them by the returning officer must be taken to be correct, and that, as the candidate for whom the petition had been presented had, upon such recount, shown that he had the majority of votes, he was entitled to the seat, although he had not shown that the candidate petitioned against would not have been among the five successful candidates upon a recount of all the votes given at the election.—MONKSWELL (LORD) v. THOMPSON. Q.B.D., 382.

ELECTRIC LIGHTING:—

Electric inspector—Reasonable expenses—Electric Lighting Orders Confirmation (No. 15) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. ccxxxix), s. 47.—By section 47 of the Electric Lighting Orders Confirmation (No. 15) Act, 1890, it is enacted that, "Save as otherwise provided by this order or by any regulation under this order, all fees and reasonable expenses of an electric inspector . . . shall, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary between the undertakers and the local authority, be paid by the undertakers. Provided, that where the report of an electric inspector or the decision of the Board of Trade shows that any consumer was guilty of any default or negligence, such fees and expenses shall . . . be paid by such consumer or consumers as the court or board, having regard to such report or decision, shall direct."

Held, that "reasonable expenses of an electric inspector" here meant expenses specifically incurred by the electric inspector in making tests and inspections, and did not include the salary appointed to the inspector by the local authority under section 36, or the general expenses of his laboratory and staff.—CRAWFORD v. CITY OF LONDON ELECTRIC LIGHTING CO., Q.B.D.

ENDOWED SCHOOL:—

Locus standi of petitioners—Ratepaying parents of scholars—Endowed Schools Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 55), ss. 19, 39.—In appeal from a scheme relating to a grammar school, Held, (1) that the petitioners, who were ratepayers of the borough where the school was situate and parents of scholars attending the school, were not, in either capacity, persons directly affected by the scheme within the meaning of section 39, and, therefore, had no locus standi for appeal; (2) that although an opinion of the commissioners that section 19 applies is appealable, it is so only as mentioned in the Act, which requires that the petitioners be aggrieved by the scheme and not by the opinion on which it is founded; (3) that they were not so aggrieved, for, whether that opinion was right or wrong, the scheme having received the consents required by the section, was in either view in conformity with the Act.—COLCHESTER GRAMMAR SCHOOL, RE, P.C.

EXECUTOR:—

1. Acting before probate—Delay in proving will—Recovering outstanding assets—Wilful default.—A testator died in 1882, and his will was proved in 1889. A policy of insurance on the testator's life could not be got in until probate was obtained, and meanwhile interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum was paid upon a debt of the testator.

Held (affirming North, J., 45 W. R. 284, [1897] 1 Ch. 422), that the delay in proving the will and getting in the money due upon the policy did not amount to wilful default, and that, consequently, the ordinary accounts against the executors ought only to be taken.—STEVENS, RE, COOKE v. STEVENS, C.A., 177.

2. Conversion — Article pledged — Knowledge of pawnor — Statute of Limitations — Action against executor.—In September, 1889, the plaintiff pledged a piano with the husband of the defendant. The same year he converted it to the knowledge of the plaintiff. In March, 1897, he died, and the plaintiff then tendered the money to the present defendant, his executrix and widow, and demanded the return of the piano.

Held, that the defendant could not be liable, and that, as she never had possession of or any property in the piano, no action of conversion would lie against her.—HINCHCLIFFE v. SHARPE, Q.B.D.

3. Devastavit — Trustee — Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 3.—A testator died in June, 1894, with assets reckoned at £22,000, and debts as then known under £100. His executor paid an immediate legacy of £300 to the widow, and made other payments for the benefit of the children. In November advertisements for creditors were issued. In December a writ was served on the executor by certain large landowners claiming an account of rents received by the testator as their agent.

In spite of this action the executor continued to make payments to the beneficiaries, without going to the court for directions, until judgment in April, 1896, when about £26,000 was found due to the plaintiffs from the testator's estate.

Held, that the executor, under the circumstances, had acted reasonably in paying the widow the £300 and such other payments necessary for the maintenance of the family up to the date of his receiving the writ; and that he should be relieved to this amount under section 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896.—KAY, RE, MOSLEY v. KAY, Ch.D. Romer, J., 74.

4. Probate—Intermeddling by an executor—Executor compelled to take up probate.—If an executor have intermeddled with an estate, he may be compelled on the application of a legatee to take up probate, though from his conduct he appears an undesirable person to fill the office of executor.—COATES, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

5. Will—Trust for legatee—Discretion of executor as to time and mode of payment.—A testatrix gave to her executors £1,000 in trust for her brother to be paid in such sum or sums, share or shares, and at such time and manner as they should think proper.

Held, that the brother was absolutely entitled to the legacy freed from the exercise of any discretion by the executors.—MELLOR, RE, CLANCY v. O'CALLAGHAN, M.R. (Ir.).

FACTORY:

1. Bleaching and dyeing works—Processes of hooking, lapping, and making up and packing cloth—Factory and Workshop Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 16), s. 93, Schedule IV., Part I. (2).—By section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, the expression "non-textile factory" in that Act means "any works, warehouses, . . . or places" named in Part I. of the 4th Schedule to the Act, which includes "bleaching and dyeing works—that is to say, any premises in which the processes of (inter alia) hooking, lapping, and making up and packing any cloth, . . . or any one or more of such or any process incidental thereto, are or is carried on."

The respondents carried on at their premises the above-named processes as a separate business, and not as incidental to the business of bleaching and dyeing.

Held, that the respondents' premises were a "non-textile factory" within the definition in section 93 of the Act.—ROGERS v. MANCHESTER PACKING CO., Q.B.D., 350.

2. Fencing machinery—Liability of occupier—Person injured by his own negligence—Factory and Workshop Act, 1878 (41 Vict. c. 16), s. 82.—Section 82 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, provides: "If any person is killed or suffers any bodily iniury in consequence of the occupier of a factory having neglected to fence any machinery required by or in pursuance of this Act to be securely fenced, . . . the occupier of such factory . . . shall be liable to a fine."

Held, that the fact that the death or injury is due to the negligence of the person so killed or injured does not exempt the occupier from liability.—BLENKINSOP v. OGDEN, Q.B.D., 542.

3. Meal-times—Employment—"Work"—Factory and Workshop Act, 1878 (41 Vict. c. 16), ss. 17, 83, 94.—Section 83 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, provides that "where a child, young person, or woman is employed in a factory or workshop contrary to the provisions of this Act, the occupier of the factory or workshop shall be liable to a fine."

Held, that, in order to constitute the offence, it was not necessary to show that the child, young person, or woman was employed by order of the occupier.

A young person during the time allowed in a factory for meals, of his own accord and contrary to the regulations of the factory, cleaned and oiled the machinery. It was not part of his duties to clean and oil the machinery.

Held, that the young person "worked" in so cleaning and oiling, and ought, therefore, to be "deemed to be employed" within the meaning of section 94.—PRIOR v. SLAITHWAITE SPINNING CO., Q.B.D., 488.

4. Underground bakehouse—Vacant premises at date of Act—Factory Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 37), s. 27 (3).—By section 27, sub-section 3, of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, "A place underground shall not be used as a bakehouse unless it is so used at the commencement of this Act." Premises which had long been used as an underground bakehouse were vacant at the commencement of the Act, but their owner was seeking a tenant for them as a bakehouse.

Held, that they were used as a bakehouse at the commencement of the Act.—SCHWERZERHOF v. WILKINS, Q.B.D.

FINANCE ACT, 1894.—See Inland Revenue, 2, 4-7.

FISHERY:—

1. Salmon—Device to catch fish—Nets—"Other like instrument"—Salmon Fishery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 109), s. 8—Salmon Fishery Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 71), s. 18.—A fishing net with an illegally small mesh is not a "like instrument" to a snare within the meaning of section 8 of the Salmon Fishery Act, 1861, as extended by section 18 of the Salmon Fishery Act, 1873; and therefore the mere possession of such a net, although with the intention of catching salmon by means thereof, is not an offence within those Acts.—JONES v. DAVIES, Q.B.D.

2.—Sea fishing—Trawl-net with beam—"Otter" trawl-net—Sea Fisheries Regulation Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 54)—Fishery Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 37)—North-Eastern Sea Fisheries District Bye-laws, bye-law 1.—By bye-law 1 of the North-Eastern Sea Fisheries District Bye-laws, made under the Sea Fisheries Regulation Acts, 1888 and 1889, and confirmed by order of the Board of Trade, dated the 17th of July, 1894, it is provided that ". . . a person shall not use in fishing for sea fish any trawl or trawl-net having a beam which is pulled or pushed or otherwise propelled along or over the bottom of the sea . . ."

Held, that an "otter" trawl, which is a trawl not having any beam across from side to side, but which has two "otter" boards so fixed that the motion through the water keeps them apart, thus stretching a line across the net in the place of a beam, comes within the meaning of bye-law 1.—COLLEN v. ASHFORD, Q.B.D., 302.

FIXTURES:—

1. Bill of sale—Mortgage.—C. took a lease of building ground and erected thereon a shop, which he fitted with trade fixtures suitable for the trade of a chemist, all of which were capable of being detached without injury to the freehold. After the annexation of the fixtures C. mortgaged the premises; in the mortgage the parcels were simply described as "building ground" as in the lease, and no mention was made of the fixtures.

Held, that the fixtures passed to the mortgagees and that the mortgage did not come within the Bills of Sale Acts.—CALVERT, RE, Q.B.D. (Ir.).

2. Movable chattels—Stuffed birds and animals—Mansion-house—Settled estate.—Specimens of stuffed birds and animals, forming part of a natural history collection in a museum built on to the mansion-house, are not fixtures so as to devolve with the freehold under the limitations of a settlement.

FRIENDLY SOCIETY:—

1. Alteration of rules—New rule made under statutory powers—Continuance of rule after repeal of statute—Effect of subsequent alterations on members' vested rights.—A friendly society established in 1842, which had no provision in its rules for the alteration of its rules, made a new rule under the statutory power given by section 27 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1855, to alter or make new rules, the rule being in these terms: "No new rule shall be made, nor any of the rules herein contained or hereafter to be made, shall be amended, altered, or rescinded, unless with the consent of a majority of the members present at a general meeting."

Held, that, having regard to section 6 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, this rule continued in force notwithstanding the repeal in 1875 of the Act of 1855, under which it was made; that the rule conferred upon the society and kept alive the power to alter, amend, or make new rules; that members who joined the society when such rule was in force were bound by subsequent alterations properly made under the rule; and that under it the society had power to make an alteration of rules imposing upon members who were already in receipt of superannuation allowance conditions for breaches of which they might lose their allowance.—SMITH v. GALLOWAY, Q.B.D., 204.

2. Nomination by member—Revocation by subsequent will—Friendly Societies Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 60), s. 15, sub-section 3.—A nomination made by a member of a friendly society under section 15, sub-section 3, of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, and in compliance with the rules of the society, may be revoked by a subsequent will of the nominator not communicated to the society during the lifetime of the testator.—BENNETT v. SLATER, Q.B.D.

GAME:—

1. Trespass in pursuit of game—Leave and licence—Evidence—The Game Act, 1861 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32), s. 30.—By the Game Act, 1861, s. 30, if any person trespass in the daytime in pursuit of game, he shall on conviction forfeit £5, "provided always that any person charged with any such trespass shall be at liberty to prove by way of defence any matter which would have been a defence to any action at law for such trespass."

The appellant received leave from the wife of the occupier to hunt rabbits, and then coursed a hare. The sporting rights were not in the occupier.

Held, that the appellants had not brought themselves within the proviso, and it was not until they had done so that it was necessary to prove strictly—e.g., by producing the deed—that the landlord had the right as against the occupier to take game.

Quære, whether the wife could give such leave as she had.—TAYLOR v. JACKSON, Q.B.D.

2. Trespass in pursuit of game—Shot fired at game on land of another—Game dead and removed at time of search—Interval between killing and entry on land for search—Game Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32), s. 30.—R. standing in his own land shot at and killed a grouse sitting in the land of another person, but did not then enter upon the land to pick up the dead bird; some hours after he had shot the bird he went on to the land where it had been shot for the purpose of picking it up and there searched for the bird, which had previously been picked up and removed by a gamekeeper.

Held, that the two acts, the shooting of the bird and the subsequent going on to the land in search of it, were sufficiently connected to form one transaction, and that R. was therefore guilty of trespassing upon the land in search or pursuit of game within section 30 of the Game Act, 1831.—HORN v. RAINE, Q.B.D.

GAMING:—

1. Betting house—Person found therein—Recognizance—Betting Houses Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), s. 11.—Persons found in a betting house are liable to the same treatment as persons found in a gaming house, and the magistrate has power, in the case of any person found in a betting house who is arrested therein and brought before him in pursuance of the Betting Houses Act, 1853, s. 11, to order such person to enter into recognizances "no more to haunt, play, or exercise from thenceforth" at any gaming house.—MURPHY v. ARROW, Q.B.D., 94.

2. Betting—Reserved enclosure on racecourse—"Place"—"Using a place" for betting purposes—Betting Houses Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), ss. 1, 3.—The defendants were the owners and occupiers of a racecourse, in which was a reserved enclosure, about a quarter of an acre in area, railed off from the rest of the racecourse. The public were admitted to the enclosure upon payment, and every person so admitted was entitled to walk about and stand in any part of it. Among those who paid for admission were a number of professional betting men, called bookmakers, who were admitted on the same terms as the rest of the public. The bookmakers when in the enclosure called out the odds they were prepared to bet against each horse, and were prepared to bet, and did bet, such odds with anyone who was desirous to bet, either on credit or upon the amount of the stake being deposited with the bookmaker. No bookmaker had any right, interest, or control in or over any part of the enclosure; he did not confine himself to any fixed spot in the enclosure, nor did he use any such apparatus as a desk, stool, umbrella, or tent, though any particular bookmaker was usually to be found in or near the same part of the enclosure. Betting of the same kind had been carried on by bookmakers in similar enclosures since the beginning of the century.

Held (Rigby, L.J., dissenting), that the enclosure was not a "place used" by the bookmakers for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto, and that therefore the defendants did not permit the same to be so used within the meaning of section 3 of the Betting Houses Act, 1853.

3. Betting—Criminal law—Using place for betting—Archway forming private thoroughfare—Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), ss. 1, 3.—The defendant habitually made use of an archway which formed a thoroughfare from a public street to a private yard and dwelling-houses for the purpose of betting on horse-races with persons who resorted to the archway.

Held, that the archway was a "place" within the meaning of the Betting Act, 1853, and that the defendant was rightly convicted of an offence under that Act.

4. Contract—Bill—Paid by acceptor—Recovery of amount so paid.—C. and W. were engaged in transactions null and void under the Gaming Act, 1845. In respect of such transactions C. drew a bill, which was accepted by W. C. indorsed it to the C. bank, who sued W. and recovered the money. In an action to recover the money so paid from C.,

Held, that W. could not recover.—CRAWLEY v. WHITE, Q.B.D.

5. Contract — Cheque — Illegal consideration — 9 Anne c. 14—Gaming Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 41), s. 1.—Where defendant gave a cheque in payment of bets lost upon horse-races by the defendant, and the cheque was indorsed by the payee to the plaintiff for value with notice of the consideration for which it was given,

Held, that the plaintiff could not maintain an action upon the cheque as it was given for an illegal consideration under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 41.—WOOLF v. HAMILTON, C.A.

6. Contracts for differences—Profits of gambling transactions applied to purchase of stock for investment—Non-delivery of stock—Damages—Deposit of sums as "cover"—"Cover" not used—Right to recover—Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 109), s. 18.—Gambling transactions between the debtor and the respondent in stocks and shares having resulted in the respondent's favour, the respondent directed the debtor to apply the balance due to him in the purchase of certain railway stock for investment. The debtor purchased the stock but died insolvent without having delivered the stock to the respondent.

Held, that the respondent could not prove against the debtor's estate for damages for non-delivery of the stock.

The respondent deposited with the debtor certain sums as "cover" to secure the debtor against loss on the gambling transactions, but as the transactions resulted in the respondent's favour the "cover" was not used for that purpose.

Held, that the respondent was entitled to prove against the debtor's estate for the amount of the "cover."—CRONMIRE, RE, WAUD, EX PARTE, C.A., 679.

HIGHWAY:—

1. Cutting trees—Timber trees—Yew—Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), ss. 65, 66.—The appellent was summoned under section 65 of the Highway Act, 1835, for that a yew tree growing on his lands obstructed a carriage-way, and the magistrates made an order for its removal. It was contended on his behalf that, as no order had been made for widening the road, under section 66 of that Act, he could not be ordered to remove it even if it was an obstruction. But, even if they could order its removal, they could not do so in July, when they made the order.

Held (affirming the magistrate), that the order was right, and that section 66 did not apply to such a case as this at all.—BULLEN v. WAKELY, Q.B.D.

2. Extraordinary traffic—Person by whose order such traffic has been conducted—Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), s. 23.—The respondent contracted with several persons for the delivery to him at E. of various materials required for building and other operations, the price being payable by him on acceptance if according to sample, the price including free delivery at E. The respondent neither employed the persons who conveyed the goods there, nor did he pay them for such conveyance. The surveyor found, in pursuance of the provisions of section 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, "that extraordinary expenses had been incurred by reason of excessive weight passing along the highway or extraordinary traffic thereon."

Held, that the respondent was not the person, within the meaning of section 23, by whose order such weight or traffic had been conducted along the highway, and he was therefore not liable for the extraordinary expenses in repairing the road thereby occasioned.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, 45 W. R. 513, [1897] 1 Q. B. 351, affirmed.—KENT COUNTY COUNCIL v. GERARD (LORD), H.L., 111.

3. Extraordinary traffic—Person by whose order the traffic is conducted—Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), s. 23.—The appellants were the contractors for the erection of a lunatic asylum at Charminster, for the Dorset County Council. They entered into a contract with one T. for the haulage of goods, plant, and materials to the works. These were to be delivered as required by the appellants, and either by carts or trucks drawn by traction engines, but no route was prescribed by which these goods, plant, and materials were to be brought. This delivery caused extraordinary traffic, and the highway was thereby damaged.

Held, that the appellants were not the persons by whose order the traffic was conducted within section 23 of the Highways and Locomotive (Amendment) Act, 1878, so as to make them liable for the damage done to the highway by such extraordinary traffic.—PETHICK v. DORSET COUNTY COUNCIL, Q.B.D.

4. Liability to repair ratione tenuræ—Highway made a parish highway—Highway rate—Exemption—Highway Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 61), s. 35—Estoppel—Res judicata—Judgment of quarter sessions—Quashing previous rate.—By an order of petty sessions made in April, 1881, under section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862, a highway, for the repair of which the appellant company had previously, as occupier of certain land, been liable ratione tenuræ, was declared to be a parish highway, and a sum was fixed to be paid in full discharge of all claims thereafter in respect of the repair and maintenance of the highway. In August, 1881, the appellant company was rated in respect of its occupation of the land to a highway rate for the district in which the highway was situate. On appeal the quarter sessions quashed the rate. In 1897 the appellant company was again rated to a rate for highway expenses in respect of its occupation of the land.

Held, that the appellant company was not, by reason of the order made under section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862, exempted from liability to be rated for highway expenses, and that the question of the appellant company's liability was not res judicata by reason of the decision of the quarter sessions in 1881 that the rate then in question was invalid.—NORTH-EASTERN RAILWAY CO. v. DALTON OVERSEERS, Q.B.D., 582.

5. Local government—Locomotive—"User" on highway—Licence—Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), s. 32.—Section 32 of the Highways and Locomotives Act, 1878, gave county authorities power to make bye-laws for granting annual licences to locomotives used within their county, and under this section a county council made a bye-law that "No locomotive shall be used on any highway within the county until an annual licence for the use of the same shall have been obtained by the owner thereof."

Held, that a locomotive which is only passing along a highway for the purpose of proceeding to another district is being "used" on such highway within the meaning of this bye-law, and that the owner thereof required a licence for such user.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. WOOD, Q.B.D., 143.

6. Nuisance—Defective fence adjoining highway—Child climbing on fence—Injury to child arising therefrom—Liability of owner of fence.—The defendant was the owner of a piece of waste ground separated from a highway by a fence belonging to him. A child, who was passing along the highway, put his foot upon the fence in order to look at some boys who were playing in the adjoining ground, when the fence, in consequence of its ruinous condition, came down and injured him. In an action by the child to recover damages for personal injuries,

Held, that the action was maintainable, as the fence in its ruinous condition constituted a danger to those lawfully using the highway, and therefore amounted to a nuisance, and the nuisance was the cause of the injury.—HARROLD v. WATNEY, C.A., 642.

7. Public footway—Stile—Liability of occupier to repair ratione tenuræ—Evidence of liability.—The defendant was the yearly tenant of a farm through which ran a public pathway at a certain point of which was a stile with stone steps. The steps being out of repair, the plaintiff in crossing fell and was injured, and he brought an action for the injuries against the defendant, as being liable ratione tenuræ to repair the stile. There was no evidence that the parish had ever repaired, or had ever required the defendant or any prior occupier to repair, but there was evidence that the defendant's predecessor, who was also owner, had done repairs to the path and stile; there was also some evidence that previous occupiers had repaired, and a witness stated that he had done some repairs at the defendant's instance. The repairs were all small and inconsiderable, and they were done on the defendant's own land.

Held, that evidence of such small repairs, done by the occupier on his own land and possibly for his own benefit, was not sufficient to show that the defendant was bound to repair ratione tenuræ.

Quære, whether an action will lie at the instance of a private person against one liable ratione tenuræ to repair.—RUNDLE v. HEARLE, Q.B.D., 619.

8. Right of passage—Extent of—Roadside strips—Special Act—Construction.—Where a highway though of varying and unequal width runs between fences, the public right of way, primâ facie, extends over the whole space between the fences. 9. Surveyor—Supplying team work—Member of district council—Surveyor or not—Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 46—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 144—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), ss. 25, 46.—By the Highway Act, 1835, s. 46, the surveyor of the parish may contract for the purchasing, getting, and carrying of materials required for the repairing of the highways, but he may not share or have any interest in any such contract without the licence in writing of two justices of the peace previously obtained by him under certain penalties.

By the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 144, urban authorities have the powers of surveyors of highways and of parish vestries under the Highways Acts.

By the Local Government Act, 1894, s. 25, the district council of every rural district ". . . shall also have, as respects highways, all the powers, duties, and liabilities of an urban sanitary authority under sections 144 to 148 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and those sections shall apply in the case of a rural district and of the council thereof in like manner as in the case of an urban district and an urban authority." And by section 46 of that Act a person is not to be disqualified from being a member of the council "by reason of being interested . . . in the transport of materials for the repair of roads or bridges in his own immediate neighbourhood."

The respondent H. was a member of the Saddleworth District Council, and in March, 1897, he on his own account let to hire a team to be used in repairing a highway within the district of the council of which he was a member, and he received from the council payment in respect thereof. He did not, before letting for hire as aforesaid, obtain any licence in writing from two justices of the peace. He was thereupon summoned before the magistrates for the penalties contained in the Highways Act, 1835, s. 46, who, however, dismissed the summons.

Held (dismissing the appeal), that the magistrates were right.—BUCKLEY v. HANSON, Q.B.D.

1. Award—Bed of river ad medium filum—Several fishery.—An award under an Inclosure Act dealing with moors, commons, and waste grounds will not by implication convey the bed of a river adjoining the land awarded usque ad medium filum.

A fortiori, such an award will not convey the bed of the river where it has been treated as a separate tenement, and not subject to commonable rights, and is exclusively in the possession of lessees of the lord at the date both of the Act and the award.

INFANT:—

1. Agreement to settle action—Plea in bar—Contract to benefit.—The plaintiff, an infant, commenced an action by his next friend for wages and damages for assault, false imprisonment, and malicious prosecution.

He voluntarily came to the defendant and offered to take 30s. in respect of all his claims as he wished to go abroad, which was paid him, and he signed an acknowledgment that all his wages had been paid, and that he had brought the other claims out of vengeance.

The next friend continued the action, and the plaintiff came over to give evidence.

The defendent pleaded the agreement in bar to the action.

The jury found for the defendant as to the wages and malicious prosecution, but for the plaintiff upon the false imprisonment with £20 damages.

The infant never ratified the agreement.

Held, that under the circumstances the infant was not bound by the agreement, so as to make it a bar to the action.—MATTEI v. VAUTRO, Q.B.D.

INJUNCTION:

1. Letters—Property in—Right of writer to restrain publication.—The defendant H., who was the proprietor of a newspaper, published on the 2nd of October, 1897, a violent attack upon the plaintiff's conduct in certain Stock Exchange transactions some years ago, founded upon letters written by the plaintiff to B. The same supplement contained a threat to publish on the 1st of January, 1898, proofs which the defendant had in his possession that the plaintiff had carried on similar transactions in later years.

The plaintiff, who was also the proprietor and editor of a newspaper, published on 7th of October, 1897, an article dealing with and denying the defendant's charges, in which he wrote: "You may publish and republish my letters to B. as often as you please," adding that he could restrain their publication by injunction if he chose, but that he had no intention of doing so.

The plaintiff afterwards published a letter, alleged to have been written by the defendant to a third person, as proof that the defendant was a person wholly unworthy of confidence.

The plaintiff afterwards discovered that the proofs referred to in the defendant's threat consisted wholly or partly of letters written by the plaintiff to S., and obtained by the defendant H. from S.'s widow.

The plaintiff now moved to restrain the defendants H. and S.'s widow from publishing any letters written by the plaintiff to S., and from informing anyone of the contents thereof.

Held, that the court will restrain any person in the possession of letters from publishing them against the will of the writer, except under special circumstances—e.g., where the publication is necessary for the purpose of clearing the defendant's character; that there was nothing in the plaintiff's conduct to disentitle him to this relief, and the defendant had not shown that his purpose in publishing the letters was to clear his own character.

The injunction was granted against publication of the letters from the plaintiff to S., but not against informing anyone of the contents thereof.

S.'s widow was not proved to have given the letters to H. for the purpose of publication, or to have colluded with him, and the action was dismissed against her with costs.—LABOUCHERE v. HESS, Ch.D. North, J.

2. Trader—Misleading advertisement—Sale of goods at less than cost price.—A trader may offer for sale goods at any price he chooses, and it is immaterial whether such goods are actually in his possession or not. Consequently, where a trader advertised for sale goods at less than cost price, not having any such goods in his possession, and by so doing injured the plaintiffs,

Held, that he could not be restrained from so doing, as the damage to the plaintiffs arose not from the misrepresentations in the advertisements, but from the underselling of their goods, which was not an actionable wrong.—AJELLO v. WORSLEY, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 245.

INLAND REVENUE:—

1. Building society—Reconveyance of mortgage—Exemption—Building Societies Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 42), ss. 41, 42—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39).—By the Building Societies Act, 1874, s. 41, certain documents, including transfers and receipts, are not to "be subject or liable to be charged with any stamp duty or duties whatsoever, provided that the exemption shall not extend to any mortgage."

And by section 42, where moneys secured by any mortgage or further charge are paid a receipt in the form in the schedule to the Act indorsed on the deed is sufficient release.

A deed was executed by the society, its trustees and the mortgagor, reconveying the mortgaged property as all the money due under the mortgage had been duly paid.

Held, that the deed was exempt from duty.—OLD BATTERSEA BUILDING SOCIETY v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D.

2. Estate duty—Exemption—Husband and wife—Income of wife's fund settled on husband for life—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 21 (5).—By a marriage settlement after-acquired personal property of the wife was settled upon trust (in the events that happened) for the husband for life, with remainder to the wife, the survivor, absolutely.

The husband having died after the commencement of the Finance Act, 1894,

Held, that section 21, sub-section 5, of that Act did not apply, and that estate duty became payable immediately upon the husband's death.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. STRANGE, C.A., 663.

3. Estate duty — Gift inter vivos — Possession assumed to entire exclusion of donor—Interest reserved —Power of revocation—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881 (44 Vict. c. 12), s. 38 (2) (a) (c), as amended by Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889 (52 Vict. c. 7), s. 11.—G. by deed transferred his estates, including a manor-house, to the defendant, his nephew, subject, as regards property other than the mansion-house, to an annual rent-charge in favour of G. for life, and subject also to the manor-house being enjoyed as theretofore by G. By the same deed the defendant entered into several covenants relating to the estates, and a power of revoking the deed and reassuming the property in the estates was reserved to G. upon the breach of certain of the said covenants by the defendant. The annual value of the estate at the death of G. was considerably in excess of the rent-charge reserved.

Held, that a sufficient interest and a sufficient power of revocation were reserved in the property so as to bring it within the description of property contained in the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881, s. 38 (2) (c), and that, on the death of G., in October, 1894, the whole of the property became chargeable with estate duty under the Finance Act, 1894, s. 1.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. GREY (EARL), Q.B.D., 251.

4. Estate duty — Property passing on death — Settlement—Tenant for life and remainderman—Surrender of life estate to remainderman—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 1, 2 (1) (b).—Under a marriage settlement the wife was entitled to certain property for her life, with remainder to her son absolutely. More than twelve months before her death the wife surrendered her life interest in the property to the trustees of the settlement, to the end and intent that such life interest might merge in the interest in remainder of her son. Upon the death of the wife, Held, that, as by the surrender her life interest had ceased to exist more than twelve months before she died, no property passed on her death within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 1 (b), of the Finance Act, 1894, and estate duty was not payable.

Judgment of the Queen's Bench Division (ante, p. 44) reversed.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. BEECH, C.A., 435.

5. Estate duty—Settled property—Value of property passing on death—Mortgage created by tenant for life and remainderman—Annuity charged upon estate in favour of remainderman during life of tenant for life—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 1, 2, 7.—Property was settled upon a person for life, with remainder to his son in tail. The tenants for life and in tail by deed barred the entail and reserved to themselves a joint power of appointment over the property, the limitation in default of the exercise of the power being to the father for life, with remainder to the son in tail. They then joined in creating mortgages whereby, in the exercise of their joint power of appointment and by virtue of their respective estates, they conveyed the property in fee simple to the mortgagees to secure £230,000. Part of this sum was applied for the benefit of the tenant for life, the remainder being paid to or for the benefit of the tenant in tail. By a resettlement subsequently executed this property was charged with an annuity of £3,000 in favour of the tenant in tail during the life of the tenant for life. The tenant for life died in 1895.

Held, that, in determining the value of the property passing on the death of the tenant for life, no deduction could be made in respect of either (1) the £230,000; or (2) the capital value of the annuity of £3,000.

Decision of the Divisional Court (45 W. R. 538, [1897] 2 Q. B. 47) reversed as to (1) and confirmed as to (2).—COWLEY (EARL) ESTATE DUTY, RE, C.A., 223.

6. Estate duty—Settlement estate duty — Settled legacy—Duty payable out of residue—"The deceased" —Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28), ss. 19, 24, 39.—By section 19 of the Finance Act, 1896, the settlement estate duty leviable in respect of a legacy or other personal property settled by the will of the deceased shall (unless the will contains an express provision to the contrary) be payable out of the settled legacy or property in exoneration of the rest of the deceased's estate.

Held, that this section is not retrospective and does not apply to the estate of a testator who died before the commencement of the said Act of 1896.

7. Estate duty—Specific sum payable out of policy moneys—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 14.—The holder of a policy of assurance on his own life for £5,000 by his marriage settlement assigned the policy to trustees upon trust to raise at his death £4,000 to be held on certain trusts, and as to the remaining part of the policy moneys in trust to pay the same to his executors.

Held, that section 14, sub-section (1), of the Finance Act, 1894, was not applicable, and that the estate duty on the fund must be borne by the residue remaining after payment thereout of the £4,000.—WADE v. WADE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.

8. Income tax—Bodies corporate or unincorporate—Exemption—Property appropriated for promotion of science—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 51), s. 11 (3).—By section 11 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885, a duty of 5 per cent. is imposed upon the annual value, income, or profits of all property, real and personal, belonging to or vested in any body corporate or unincorporate during the year of assessment, after deducting the costs and expenses of the management of such property, subject to the exemption from duty in sub-section 3 in the case of "property which, or the income or profits whereof, shall be legally appropriated and applied for any purpose connected with any religious persuasion, or for any charitable purpose, or for the promotion of education, literature, science, or the fine arts."

The Royal College of Surgeons was established by Royal Charter in the year 1800 as a body corporate for the promotion of the art and science of surgery and the encouragement of the study thereof. It is also the custodian, at its own expense, of the Hunterian Collection, which is national property. The college consists of general offices, an examination hall, a library, a museum which contains the above collection, and the conservator's official residence.

For some time past the purposes of the college had been mainly the examination of persons for certificates of proficiency in surgery, and the largest source of income and the surplus of expenditure had arisen from such examinations.

Held, that the general offices, the examination hall, and the library were liable to be assessed under the above section; but that the museum and the conservator's official residence came within the exception provided by sub-section 3.—ROYAL COLLEGE OF SURGEONS, RE, Q.B.D., 538.

9. Income tax—Distress—Costs and charges—Man in possession—Constructive possession—Abandonment of possession—57 Geo. 3, c. 93, s. 1, Schedule—7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 16—Taxes Management Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 19), s. 86.—Where a distress is made upon the goods of a taxpayer for unpaid income tax not exceeding £20, the collector is not entitled to charge 2s. 6d. a day for a man in possession, if the man has only been in constructive possession and not in real possession of the goods distrained upon, unless the taxpayer, in order to avoid the inconvenience of having a man in real possession, has expressly agreed to pay that sum.—LUMSDEN v. BURNETT, C.A., 664.

10. Income tax—Distress for non-payment by former occupier—Owner not in possession—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 70—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), s. 35.—On the 22nd of April, 1897, a lease was granted to the plaintiff of premises, beginning the 25th of December, 1896, for sixty years at £65 a year rent. The rent was to be paid quarterly, the first payment being payable on the 29th of September, 1897. He did not take possession until April, 1897, and for several years before he entered the premises had been unoccupied. An assessment for income-tax of £9 3s. 4d. was made for the year April, 1896, to April, 1897. In August and again in September, 1897, demands were made for payment, and as the plaintiff refused to pay, on the 17th of November a distraint was put in.

The present action was then commenced against the defendant, a duly appointed collector for the purpose of the Income Tax Acts, for wrongful distress.

Held, that this was a lawful entry, and that no action would lie, as it was covered by section 70 of the Income Tax Act of 1892.—READING v. CREW, Q.B.D.

11. Income tax—Profits of trade—Deductions—Money expended for repairs of premises—Money expended for purpose of trade—Brewers—Tied houses—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 100, Schedule D., case 1, r. 3; cases 1 and 2, r. 1.—The appellants, a brewery company, were owners of a number of tied public-houses, which they had acquired for the purpose of increasing their trade. The tied houses were in the occupation of the appellants, tenants in part for the purpose of the trade of publicans and in part as the private dwelling apartments of themselves and their families. The appellants, in making up their return of profits for assessment to the income tax, sought to deduct the sum which they had spent in repairing the tied houses.

Held, that they were not entitled to make such a deduction.—BRICKWOOD v. REYNOLDS, C.A., 130.

12. Income tax—Trade exercised within the United Kingdom—Foreigner resident abroad—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 42—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), s. 2, Schedule D.—Provision merchants in America consigned goods for sale on commission to the respondents, commission merchants in England. The goods were invoiced in the name of the respondents, who sold the goods and received the proceeds, rendering an account to the merchants in America. The respondents, beyond their charges and commission, made no profit or gain out of the sales.

Held, that the merchants in America exercised a trade within the United Kingdom within Schedule D. of the Income Tax Act, 1853, s. 2, and that the respondents, their agents in England, were assessable to the income tax in respect of the profits arising therefrom.—WATSON v. SANDIE, Q.B.D., 202.

13. Probate duty—Executor de son sort—Foreign will—Transfer of shares in English company to foreign executors—Liability of company.—A testator, the registered owner of shares and debentures in an English company, was domiciled and died in America. By his will, made according to American law, the shares and debentures passed to his executors. At the request of the executors the company transferred into their names two of the shares and one of the debentures, and paid them the dividends and interest due thereon. The executors, to the knowledge of the company, had not obtained, and did not intend to obtain, probate of the will in England.

Held, that the company had intermeddled with the estate of the deceased so as to constitute itself an executor de son tort, and had rendered itself liable to the payment of probate duty.

Judgment of Wills and Grantham, JJ. (45 W. R. 606), reversed.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. NEW YORK BREWERIES CO., C.A., 193.

14. Probate duty—Proceeds of plantation in Jamaica—English testator—Share bequeathed to English legatee—Death of legatee—Liability of estate to probate duty.—An English legatee of a share of the proceeds of sale of a West Indian plantation, which was devised by an English testator, after the expiration or failure of certain prior interests, in trust for sale and division of the proceeds, died before the expiration of prior interests for life.

Held, that his share ought to be regarded as an English, and not as a foreign, asset; and probate duty was consequently payable in respect thereof.

Sudeley (Lord) v. Attorney-General, 45 W. R. 305, [1897] A. C. 11, applied and followed.—SMYTH, RE, LEACH v. LEACH, Ch.D. Romer, J., 104.

15. *Stamp duty—Agreement for sale—Equitable estate—Property locally situate out of the United Kingdom—Purchase in England of equity of redemption—*Ad valorem duty—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 59, sub-section 1—Trust Property Act of 1862, New South Wales (26 Vict. No. 12), s. 25.—By the Stamp Act, 1891, s. 59, sub-section 1, "any contract or agreement made in England under seal, or under hand only, for the sale of any equitable estate or interest in any property whatsoever, or for the sale of any estate or interest in any property except property locally situate out of the United Kingdom," is charged with ad valorem duty.

By the New South Wales Trust Property Act of 1862, s. 25, "All mortgages of real or personal estate shall hereafter be deemed at law, as now in equity, pledges only of the property thereby mortgaged; and nothing in any such mortgage shall prevent the title of any mortgagor, or person claiming and being in possession, from being deemed a good title at law, subject to such pledge, as against all persons other than the mortgagee and those claiming under him."

The appellants entered into a written agreement in England to purchase property in New South Wales, subject to a mortgage.

On a case stated by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, pursuant to section 13 of the Stamp Act, 1891,

Held, that the words of exception in the Stamp Act, 1891, s. 59, sub-section 1, do not apply to an equitable estate or interest in property locally situate out of the United Kingdom, and therefore the general words, "any equitable estate or interest in any property whatsoever," apply, and ad valorem duty is payable on an agreement made in England for the purchase of such an estate:

Held, also, that the New South Wales Trust Property Act does not confer the legal estate in mortgaged property on the mortgagor:

Held, therefore, that ad valorem duty was payable on the purchase by the appellants of the equity of redemption.—FARMER v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D.

16. Stamp duty — Agreement between the county council and urban council—Repair and improvement of roads—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 11—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), Schedule.—On the 26th of November, 1897, an agreement was made between the appellants and the Urban District Council of Frizington, whereby the payment for the year ending March, 1898, in pursuance of the Local Government Act, 1888, towards the cost of maintenance, and repair and reasonable improvement connected with the maintenance and repair of all main roads within the district of the urban council was fixed at a certain sum.

The money was to be paid in four instalments, and there was a proviso that nothing, except as expressly declared, should alter the rights and liabilities of the parties thereto.

Held, that this was not an agreement made pursuant to the Highway Acts for or relating to the making, maintaining, and repairing of highways, which would only require a 6d. stamp, but that it was made under the Local Government Act, and came under the heading "deed of any kind whatsoever not described in the schedule" of the Stamp Act, and so required a 10s. stamp.—CUMBERLAND COUNTY COUNCIL v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D.

17. Stamp duty—Annuity payable quarterly—"Bond, covenant, or instrument"—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), Schedule.—By a deed of separation between a husband and wife, the husband agreed that so long as the wife observed the stipulations of the deed he would pay her every three months £625 by quarterly payments on the 29th of September, the 25th of December, the 25th of March, and the 24th of June in every year.

Held, that this was an annuity of £2,500, and that ad valorem duty was payable on that sum, and not on £625.—LEWIS v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D.

18. Stamp duty—Annuity secured by bond—"Conveyance on sale"—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), ss. 54, 60, 87 (2), Schedule I.—Mersey Dock Acts Consolidation Act, 1858.—A dock company had statutory powers to borrow money for certain purposes, and "all money so borrowed by the board of directors was to be secured either by bonds or by annuities." The company having by deed granted a large number of annuities, the question was raised by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue at what rate the instruments by which they were secured to the annuitants should be charged with stamp duty under section 87 (2) of the Stamp Act, 1891, the annuity deeds having been presented to the Commissioners stamped as securities on an ad valorem duty of 2s. 6d. per cent. under the head "Mortgage, Bond, Debenture, Covenant, &c."

Held, that, as the annuities were payable for an indefinite period, and could only be redeemed or extinguished by the board purchasing them at the then market price, the deed securing such an annuity was in the nature of a "conveyance on sale" and not a bond to secure the repayment of an advance or loan to the company, and was therefore chargeable at the rate of 10s. per cent. as a contract of sale and purchase.

Decision of Queen's Bench Division (45 W. R. 448) affirmed.—MERSEY DOCKS CO. BOARD v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, C.A.

19. Stamp duty—Conveyance on sale—Agreement—Leasehold interest in licensed house—Goodwill—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 59 (1).—By an agreement under seal the vendor agreed to sell the goodwill of the business of an hotel proprietor and licensed victualler, and the lease of the hotel in which the business was carried on, together with the household furniture, stock-in-trade, cash, and book debts; of the total consideration £4,085 was apportioned to "lease and goodwill," £1,462 to furniture, stock-in-trade, and cash, and £37 to book debts. The vendor was to show a good title to the lease and to assign the lease and goodwill to the purchasers; in the event of the consent of the landlords to the assignment of the lease not being obtained, it was provided that the vendor should, at the option of the purchasers, execute a declaration of trust of the leasehold premises in their favour. The consent of the landlords not having been obtained, a declaration of trust was executed in favour of the purchasers, which was stamped with the fixed duty of 10s.

Held, (1) that the agreement was not an agreement for the sale of an equitable interest in property within the meaning of section 59, sub-section 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891; (2) that, inasmuch as the goodwill was incapable of being severed from the enjoyment of the leasehold premises, the instrument was not an "agreement for the sale of an estate or interest in any property except lands," and was therefore not liable to ad valorem duty upon that portion of the consideration attributed to "lease and goodwill"; (3) that it was liable to ad valorem duty upon the amount of the book debts only.—WEST LONDON SYNDICATE v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D.

20. Stamp duty—Conveyance on sale—Ad valorem duty—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), ss. 54, 57—Heritable Securities (Scotland) Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 44), ss. 8, 9.—A bond and disposition in security contained a power of sale. The creditor exposed for sale the property held in security at a price less than the amount due under his security, and failed to find a purchaser. The creditor then applied to the sheriff under section 8 of the Heritable Securities (Scotland) Act, 1894, and the sheriff issued a decree that the debtors had forfeited their rights of redemption, and that the creditor was vested absolutely in the subjects at the price named.

Held, that the transaction constituted a sale to the creditor, and was chargeable by virtue of sections 54 and 57 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and the first schedule thereto, with ad valorem duty.—INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. TOD, H.L.

21. Stamp duty—Exchange of shares in company for shares in other company—Conveyance or transfer on sale—Exchange—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 55, Schedule.—A transfer of shares in a company in exchange for shares in another company held to be a conveyance or transfer on sale within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891.—COATS v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, C.A., 1.

22. Stamp duty—Foreign security issued in the United Kingdom—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 82, sub-section 1 (b) (i).—The appellant was the holder of one of a series of bonds given by a newly-formed American company in exchange for bonds in an old company which was being wound up under a reorganization scheme. It was stated on the bond that it should not be valid for any purpose unless authenticated by the trustee's certificate thereon indorsed. The bond was executed by the new company in the United States and delivered to a trust company, which was to act as trustee. The trust company did not immediately sign the certificates on the bonds which were destined for England; but, in order to avoid a heavy premium for insurance, forwarded the bonds unsigned, and at the same time sent over an official to sign the certificates in London. The appellant's bond was handed to him in London after the certificate had been so signed.

Held, that the bond was issued in the United Kingdom within the meaning of section 82, sub-section 1 (b) (i), of the Stamp Act, 1891.—BARING v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, C.A., 98.

23. Stamp duty—Mortgage—Trust deed for securing debentures—Transfer of mortgage—Substituted security—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 86, sub-section 1; s. 88, sub-section 1; Schedule 1.—A limited company issued in 1892 £500,000 4 per cent. debenture stock, secured by a trust deed which was duly stamped. By a subsequent trust deed for securing debenture stock made in 1897, and having the same trustees, after reciting that the £500,000 debenture stock was still outstanding and that the company was intending to issue further irredeemable 3½ per cent. debenture stock, the amount of stock to be issued was limited in the first instance to £300,000, the company acknowledging in the deed that they were indebted to the trustees in that sum carrying interest at 3½ per cent. The company were to be at liberty to issue further 3½ per cent. debenture stock not exceeding £540,000, making a total of £840,000; such further stock was only to be issued for the purpose of redeeming or paying off the £500,000 4 per cent. stock at the rate of not more than £108 of the new stock for every £100 of the stock redeemed or paid off. Before issuing any of the further debenture stock the company were to execute and deliver to the trustees an acknowledgment of indebtedness for the amount of the further proposed issue, and the trustees were to certify on the trust deed that the company were entitled to make the issue.

Held, first, that the trust deed was a security for the repayment of £840,000 advanced or to be advanced within the meaning of section 86, sub-section 1, and section 88, sub-section 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891, notwithstanding that certain preliminaries must necessarily be complied with before the issue of any further stock in excess of £300,000; and secondly, that in respect of £500,000 the deed was not a transfer of a mortgage, but was a substituted security, and was therefore only liable to the reduced ad valorem duty of 6d. per cent. under the heading "Mortgage, Bond, Debenture, Covenant" in the first schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891.—CITY OF LONDON BREWERY CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D.

24. Succession duty—Father and son in partnership—Death of father—Acquisition by son of father's share in business—Succession—Sale and purchase—Construction of partnership deed—Succession Duty Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51), s. 2.—A father admitted his son into partnership for a term of five years. The son brought no capital into the business, but the value of the business was estimated at £62,445, of which two-thirds was to be deemed the father's share and one-third the son's; and one condition of the partnership deed was that, in the event of the father dying during the partnership, the son was to take the whole of the business and pay to the father's executors or administrators £10,000. By a deed of even date the son agreed to pay to the father and his executors a rent-charge of £139 per annum in respect of the freehold property of the partnership.

On the death of the father during the partnership the Crown claimed succession duty in respect of the father's share of the business which passed to the son, less the sum of £10,000 payable by the son to the estate of the deceased.

Held, that the son's acquisition of his father's share of the business was a succession, on which succession duty was payable.

INNKEEPER:—

1. Deposit—Expressly for safe custody—Non-disclosure of value or nature of article deposited—Innkeepers Act, 1863, s. 3.—The plaintiff, a guest at defendant's inn, handed a parcel containing jewellery to the defendant's manager, saying, "Keep that for me," but not stating its nature or contents. The parcel was stolen, but not through the wilful act or neglect of the defendant or any of his servants. The usual notices in compliance with the Innkeepers Act were hung up in the inn.

Held, that the deposit so made was not a deposit "expressly for safe custody" within the Innkeepers Act, 1863, and that the defendant was not liable beyond the sum of £30.—O'CONNOR v. GRAND INTERNATIONAL HOTEL CO., Q.B.D. (Ir.).

2. Liability for property of guest—Temporary refreshment.—Where a person uses an inn, either temporarily or otherwise, for the purpose of receiving such refreshment or accommodation as the innkeeper offers, the relation of landlord and guest exists between the parties, so as to make the landlord liable for the loss of the guest's property during his stay in the inn.—ORCHARD v. BUSH, Q.B.D., 527.

INSURANCE:—

1. Burglary and housebreaking—"Actual forcible and violent entry"—Entry by turning handle of door.—A policy of insurance against loss of jewellery in the assured's shop by burglary and housebreaking defined these terms as "loss by theft following upon actual violent and forcible entry upon the premises." At 8 a.m., during the temporary absence of the porter in charge of the shop, an entry was effected by turning the handle of the door of the shop, which was shut, but neither bolted or locked, and jewellery was stolen.

Held, that the loss was covered by the policy.—GEORGE AND GOLDSMITHS' INSURANCE ASSOCIATION, ARBITRATION, RE, Q.B.D., 557.

2. *Life—Proviso for cash payment of premium—Onus probandi—Duties of insurers' agent—Payment of premium by notes discounted and then dishonoured.*—Where a life policy contains provisions to the effect that it shall not be in force till the first premium is paid, and that if a note be taken for the first or renewal premium and not paid the policy is void at and from default, the onus is on the policy-holder to prove cash payment of the premium.

Where the insurers' agent accepts in payment of a premium a note which is not paid when due, there is no presumption that he was to raise money thereon as an agent for the insured and pay the premium out of the proceeds.

And where the insurers accept their agent's note in discharge of an account current between them in which the agent was debited with the amount of the premium, that affords no presumption of an intention to treat their own agent as agent for the insured, or the insurance as subsisting contrary to the terms of their contract with the policy-holder.

Acey v. Fernie, [1840] 7 M. & W. 151. approved.—LONDON AND LANCASHIRE LIFE ASSURANCE CO. v. FLEMING, P.C.

3. Life policy—Trust for wife and children—Mode of payment—Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 93), s. 10—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 72), ss. 11, 22.—Section 11 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, does not apply to a policy effected by a husband in favour of his wife and children before the commencement of that Act, even though the husband dies after that Act has come into operation. The moneys payable under a policy effected under the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, should, therefore, be paid to a trustee appointed in accordance with section 10 of that Act, and not to the legal personal representatives of the husband.

4. Marine—Collison clause—Exemption of underwriters—Proviso—Construction.—A collision clause in a policy of insurance upon a ship stipulated that no liability was to attach to the underwriters in respect of "any sum which the assured may become liable to pay, or shall pay, for removal of obstructions under statutory powers, . . . consequent on such collision . . ."

Held, that the underwriters were exempt from liability, whether by way of damages or otherwise, for the removal of obstructions consequent on collision.

The North Britain, 42 W. R. 243. [1894] P. 77, approved.—"ENGINEER," THE, H.L., 530.

5. Marine—Freight—Notice of abandonment—Personal negligence of the assured.—Where a ship carrying a cargo sustains sea damage to such an extent as would justify an abandonment to the underwriters on ship, and under such circumstances that the cargo could not possibly be carried on in any substituted ship, it is not necessary that notice of abandonment should be given to the underwriters on freight.

It is no defence to an action on a policy of marine insurance, claiming as for a loss by perils of the sea, that the loss was brought about by the personal (though not wilful) negligence of the assured in the navigation of the ship.—TRINDER, ANDERSON, & CO. v. THAMES INSURANCE CO., C.A., 561.

6. Marine—Mortgage of shares in ship—Policy on ship—Right of mortgagee to sue on policy—Mortgagor master of ship—Barratry of master.—The plaintiff advanced a sum of money to a person who was about to purchase certain shares in a ship upon the terms that the latter should be appointed captain, and that the advance should be secured by a mortgage of the borrower's shares in the ship, and that an insurance should be effected on the ship to cover the plaintiff's interest as mortgagee. A policy on the ship was accordingly effected by the ship's husband "as well in their own names as for and in the name or names of all and every other person or persons to whom the same doth, may, or shall appertain in part or in all." The policy covered a loss by perils of the sea and by barratry of the master. The mortgagor was appointed captain, and the ship was lost through his barratrous act. In an action on the policy,

Held, that, as the plaintiff's interest in the ship was covered by the policy, he was entitled to recover, the causa proxima of the loss being a peril of the sea; and, further, that, if the mortgag r was appointed captain by the plaintiff as well as by the co-owners, the wrongful act of the captain was barratrous as against the plaintiff, and the latter could recover as for a lost by barratry.—SMALL v. UNITED KINGDOM MARINE INSURANCE ASSOCIATION, C.A., 24.

7. Marine—Policy—Perils to the hurt of ship—Damaged cargo—Liability of ship's underwriters.—A ship was insured by her owners, the plaintiffs, under a time policy, and the perils insured against were, among others, "of the sea, and of all other perils, losses, and misfortunes that have or shall come to the hurt, detriment, or damage of the said ship or any part thereof."

The vessel was laden with cotton seed, and, while proceeding up the Thames, was run into and so damaged that she had to be run aground to save her from sinking in deep water. After having undergone some temporary repairs, she was floated and taken into dock, but her cargo was so damaged with mud and water that the cargo owners abandoned it, and neither they nor their underwriters would pay freight or take delivery. In dock the damaged cargo became a nuisance, and had to be discharged and got rid of by the plaintiffs, who sought to recover from the ship's underwriters the costs of so doing.

Held, that the expense so incurred by the plaintiffs was not covered by the policy.—FIELD STEAMSHIP CO. v. BURR, Q.B.D., 490.

8. Marine—Policy on freight—Exception—Claim consequent on loss of time—Delay by peril of sea.—A time policy of marine insurance against total loss of freight of a ship contained the following exception: "Warranted free from any claim consequent on loss of time, whether arising from a peril of the sea or otherwise."

While the ship was proceeding on a voyage under a charter her main shaft broke by perils of the sea, the damage being of such a character that the necessary delay for repairs frustrated the objects of the adventure, and the owners lost their chartered freight. In an action by the owners against the underwriters,

Held, that the claim was within the terms of the warranty, and therefore the underwriters were not liable.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (45 W. R. 114, [1897] 1 Q. B. 29) affirmed.—BENSAUDE v. THAMES AND MERSEY INSURANCE CO., H.L., 78.

9. Marine—Policy on freight—Loss by fire—Meaning of general words "all other losses and misfortunes."—A portion of a cargo of coals, the freight on which was insured against loss by fire, and also against "all other perils, losses, and misfortunes that have or shall come to the hurt, detriment, or damage of the subject-matter of the aforesaid subject-matter of insurance, or any part thereof," having become heated during the course of the voyage, on which freight was insured, was discharged and sold at an intermediate port, where the master, having discovered the heating of the cargo, had put in for the general safety of the ship, freight, and cargo. None of the cargo had been on fire, and the portion sold fetched the price of sound coals, less the expenses of discharging and an allowance for damage by handling.

The shipowners claimed from the underwriters for a loss of their freight on the portion of cargo so discharged and sold; and it was agreed that the underwriters would not rely on the defence that the ship was unseaworthy, or the condition of the cargo improper.

Held, that the shipowners were entitled to recover the loss of freight claimed as a partial loss under the policy.—"KNIGHT OF ST. MICHAEL," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 396.

10. Marine—Repairs to ship in dock—Survey for Lloyd's classification—Apportionment of expenses between shipowners and underwriters.—A ship owned by the plaintiffs was placed in dry dock, for the purpose of repairs for which the defendants, as underwriters on the ship, were liable. The plaintiffs took advantage of the ship being in dock to have her surveyed for the purpose of retaining her class at Lloyd's, which they were entitled to have done at any time within twelve months of the date when the survey was due.

Held that the dock dues for the time when the survey was being done must be borne equally by the plaintiffs and the defendants.

Held, also, by Chitty and Collins, L.JJ. (A. L. Smith, L.J., dissenting), that the cost of getting the ship into and out of the dock must be borne equally by the plaintiffs and the defendants.

11. Marine—Re-insurance—Collision clause—Collision with sunken barge.—The plaintiff underwrote a time policy on a steamer, containing a clause that if the steamer should come into collision with any other vessel, and the insured should have to pay damages, the insurers would pay.

The defendant underwrote a policy of re-insurance, on the same steamer, for the same period, subject to the same clauses and conditions as the original policy, and to pay as might be paid thereon, but only to pay all claims for loss or damage done or received through collision.

During the period covered the steamer struck a barge, which had just been sunk by collision with another vessel, and the steamer was damaged. The barge was raised next day, and sailed to her home port, and was repaired.

Held, that, although at the moment when the steamer struck her the barge could not have been navigated, yet, as she became navigable as soon as she was raised, there was a collision between two navigable vessels, in respect of which the plaintiff was entitled to recover on the policy of re-insurance.—CHANDLER v. BLOGG, Q.B.D.

12. Marine—Re-insurance—Cotton on deck—Damaged cotton—Concealment.—The plaintiffs, who had insured a cargo of damaged cotton, re-insured the same with the defendant, but did not inform him that it was damaged cotton.

The slip contained the terms, "cotton on deck, f. p. a. & c., including jettison and washing overboard." When the policy of re-insurance was tendered to the defendant for signature it differed from the slip, for, instead of the words "f. p. a. and c., &c.," it was "f. p. a., &c., as in original policy," and in that policy the risk was described as "f. p. a., but including risk of jettison and washing overboard"; but he signed it without inquiry or objection. The quantity of cotton insured "on deck" amounted to £7,500.

Held, that the instructions being to insure such a quantity "on deck" clearly showed that it was damaged cotton, and that, under the circumstances, there was no concealment; also, that, although an attempt had been made to establish that the course of business was to say that cotton was damaged, no such course of business was established.—BRITISH AND FOREIGN MARINE INSURANCE CO. v. STURGES, Q.B.D.

13. Marine — Re-insurance — Lapse of original policies—New policy—Alteration of risk—Liability under policy of re-insurance.—The defendant re-insured certain risks with the plaintiffs. Of the two original policies covering these risks, one expired by effluxion of time and the second was cancelled, the defendant at the time that the policy was cancelled issuing a fresh policy to his assured, which, however, contained provisions differing somewhat from those in the two original policies. No notice of these changes was sent to the plaintiffs, who subsequently, in ignorance of these circumstances, paid the defendant as and for a total loss.

Held, that the plaintiffs could not recover back from the defendant the money so paid. The defendant had paid under his policy for a total loss, and was entitled to recover from the plaintiffs under their re-insurance policy because at the time he re-insured with them, and at the time of the loss, he had an insurable interest in the subject-matter of the insurance.

Held, also, that the difference in terms between the two policies merely affected the defendant's position with his assured, and gave no ground for the plaintiffs cancelling their liability under their policy of re-insurance.—LOWER RHINE INSURANCE ASSOCIATION v. SEDGWICK, Q.B.D., 380.

14. Marine—Ship—Open cover—Re-insurance—Contract for sea insurance—Policy—Sum or sums insured—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 93.—A marine insurance company made a claim under an open cover of re-insurance subscribed by the defendant and other underwriters at Lloyd's on excesses over certain amounts upon certain risks taken by the plaintiffs. By the terms of the open cover £4,000 was specified as the limit of excess taken on any one ship, and £400 was specified as the defendant's proportion of this limit. The other underwriters' proportions were also specified, but beyond this there was no statement of the sum or sums insured.

Held, that this open cover was a contract for sea insurance within the meaning of section 93, sub-section 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891; but that it was not valid as a policy, because it did not specify the sum or sums insured as required by sub-section 3.—HOME MARINE INSURANCE CO. v. SMITH, C.A., 661.

15. Marine—Ship "sailing on or after a specified date."—In an action on a policy of marine insurance on goods in ships "sailing on or after the 1st of March," it appeared that the ship in question, having cleared the Custom House, finished loading her cargo about ten o'clock at night on the 29th of February, and was then ready to go to sea, but by a regulation of the port ships were not allowed to leave the port after dark. The master, however, with the object of keeping his crew on board so as to be ready to start early in the morning, moved away from the wharf about five hundred yards out into the river and there anchored. In so moving the ship he placed her in a slightly more advantageous position for starting than she would have been in had she remained at the wharf, but the gaining of such advantage was no part of the master's motive in moving her. On the following morning, the 1st of March, she proceeded on her voyage.

Held, that the ship "sailed" on the 1st of March, and not on the 29th of February, and that the policy attached.—SEA INSURANCE CO. v. BLOGG, C.A.

JUSTICES:—

1. Conviction—Principal and accessory—"Cause" act of cruelty—Knowingly advise and counsel—Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 92), s. 2—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 5.—The effect of section 5 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, is to enable the prosecution to proceed against a person who aids, abets, counsels, or procures the commission of an offence punishable on summary conviction as if he himself had committed the offence.

The owner of a horse which was lame consulted a veterinary surgeon as to whether the horse was in a fit condition to work. The veterinary surgeon advised that it was, and that the work would not cause it additional suffering. The owner worked the horse. The veterinary surgeon was summoned, under section 2 of the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849, for cruelly ill-treating the horse "by causing it to be worked while in an unfit state." The magistrate found that the defendant knew, when he advised the working of the horse, that to work it in its then state would be an act of cruelty, and, if the defendant had been proceeded against for counselling the act of cruelty, the magistrate would have convicted him, but, as he did not "cause" the act of cruelty, the summons was dismissed. On appeal, Held, that the learned magistrate should have convicted, since, by section 5 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, anyone who counsels the commission of an offence punishable summarily may be proceeded against as a principal.—BENFIELD v. SIMMS, Q.B.D.

2. Disqualification—Pecuniary interest—Bias—Membership of the Incorporated Law Society—Proceedings against an unqualified person for acting as a solicitor.—On a prosecution by the Incorporated Law Society under section 12 of the Solicitors Act, 1874, against a person for pretending to be a solicitor, one of the justices before whom the case was heard was both a practising solicitor and an ordinary member of the prosecuting society, but not one of the council of that society. The solicitor for the accused was aware the magistrate in question was a solicitor, but he did not raise any objection. He was not, however, aware that the magistrate was a member of the society. The evidence showed that the whole responsibility for prosecutions rested solely with the council of the Law Society.

Held, on a rule for a certiorari to quash, that the justice was not disqualified from adjudicating by reason of the fact that he was a mere ordinary member of the Incorporated Law Society; that he was not affected by bias or pecuniary interest; and that he was not the prosecutor.—REG. v. BURTON, YOUNG, EX PARTE, Q.B.D., 127.

3. Disqualification—Solicitor—Clerk to magistrates—Ex officio justice—Justices' Qualification Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 18), ss. 1, 2—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 22.—D., a solicitor, had acted as clerk to the magistrates of the Ringwood Division of the county of Southampton for many years, and recently became ex officio a justice of that division by virtue of being elected chairman of the district council. He tendered his resignation of the office of clerk to the magistrates, but no steps were taken to accept it, and he continued to draw the salary attached to the office and to perform the duties connected therewith as before by means of a deputy.

W. was tried and convicted of an assault upon a woman before D. and six other justices, and he applied for a certiorari to bring up the conviction to be quashed.

Held, that the conviction must stand, as D. could lawfully adjudicate upon the case, because he had ceased in fact to be a practising solicitor at the time of the conviction, and by his accepting the office of chairman to the district council his former office of clerk to the justices had been vacated, since the two offices were incompatible.

4. Jurisdiction—Right to be tried by jury—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 17, sub-section 2.—Where a person appears before a court of summary jurisdiction, charged with an offence to which section 17 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, applies, the court ought, in pursuance of sub-section 2, to inform him of his right to be tried by a jury before he pleads to the charge. If he be not informed of that right and, after the charge has been gone into, pleads guilty, the conviction is bad.

Semble: It is immaterial whether or not he knew of his right to be tried by a jury, and immaterial whether or not the court knew, before the proceedings commenced, that he meant to plead guilty in the course of the case.—REG. v. COCKSHOTT, Q.B.D.

5. Licensing law—Appeal—Transfer of licence—Certiorari—Mandamus—Alehouse Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), ss. 4. 14.—By section 4 of 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, it is provided that at special transfer sessions "it shall be lawful for the justices there and then assembled, in the case and in the manner and for the time hereinafter directed, to licence such persons intending to keep inns theretofore kept by other persons being about to remove from such inns, as they, the said justices, shall . . . deem fit and proper persons."

A. for ten years had obtained an annual certificate for a licence to sell beer on certain premises. These premises, however, had been kept as a draper's shop during that time, and not as an inn, and A. had never sold beer therein, nor had he during that time been in occupation thereof. He applied at transfer sessions for a grant by way of transfer to B. of the licence or certificate. The justices granted the application.

Held, (1) following Reg. v. Sharman, ante, p. 367, that a certiorari would not lie; (2) that the justices had not heard and determined the matter according to law, and that a mandamus ought to be granted against them. They had not merely misconstrued the statute, but had taken into consideration matters outside the ambit of their jurisdiction.—REG. v. COTHAM, Q.B.D., 512.

6. Licensing law—Appeal against refusal to transfer—Notice of appeal served on justices—Order by court of quarter sessions on justices to pay appellant's costs—Certiorari—Alehouse Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), ss. 27, 29.—D. appealed to quarter sessions against a refusal of the licensing justices to transfer a licence. At the hearing of the appeal the justices appeared by counsel to inform the court of the reasons on which had acted; but the quarter sessions allowed the appeal and made an order directing that the justices should pay all the costs that the appellant had incurred.

Held, that so much of the order as directed the justices to pay costs was ultra vires, as the quarter sessions had no jurisdiction under sections 27 and 29 of the Alehouse Act, 1828, to make such an order.—REG. v. LONDON (STRAND DIVISION) JUSTICES, Q.B.D., 558.

7. Licensing law — Excess of jurisdiction — Certiorari — Mandamus.—At a general annual licensing meeting an application was made for a licence to sell intoxicating liquors. The justices granted the licence upon the applicant paying to them a sum of money, which money they intended to apply in reduction of the rates of the borough, or for some other similar public purpose. Certain persons, who had appeared before the justices in opposition to the application, then obtained a rule for a certiorari to bring up the licence to be quashed, and also a rule for a mandamus to hear and determine the application for a licence according to law.

Held, that the rule for a mandamus must be made absolute, on the ground that the objectors had a right to be heard before the licensing justices according to law, that the justices in annexing to the grant of the licence the condition of the payment of money showed that they had allowed their decision to be influence by extraneous considerations, and that the hearing under such circumstances was equivalent to no hearing at all; but that the rule for a certiorari must, on the authority of Reg. v. Sharman, ante, p. 367, [1898] 1 Q. B. 578, be discharged on the ground that the grant by licensing justices of a licence to sell intoxicating liquor is not a judicial order.—REG. v. BOWMAN, Q.B.D.

8. Licensing law—New licence—Certiorari to quash—Objections by one of the public—Refusal of justices to hear statements of fact except upon oath—Mandamus—Discretion of justices—Practice.—At a meeting of the licensing justices D. desired to make statements of fact in opposition to the granting of a licence for new premises.

The justices decided that they would not hear him unless he was sworn as the other witnesses who had given their evidence had been.

D., after the provisional licence had been confirmed, obtained a rule for a certiorari to bring up the provisional licence to be quashed, but as it appeared doubtful if that was the proper remedy, a rule for a mandamus was also obtained.

Held, discharging both rules, that as the granting of a licence was not a judicial order, the remedy by certiorari was inapplicable; and, as to the mandamus, that it was in the discretion of the justices to impose, if they thought fit, the obligation of an oath, and that in the exercise of their discretion they had jurisdiction to refuse to hear the objector unless he was sworn.—REG. v. SHARMAN, Q.B.D., 367.

9. Licensing Law—Renewal—Refusal—Appeal—Appearance of licensing justices—Costs—Jurisdiction—Alehouse Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), ss. 27, 29.—Where on an appeal to quarter sessions against the refusal of the licensing justices to renew a licence, the justices appeared and opposed the appeal, the quarter sessions have no jurisdiction under section 27 of the Alehouse Act, 1828, to order the justices to pay costs to the appellant in the event of the appeal being allowed.—REG. v. STAFFORDSHIRE JUSTICES, Q.B.D.

10. Licensing law—Renewal—Refusal to renew—Appeal to quarter sessions—Costs—Non-appearance of objector—Jurisdiction to give costs against objector—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), ss. 31, 50—Alehouse Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c 61), s. 27—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 43), s. 7—Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 13.—Justices at a licensing meeting are not a court of summary jurisdiction, and therefore section 31 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, does not apply to an appeal from them to quarter sessions; that court has no jurisdiction to order an objector to the renewal of a licence to pay the costs of the appeal.

separation, custody of children, or maintenance, under section 5 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, it is the duty of the clerk to the justices to make a note of the evidence and of the reasons for the decision, and supply the note, should there be an appeal, to the Probate Division.—ROBINSON v. ROBINSON, Q.B.D.

13. Practice—Two informations—Separate offences—Hearing of second information before giving decision of first—Legality of conviction. — M., a licensed victualler, was charged on two informations with two separate offences. The first with permitting drunkenness on his premises on the 7th of February, 1898; and the second with selling on the 8th of February intoxicating liquor during closing hours. The justices heard the first information, and decided to convict, but did not announce their decision until they had heard the second information, which they dismissed; when they then convicted on the first information. In acting on each information the justices proceeded solely on the evidence applicable to that information.

Held, that the conviction was good.

14. Practice—Vaccination—Order to have child vaccinated — Costs of complainant — Distress—Imprisonment—"Civil debt" — Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 18; 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 6.—An order was made by justices, under the Vaccination Act, 1867, s. 31, ordering the parent of a child to have the child vaccinated within a certain time, and to pay 8s. 6d. costs to the informant. The order further provided that the payment of the costs should be enforced by distress and imprisonment.

Held, the justices had power under section 18 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, to order that the payment of the costs should be so enforced, and that such power was not affected by section 6 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879.—REG. v. BURROWS, Q.B.D., 29.

LANDLORD and TENANT:—

1. Assignment—Equitable lease—Personal arrangement.—Where premises are let upon the terms, "We hereby agree to let you keep peaceable possession . . . for ten years on condition that you commit no nuisance and pay . . . rent thereof. You to pay local board rates, . . ." it is only a personal arrangement between the parties, and no estate passes.—DUXBURY v. SANDIFORD, Q.B.D.

2. Compensation for improvements — Notice of claim — Time — Determination of tenancy — Farm buildings held over by tenant—Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 61), s. 7.—Where, under the terms of his lease and the custom of the country, the tenant of a farm held over the farm buildings for a period after he had given up possession of all the agricultural land,

Held, that the determination of his tenancy within the meaning of section 7 of the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, took place when he gave up the agricultural land, and that a notice of claim for compensation given after that date, but more than two months before he gave up the buildings, was bad.

3. Lease—Breach of covenant—Sufficiency of notice to repair—Re-entry—Continuing breach—Damages—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 14 (1).—A notice given by a lessor to a lessee in respect of breaches of covenant, "that you have not kept the said premises well and sufficiently repaired, and the party and other walls thereof," is not sufficiently definite; and even assuming that other parts of the notice sufficiently specify other breaches, the notice is invalidated by that part of it which is insufficient, and a claim to enforce a right of re-entry will therefore fail.

A notice requiring a lessee to repair "within one month, or a reasonable time thereafter," when the lease itself allows three months, is good within the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 14 (1).

A breach of covenant is not the less a continuing breach because the premises have been demolished, and, apart from the question of notice, will entitle a lessor to damages up to the time of demolition. —SERLE, RE, GREGORY v. SERLE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 440.

4. Lease—Breach of covenant not to assign without consent—Forfeiture—Equitable relief.—By a lease, granted by the plaintiffs to the defendants, the defendants covenanted (inter alia) not to underlet, assign, or part with the possession of the rooms or offices and premises, or any part thereof, to any person or persons, without the consent in writing of the plaintiffs for that purpose first obtained, such consent not to be unreasonably withheld, and there was a further clause entitling the plaintiffs to re-enter upon and into the said rooms or offices or premises, or any part thereof, in the name of the whole, if the said defendants should not perform or keep the covenants contained in the deed.

The defendants received a letter from B. & B., in which all the terms of a sub-letting were set forth, and they were actually permitted by the defendants to partly move into the room.

No consent in writing had been obtained from the plaintiffs, but it was admitted that B. & B. were desirable tenants.

Held, that there was a sub-letting, for the letter amounted to an agreement, which could have been enforced, and so a forfeiture ensued, and the plaintiffs were entitled to possession.

Further, that the defendants were not entitled to equitable relief on the authority of Barrow v. Isaacs & Son, [1891] 1 Q. B. 417.—EASTERN TELEGRAPH CO. v. DENT, Q.B.D.

5. Lease—Covenant—Brewer's lease—Tied house—Covenant to buy from lessor—Assignment of reversion—Severance of business.—A brewer's lease of a beerhouse contained a covenant by the lessee to deal exclusively with the lessor or his firm, or his or their successors in business, and there was also an interpretation clause whereby the expression "lessor" and "lessee" were to include their respective executors, administrators, and assigns, where the context allowed. The lessor assigned the reversion of the house to a brewery company, who did not, however, purchase his business, which was still being carried on as at the date of the lease.

Held that the context did not allow of the insertion in the covenant of the words "executors, administrators, and assigns" after the word "lessor"; that the meaning of the covenant was that the lessee was to buy all his beers, &c., from the lessor or his successors in business; and that he could not be compelled to buy from the company.

6. Lease—Covenant to pay rates, taxes, and assessments—Paving expenses—Claim by owner against tenant—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 150.—Expenses of paving a street recovered by an urban authority from the owner of premises outside the metropolis under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, cannot be recovered by the owner from his tenant, under a covenant by the tenant to pay "all rates, taxes, and assessments whatsoever which now are, or during the term shall be, imposed or assessed upon the premises or the landlords or tenants thereof by authority of Parliament or otherwise, except the landlords' property tax."—BAYLIS v. JIGGINS, Q.B.D.

7. Lease—Covenant for quiet enjoyment—Reversion assigned to a railway company—Exercise of statutory powers—Damages—Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 68—Railway Clauses Act, 1845, s. 6.—A. was lessee of a house under a lease containing a covenant for quiet enjoyment. The reversion, subject to the lease, was acquired by agreement by a company empowered under a special Act to construct a railroad, and for that purpose to acquire certain lands, which included the demised house. The house was not, however, required for the actual construction of the railroad. The special Act was passed previously to the lease. In the construction of the railroad the company damaged, but did not destroy, the house, without being guilty of negligence.

Held, that an action by A. against the company for damages for breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment would not lie; and Held, that, in an action by the company against A. for rent, the alleged breach of the covenant was no defence, and that the damage sustained by the house could not be set off against the demand for rent.

A railway company taking lands under statutory powers, and constructing works within such powers, is entitled to take the interest of any person having an interest in land without incurring liability in respect of any existing covenant entered into by the owner whose interest the company acquires, so far as the enforcement of such a covenant would impose a burden upon such company in derogation of its statutory rights and obligations.

Semble, that such a covenant only covers the acts of the voluntary assignees of the original lessor.

Decision of Byrne, J. (ante, p. 509), affirmed.—ANDERSON v. MANCHESTER, &c., RAILWAY CO., C.A.

8. Lease—Covenant—Specific devise of lease—Burden of covenant—Residuary legatee—Liability of lessor's estate.—By a deed dated the 2nd of September, 1868, a lessor covenanted as follows: "The lessor, his heirs or assigns, will, at his or their own expense, on or before the 1st day of September, 1869, completely finish laying down in good English grass, and in accordance with the rules of good husbandry, the 1,000 acres which the lessor has already commenced laying down in English grass."

This covenant was followed by a declaration at the end of the lease in these words: "It is hereby declared that there shall not be implied in this lease any covenant or provision whatever on the part of either of the parties hereto."

The lessor died, and by his will specifically devised the land which was subject to the lease. The covenant was broken, and the damages assessed.

Held, that the covenant must be construed as qualified and controlled by the declaration, and therefore did not run with the reversion; and, moreover, that, since the covenant was not incident to the relation of landlord and tenant, the liability for the breach should be borne by the testator's general estate.

On the death of a lessor the burden of a covenant to ensure premises being put into a condition fit for occupation by a tenant should, as between the specific devisee and the testator's general estate, be borne by the general estate; but should the nature of the obligation constitute part of the relation of landlord and tenant, then the burden falls upon the devisee.

9. Lease — Ejectment — Forfeiture — Continuing breach of covenant—Claim for rent—Waiver of forfeiture—Notice—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 14.—The defendant was tenant to the plaintiff under a lease containing a general covenant to repair and also a covenant to repair upon notice. The premises having become out of repair, the plaintiff, on the 22nd of September, 1896, gave notice to the defendant under section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, requiring him within three months to execute the repairs therein specified. The notice not being complied with, the plaintiff, on the 14th of January, 1897, commenced an action in which he claimed possession of the premises and rent to the 25th of December, 1896. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff, by claiming rent in the action, had waived the forfeiture, and was not entitled to recover possession.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession, for (1) the breach being a continuing breach, he could rely on the breaches between the 25th of December and the 14th of January; and (2) the premises being in the same state of disrepair at the commencement of the action as at the giving of the notice, the notice was sufficient.—PENTON v. BARNETT, C.A., 33.

10. Lease—Grant of way-leave—Reservation of payments—Rent or sum—Rent running with reversion—32 Hen. 8, c. 34.—In a grant of a way-leave to a railway company sums made payable to the grantor in respect of traffic passing over the line are a rent within the statute 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, and the benefit of such rent runs with the reversion to the land.—HASTINGS (LORD) v. NORTH-EASTERN RAILWAY CO., Ch.D. Byrne, J.

11. Lease—Proviso to determine—Mesne assignments—Who can give notice.—In an action brought to recover two quarters' rent, the plaintiff S. was the assignee of the orignal lessor H., and the defendant D. was the original lessee. The defendant had assigned to the third party F., who had covenanted to indemnify him. F. in turn assigned to one Y., who had covenanted to indemnify him.

Y. deposited the lease with H. & Co. to secure an advance of £50. He then disappeared and left the premises unoccupied. F. purchased the rights of H. & Co. for £10, and he then took possession of the premises and let them and received the rents, and paid the present plaintiff the rent due to him, he being aware what was being done. The original lease, which was for twenty-one years, contained the following proviso: "In case the said Richard Drew, his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall be desirous of determining this present lease or demise at the end or expiration of the first seven or fourteen years of the said term hereby granted, and of such his or their desire or intention shall give notice in writing to the said Frederick Hose, his heirs or assigns, or shall leave the same at his or their usual or last-known place of abode in England, six calendar months before the expiration of the said seven or fourteen years of the said term hereby granted . . . then and in such case forward and immediately after the expiration of such seven or fourteen years of the said term this indenture and every covenant, clause, matter, or thing herein contained shall cease and determine." Notices were duly given by D. and F. to determine the lease at the end of the fourteenth year, and the question was whether the lease was thereby determined.

Held, that the notice should have been given by Y., and that, therefore, the lease was still subsisting.—SEAWARD v. DREW, Q.B.D.

12. Lease—Public-house — Covenant by lessee — Lessee and assigns not wilfully to do anything which might be a reasonable ground for withholding licence —Drunkenness permitted by under-tenant of assignee of lessee—Action against assignee.—A lease of a public-house granted by the plaintiff contained a covenant on the part of the lessee that he, his executors, administrators, and assigns, would not wilfully do or suffer anything which might be a reasonable ground for withholding the licence. The defendants, who were assignees of the lessee, let the premises to a monthly tenant, who on one occasion permitted drunkenness to take place on the premises, in consequence of which the licensing justices refused to renew the licence.

Held, that there had been no breach of covenant on the part of the defendants.—BRYANT v. HANCOCK, C.A., 386.

13. Lease — Re-entry—Company— Re-construction. —A lease contained a proviso for re-entry if the lessees, being a company, "shall enter into liquidation voluntary or compulsory." The lessees, while solvent, entered into liquidation for the purpose only of re-construction with additional capital.

Held, that this was a liquidation within the above proviso.— HORSEY ESTATE v. STEIGER, Q.B.D.

14. Lease—Rooms — Outer walls — Signboards — Derogation from grant.—A lease of rooms in a house constituting a dwelling by itself includes the outer walls of the house so far as they are solely appropriate to the rooms let.—CARLISLE CAFÉ Co. v. MUSE, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 107.

15. Lease—Three years' agreement—"With the option of renewal"—Purchaser—Notice of agree ment —Ejectment—Specific performance.—On the 30th of August, 1894, C. agreed to let for three years to the defendant S. certain premises at a fixed yearly rent, "with the option of renewal."

In July, 1896, the plaintiff L. purchased C.'s interest in the premises, and knew that S. was in possession under an agreement, but, till early in 1897, was not aware of the clause giving the option of renewal.

At the expiration of the three years L. commenced an action of ejectment, and S. counterclaimed for specific performance of the agreement to renew.

Held, that L., as purchaser, must be fixed with notice of the contents of the agreement with S., and, further, that the words in the agreement relating to the renewal were sufficiently definite to enable a decree for specific performance to be made to grant a renewed agreement for a lease for the same period and on the same terms, except as to renewal, as contained in the agreement of the 30th of August, 1894.—LEWIS v. STEPHENSON, Q.B.D.

16. Market garden—Tenancy from year to year—Compensation—Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 61), s. 61—Market Gardeners' Compensation Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 27), s. 4.—By an agreement made in 1886 certain land was let as market garden ground to a tenant at a certain rent "a year, payable quarterly, on the usual quarterly days for payment of rent in each year." The agreement also contained the following proviso: "That the said tenancy may be determined by either party giving to the other three calendar months' notice to quit or of his intention of quitting, as the case may be, on any day of the year." This contract was still current on the 1st of January, 1896, on which date the Market Gardeners' Compensation Act, 1895, came into operation.

Held, that there was a letting from year to year, and a contract of tenancy within the meaning of section 4 of the above Act as interpreted by section 61 of the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, notwithstanding the proviso in the agreement as to the giving of the three months' notice; and that the tenant was consequently entitled to claim compensation for improvements effected by him on the land prior to the commencement of the Market Gardeners' Compensation Act, 1895.

In re Threlfall, 29 W. R. 128, 16 Ch. D. 274, followed.—KING v. EVERSFIELD, C.A., 51.

17. Notice to quit—Tenancy for one year certain and so on from year to year—Proviso for notice to quit at any time—Notice to quit during first year.—Premises were let, under a written agreement, "for the term of one year certain from the date thereof and so on from year to year, unless or until the tenancy thereby created should be determined by either party giving to the other twenty-eight days' notice in writing, such notice to expire at any period of the year without any reference to the time of entry, the date of the agreement, or the commencement of the tenancy."

Held, that the tenancy could not be determined by notice during the first year.—CANNON BREWERY Co. v. NASH, C.A.

18. Part of the freehold—Chattels thrown in heaps upon the land—Intention—Mines and minerals—"Tap-cinder" — Artificial product — Mounds of "tap-cinder," the refuse arising from the puddling of pig-iron, thrown upon land held on a tenancy by the tenant, with the intention of its once more forming part of the earth out of which it was produced, become part of the land and belong to the owner of the freehold.

In a lease of mines of coal and ironstone and "all mines, seams, veins, and beds as well opened as unopened, of all other minerals and clay lying within and under the lands from the surface down to" a certain mine named, these words do not include such mounds of tap-cinder as above mentioned.—BOILEAU v. HEATH, Ch.D. Bigham, J., 602.

LANDS CLAUSES ACTS:—

1. Compensation—Land taken by school board—Depreciation of adjoining land—Damages.—The London School Board took a part of the land of which P. was lessee for the purpose of erecting thereon a school. P. claimed compensation for the depreciation of the adjoining part of his land, on which he had erected houses, owing to the noise that would probably be caused by the children at the school. The jury assessed the damages at £1,000.

Held, that the jury were entitled to take the matter into consideration in assessing damages and that the court would not disturb their verdict.—REG. v. PEARCE, LONDON SCHOOL BOARD, EX PARTE, Q.B.D.

2. Compensation — "Part of house" — Material detriment to remainder—Access over land taken—Railway company—"Road"—Power of company to grant right of way—Arbitration—Finality of Scottish award—Right of one tenant in common—Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 19), s. 90—Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 33), ss. 46, 49, 60.—A railway company were entitled by a section in their special Act, notwithstanding section 90 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, to take a portion of certain houses or other buildings or manufactories scheduled in their Act without being obliged to take the remainder, if the portion taken could, in the opinion of the authority to whom the question of disputed compensation should be submitted, be severed from the remainder of the property without material detriment thereto. The company gave notice to treat for 232 square yards, a portion of the scheduled property, which formed an access used jointly by the respondents and another firm. The respondents required the railway company to take the whole of their property. A statutory submission to arbitration containing the question whether or not the portion of land containing the 232 square yards could be severed from the remainder of the property of the respondents without material detriment, reserving only the question whether section 90 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, applied, was entered into. Before the arbitrator the railway company offered to allow access to the remainder of the respondents' property under a bridge over the portion taken. The arbitrator found that the portion containing 232 square yards could not be severed without material detriment to the remainder of the respondents' property, and awarded compensation upon the assumption that the company were bound to take the whole. In an action to recover the amount awarded,

Held, that whether the arbitrator was right or wrong in declining to take the offer of the company into consideration in assessing the compensation, his award, until set aside by a proper process, was binding on the court, and could not be reviewed.

LIBEL:—

1. Practice—Payment into court—Newspaper—Pleading—Libel Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 96), s. 2—Rules of Supreme Court, ord. 22, r. 1.—The defendants in an action for a libel published in a newspaper pleaded by way of defence, in accordance with the Libel Act, 1843, s. 2, that the libel was published without actual malice, and without gross negligence, an apology, and payment into court of £5. The jury at the trial found that the libel was published without actual malice, but not without gross negligence, and that the apology was sufficient, and they assessed the damages at £5.

Held, that the defendants, having made the payment into court as part of a defence under the Libel Act, 1843, s. 2, and having failed at the trial on that defence, were not entitled to avail themselves of the payment into court as being made under ord. 22, r. 1, and therefore the plaintiff was entitled to judgment.—OXLEY v. WILKES, C.A.

2. Slander—Unauthorized use of name—Calculated to injure plaintiff in his profession—Slander of goods—Injunction.—An injunction will not issue to restrain the unauthorized use of a person's name even though such use is calculated to injure him in his profession, unless such use is shown to be injurious to the plaintiff's reputation, or to his property.

A., a medical man, made certain statements to B., the owner of a certain medicinal liquid, as to his use of the liquid without any view as to such statements being used to puff the sale of the liquid. Subsequently B. published these statements in the advertisement of the liquid. A. applied for an injunction to restrain this unauthorized use of his name, and gave evidence to show that such a use of it tended to injure him in his profession. The jury found that the advertisement was not libellous.

Held, that since the publication was not injurious to A.'s reputation, nor injurious to his property, no action lay.—DOCKRELL v. DOUGALL, Q.B.D.

LICENSING LAW:—

1. Appeal against confirmation of new licence—Rules of quarter sessions—Ultra vires—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), ss. 37, 43.—By section 43 of the Licensing Act, 1872, "Any person who appears before the licensing justices and opposes the grant of a new licence, and no other person, may appear and oppose the confirmation of such grant by the confirming authority." The same section requires the quarter sessions to make rules "as to the proceedings to be adopted for confirmation of new licences" in their county.

A rule made by quarter sessions under this section required every person intending to oppose the confirmation of a provisional licence to give certain notices of his intention, as a condition precedent to his being heard in opposition to the confirmation.

Held, that the rule was ultra vires as imposing a condition on the statutory right of a person who had opposed before the licensing justices to be heard in opposition to the confirmation.—REG. v. BIRD, NEEDES, EX PARTE, Q.B.D., 528.

2. Licence—Inn—House pulled down—Transfer of licence—Intoxicating Liquors Licensing Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), ss. 4, 14—Rule nisi for mandamus to justices—Costs of persons opposing rule.—In the case of a licensed public-house which has been, or is about to be, pulled down, the person who applies under section 14 of the Intoxicating Liquors Act, 1828, for a transfer of the licence of that house to a new house must be the person who is the licensed holder of the inn at the time the premises are pulled down, and the house itself must be kept as an inn at the time it is pulled down. The court has jurisdiction to grant costs to a person who successfully shows cause against a rule nisi for a mandamus to licensing justices, notwithstanding the decision of the House of Lords that licensing justices are not a court of summary jurisdiction (see Boulter v. Justices of Kent, ante, p. 114, [1897] A. C. 556).—REG. v. YORKSHIRE JUSTICES, SHAW, EX PARTE, Q.B.D., 334.

3. Licence—Order sanctioning removal—Grant of licence on condition of surrendering other licence—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 50.—At a general annual licensing meeting a publican, having obtained a renewal of a licence in respect of his licensed house, proceeded to apply for a new licence in respect of a neighbouring house. The justices made an order granting him such new licence subject to the condition of his giving up the licence of which he had just obtained a renewal.

Held, that the order was in substance an order sanctioning the removal of a licence, and that, inasmuch as the requirements of section 50 of the Licensing Act, 1872, had not been complied with, there was no jurisdiction to make such order.—REG. v. THORNTON, C.A., 241.

4. Licence—Renewal—Objection on same grounds as previous objection to transfer—Estoppel—Beerhouse Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 27), ss. 8, 19.—Where upon an application for the transfer of a licence to sell beer by retail on or off premises licensed before the 1st of May, 1869, an objection is made upon one of the four grounds specified in section 8 of the Beerhouse Act, 1869, but the justices granted the transfer, the same objection upon the same facts may be taken at the next general annual licensing meeting to the renewal of the licence, and the renewal may be refused on that ground.—SMITH v. SHANN, Q.B.D.

5. Refusal to quit licensed premises—Person not drunken, violent, quarrelsome, or disorderly—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 18.—A person cannot be convicted under section 18 of the Licensing Act, 1872, for refusing to quit licensed premises, if he is not drunken, violent, quarrelsome, or disorderly, although he may have been requested by the landlord to leave.—DALLIMORE v. TUTTON, Q.B.D.

6. Serving reputed prostitutes—Reasonable time for refreshments—Affirmative evidence of offence alone will support conviction—Licensing Act, 1879 (c. 49), s. 14—Justices—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (c. 49), s. 39.—M. was convicted under section 14 of the Licensing Act, 1872, of having permitted a reputed prostitute to remain on licensed premises longer than a reasonable time for the woman to take refreshments.

Held, that the conviction must be quashed because the evidence of the offence having been committed given by the prosecution was in fact circumstantial; and before a publican could be convicted affirmative evidence in every case must be given by the prosecution;

Held, also, that under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, s. 39, the onus of proving the offence rests on the prosecutor, and that the defendant was right in not calling evidence to rebut the charge.—MILLER v. DUDLEY JUSTICES, Q.B.D., 606.

7. Sunday closing—Beer ordered and paid for on Saturday, but delivered on Sunday—Opening licensed premises during prohibited hours—Conviction for—Sunday Closing (Wales) Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 61), ss. 1, 2—Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), s. 9.—Section 9 of the Licensing Act, 1874, provides that any person who, during the time at which premises for the sale of intoxicating liquors are directed to be closed, "opens or keeps open such premises for the sale of intoxicating liquors" shall be liable to a penalty.

A dozen bottles of beer were ordered from a beerhouse-keeper and paid for on a Saturday evening, and they were to have been delivered at the house of the purchaser on the Saturday night, but in consequence of an accident the delivery was overlooked, and did not take place on the Saturday as arranged.

On the Sunday during closing hours the purchaser of the beer sent his servant to the public-house for two bottles of the beer, which were delivered to the servant, who was seen to come out of the public-house with the beer.

Held, that, although the beer had been ordered and paid for during the time the premises were allowed to be open, the beerhouse-keeper, by the delivery of the two bottles of beer during prohibited hours, had "opened his premises for the sale of intoxicating liquors" within the meaning of section 9, and was liable to the penalty imposed by the section.—SAUNDERS v. THORNEY, Q.B.D.

8. Theatre—Selling intoxicating liquors after closing hour—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict c. 94), s. 72—Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), ss. 3, 9, 16.—The appellant was convicted at quarter sessions of having sold intoxicatng liquors at the bar of his theatre after the performance had ended and after closing hour for ordinary licensed premises in that borough.

Held, that section 72 of the Licensing Act, 1872, which provides that nothing in the Act "shall affect or apply to the sale of intoxicating liquors by proprietors of theatres in pursuance of the Act in that behalf," did not affect the question of closing hours, and that the conviction under section 9 of the Licensing Act, 1874, was therefore right.—GALLAGHER, v. RUDD, Q.B.D., 108.

LIMITATIONS, STATUTE of:—

1. Acknowledgment—Two letters—Parol evidence to connect—Admissibility of.—Parol evidence is admissible to show that a letter was written in answer to a former one, in order to read the two letters together that they may constitute an acknowledgment to take a debt out of the Statute of Limitations.—MCGUFFIE v. BURLEIGH, Q.B.D.

2. Money charged on land—Payment of interest by co-debtor—Real Property Limitation Act. 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), s. 8—21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3—Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856, s. 14.—The defendants, trustees of a will, in 1882 borrowed money from the plaintiffs, the payment of which was secured as follows: the defendants being beneficial owners of certain mortgages of lands caused the person who had the legal estate to assign the mortgages to the plaintiffs, the defendants not being parties to the deed of assignment. Then by a further deed to which both defendants and plaintiffs were parties it was agreed that the money advanced by the plaintiffs should be a first charge upon the principal and interest to be received or recovered by the plaintiffs by virtue of the mortgages so assigned to them, and that the plaintiffs should not realize the mortgages without first giving the defendants the opportunity of paying off the amount advanced to them.

There was no express covenant by the defendants to repay the advance. One of the defendants L. shortly after retired from the trust. Interest was paid to the plaintiffs by the other defendants down to 1896. In 1897 the plaintiffs brought this action against L. and the other trustees to recover the amount of the advance.

Held, that the money advanced by the plaintiffs was "money secured by mortgage and charged upon or payable out of land" within section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, and that that Act and not the Act of James I. applied; that consequently L. was not within the protection of section 14 of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856, and that the plaintiffs' claim was not barred against him.—BARNES v. GLENTON, Q.B.D.

3. Mortgage of land — Arrears of interest— Acknowledgment by one of the two executors and devisees in trust of the mortgagor—3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42.—The defendants A. and N. were the executors and devisees in trust of S., who died in 1887 having in 1885 mortgaged certain land belonging to her to the plaintiff. On the 19th of May, 1897, the defendant A., without the consent of the defendant N., executed an acknowledgment admitting that the whole of the principal moneys and interest secured by the mortgage were then due and owing to the plaintiff.

Held, that such acknowledgment could not be treated as the valid act of both trustees with reference to the land vested in them; that it did not prevent the operation of the statute; and that six years' arrears of interest only could be recovered.—ASTBURY v. ASTBURY, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 536.

4. Mortgage — Conveyance subject to mortgage— "Person claiming under a nortgage"—Real Property Limitation Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 28)—Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), s. 9.—By 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 28 it is provided that it shall be lawful for any person entitled to or claiming under any mortgage of land to make an entry or bring an action at law or suit in equity to recover such land at any time within twenty years next after the last payment of any part of the principal money or interest secured by such mortgage. By 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, s. 9, the aforesaid period of twenty years was altered to twelve years.

In 1886 the owner of one undivided moiety of certain land which for the previous eleven years had been in the possession of the owners of the other moiety, mortgaged his moiety, and in 1890 he conveyed his said moiety, subject to the mortgage, to the plaintiff, the land still continuing in the possession of the owners of the other moiety. The plaintiff subsequently paid off the mortgage.

In 1896 the plaintiff brought an action to recover the said moiety.

Held, that the plaintiff, on paying off the mortgage, did not become a "person claiming under a mortgage" within the meaning of 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 28, and that that Act does not confer a new right of entry on the mortgagee where, at the time of making the mortgage, a man is in possession holding adversely to the mortgagor, and the statute 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, has already begun to run in his favour against the mortgagor.

LITERARY INSTITUTION:—

1. Construction—"In the nature of a joint-stock company"—Literary and Scientific Institutions Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 112), s. 30 (1).—A literary and scientific institution, in the property of which proprietors were interested in proportion to the number of their shares, which shares were transferable and transmissible,

Held, to be in the nature of a joint-stock company within the meaning of the Literary and Scientific Institutions Act, 1854, section 30.

2. Institution in the nature of a joint-stock company—Literary and Scientific Institutions Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 112), ss. 30, 33.—The proviso to the 30th section of the Literary and Scientific Institutions Act, 1854, whereby institutions "which shall have been founded or established by the contributions of shareholders in the nature of a joint-stock company" are exempted from the operation of that section, does not require that the institution to be exempted should be actually in all respects a joint-stock company, but merely that such institution should, in some respects, partake of the nature of such a company.

Held, therefore, that a society in which the following elements of a joint-stock company were present—that is to say, first, the existence of a joint-stock or common property; secondly, the contribution of members as the source of such property; and, thirdly, the holding of that property by numerous persons in transferable shares—fell within the exemption.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT:—

1. Borough over 10,000 population—New county bridges—Liability to contribute—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), ss. 6, 35.—By section 6 of the Local Government Act, 1888, the county council shall have power to purchase or take over, on terms to be agreed on, existing bridges not being at present county bridges, and to erect new bridges and to maintain, repair, and improve any bridges so purchased, taken over, or erected.

And by section 35, in the case of a quarter sessions borough . . . containing . . . a population of 10,000 or upwards the following provisions shall . . . apply. (2) Where such borough is at the passing of this Act exempt in whole or in part from contributing towards costs incurred for any purpose for which the quarter sessions of the county in which the borough is situate are authorized to incur costs, the parishes in the borough shall not, save as in this Act expressly mentioned, be assessed by the county council to county contributions in respect of costs incurred for any such purpose.

A writ was issued by the plaintiffs against the defendants indorsed as follows: The plaintiffs' claim is for a declaration that the plaintiffs are not liable to contribute rateably to the cost of erecting, maintaining, or repairing new county bridges, and for £137 13s., money received by the defendants for the plaintiffs' use.

Bury St. Edmunds is a quarter sessions borough, containing according to the census of 1881 a population of over 10,000.

The defendants have since 1892 paid £1,570 4s. 4d. in respect of these bridges which they have charged to their county accounts as general expenses, and the plaintiffs have been assessed to their county rate and have contributed thereto the sum of £137 13s., their rateable proportion of the whole sum.

Held, that the borough was exempt from contributing, and were entitled to the declaration they asked for on their writ, but as to the sum of money, they could only recover what had been paid within six months on the authority of Mayor of Thetford v. Norfolk County Council, [1898] 1 Q. B. 41.—BURY ST. EDMUNDS (MAYOR) v. WEST SUFFOLK COUNTY COUNCIL, Q.B.D.

2. Building line — Information — Dismissal — Justices equally divided—Continuing offence—Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 55), s. 3.—On the 5th of March, 1897, the appellant was charged, in an information before justices, with an offence under section 3 of the Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888. The justices, being equally divided, dismissed the information upon that ground. On the 19th of November, 1897, the appellant was charged with continuing the acts which formed the subject-matter of the first information.

Held, that the justices who heard the first information must be taken to have decided that no offence was committed, and that the appellant was therefore entitled to an acquittal upon the second information.—KINNIS v. GRAVES, Q.B.D., 480.

3. Bye-law—Sanitary authority—Reasonableness —Prohibition of sales on foreshore.—A sanitary authority was empowered by a local Act to make bye-laws and regulations with reference to the sea-beach and foreshore in the district, which were vested in the sanitary authority for the purpose of public walks and pleasure grounds. Subsequently to the passing of the local Act a part of the foreshore was converted into an esplanade. The sanitary authority made a bye-law prohibiting the sale of any goods on any part of the sea-beach, foreshore, or esplanade, except by the direction of the sanitary authority.

Held, that the bye-law was not unreasonable or ultra vires.—GRAY v. SYLVESTER, Q.B.D., 63.

4. Contract under seal—Alterations and variations not under seal—Agreement to compromise disputes not under seal—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 173, 174.—Where an urban authority enters into a contract in writing, sealed with the common seal of such authority, pursuant to sections 173 and 174 of the Public Health Act, 1875, with a contractor for the construction by him—e.g., of sewerage works, and the contract contains the usual power for the engineer, who has the control and supervision of the works, to vary, alter, enlarge, or diminish any of them, all variations and alterations coming within the terms of the power conferred on the engineer can be validly made without being under the common seal of the urban authority.

An agreement between an urban authority and a contractor employed to construct works for them, as a compromise and in full settlement of all claims by him against the urban authority, is not a contract within section 173 of the Public Health Act, 1875, necessary for carrying that Act into execution, so as to require to be sealed with the common seal of the urban authority under section 174; and therefore such agreement, though not under seal, is capable of being enforced against the urban authority.—WILLIAMS v. BARMOUTH COUNCIL, C.A.

5. County council—Bye-law—Validity—Music in streets—No annoyance.—The K. County Council, under section 16 of the Local Government Act, 1888, made a bye-law as follows: "No person shall sound or play upon any musical or noisy instrument or sing in any public place or highway within fifty yards of any dwelling-house after being required by any constable or by an inmate of such house personally, or by his or her servant, to desist."

Held (dissentiente Mathew, J.), that the bye-law was not invalid or ultra vires.—BROWNSCOMBE v. JOHNSON, Q.B.D.

6. County council — Bye-law — Validity — Using streets for betting—No obstruction.—The S. County Council, under section 16 of the Local Government Act, made a bye-law as follows: "No person shall frequent any street or public place and use the same for the purpose of betting or wagering, or agreeing to bet or wager, either on behalf of himself or any other person."

Held, that the bye-law was one properly made for the good rule and government of the administrative county, and was therefore not ultra vires or invalid.—JONES v. WALTERS, Q.B.D.

7. County council—Bye-law for good rule and government — Validity — Reasonableness — Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 23—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41) s. 16.—A bye-law made by a county council under section 23 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, and section 16 of the Local Government Act, 1888, and duly confirmed, provided that "No person shall sound or play upon any musical or noisy instrument or sing in any public place or highway within fifty yards of any dwelling-house after being required by any constable or by any inmate of such house personally, or by his or her servant, to desist." The appellant continued to sing on a highway within fifty yards of a dwelling-house after being requested by a constable to desist.

Held, by Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., Sir F. Jenne, P., Chitty, L.J., and Wright, Darling, and Channell, JJ. (Mathew, J., dissenting), that the bye-law was reasonable, and that the appellant was rightly convicted of an offence against it.

8. Custody of parish documents—Tithe map and apportionment—Tithe Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 64—Tithe Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 73), s. 17—Tithe Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 93), s. 28—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 17.—Where no order has been made by quarter sessions as to the custody of a document which is required by section 64 of the Tithe Act, 1836, to be kept with the parish documents, the parish council have now power to give directions as to its custody.

A parish council gave directions as to the custody of the copy of a tithe apportionment and map, but the rector, in whose possession it was, refused to comply with such directions. The parish council then obtained an order from the county council confirming the directions of the parish council. As the rector still refused to give up possession of the document, an application was made to two justices by a person interested in lands and rent-charge comprised in the apportionment for an order for the removal of the document into the custody directed by the parish council. The justices decided they had no jurisdiction to make such an order.

Held—without deciding whether the power of the justices to make the order was discretionary or merely ministerial—that they had jurisdiction to make it.—LEWIS v. POOLE, Q.B.D., 93.

9. Drain — Public health — Nuisance — "Single private drain"—Notice to execute works addressed to owners collectively—Work done different from work specified in notice—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 41—Public Health Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 19.—Three houses belonging to A. and two belonging to B. were connected by a single private drain with a public sewer. The drain was complained of as a nuisance, and the surveyor of the local sanitary authority opened a part of the drain situated at the back of B.'s two houses and one of A.'s houses, and found it there choked with sewage. The local authority then, under section 41 of the Public Health Act, 1875, served a notice on both A. and B., addressed to them jointly, requiring them to relay the whole drain. A. and B. having neglected to comply, the local authority themselves repaired the whole drain, and also lowered the level of it in relaying it. They then sued A. under section 19 of the Public Health Act, 1890, for his proportion, as apportioned by their surveyor, of the expenses so incurred. The apportionment was not disputed by A.

Held, (1) that the fact that the notice to repair was in form a joint notice to A. and B. did not render it invalid; (2) that it was not necessary that the whole of the drain should have been previously examined; and (3) that if the work done in respect of which the expenses were sought to be recovered was not substantially the same as that specified in the notice, the expenses incurred were not recoverable.—LANCASTER v. BARNES DISTRICT COUNCIL, Q.B.D., 623.

10. Drain—"Sewer"—New street—Street taken over by local authority—"Frontager"—Drains constructed by "frontager"—Liability for expense of sewering street—Omission to serve notice "to sewer" on one frontager—Condition precedent—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 13, 15, 18, 150, 257, 268.—Where a "street" was vested in the local authority, and there were drains—some of which drained more than one house—existing under the street and leading into public sewers in other streets, and the local authority had served the usual notices under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, on the owners of houses, as frontagers to the street, to sewer, &c., the street, but in so doing had omitted to serve one frontager with such notice; and the local authority, on non-compliance with the notice by the frontagers, had proceeded to do the work themselves, and their surveyor had, under the same section of the Act, apportioned the expense among the frontagers, and, the apportionment having been objected to, the parties had gone to arbitration thereon, and an award had duly been made apportioning the payments among the frontagers:

In an action by the local authority to recover the apportioned amounts from the frontagers, Held, (1) that the words "respective owners and occupiers" in section 150 mean "all and every one of" the owners and occupiers; that service of notice to sewer on all such owners or occupiers is a condition precedent to enforcing the Act, and consequently failure to serve notice on a single occupier is a failure to comply with the requirements of the section; but held, also (on the facts), that the frontagers should have raised the objection previously—e.g., before the arbitrators—and it was too late to take it now; (2) on the facts, that the road was not sewered to the satisfaction of the local authority, and that the authority, therefore, were not liable under section 15 for maintenance, alteration, &c., of the sewers; and, further, that a street could not be considered to be sewered when all that had been done was to lay a series of drains draining some of the houses on one side in one direction and the houses on the other side in another direction, these drains not forming parts of one system of sewering.—HANDSWORTH DISTRICT COUNCIL v. DERRINGTON, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 168.

11. Drain—Sewer—Single drain draining several houses—Repair—Public Health Act, 1875, s. 41—Public Health Act, 1890, s. 19.—A drain-pipe passing through private property received the drainage of several houses belonging to different owners before it joined the public sewer. The pipe having become a nuisance the local authority, who had adopted the Public Health Act, 1890, took proceedings against the owners of the several houses under section 41 of the Public Health Act, 1875.

Held, that the pipe in question was a single private drain within the meaning of section 19 of the Act of 1890.

Hill v. Hair, [1895] 1 Q. B. 906, disapproved.—SEAL v. MERTHYR TYDFIL COUNCIL, Q.B.D.

12. Drainage—Surface water—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 15, 16, 17, 308.—A local authority has power to make such sewers as may be necessary for draining their district, and may carry such sewers into, through, or under any lands whatsoever within their district, provided that the water conveyed by them is free from all excrementitious or other foul or noxious matter.

Surface water charged with sand or silt is not within the above proviso, and may be discharged by a local authority into a natural stream or watercourse.—DURRANT v. BRANKSOME DISTRICT COUNCIL, C.A., 134.

13. Highway—Bicycle—Bicyclist riding at night without a light—Power of police-constable to stop—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 85—Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50.), ss. 78, 79.—Section 85 of the Local Government Act, 1888, which declares bicycles to be carriages within the meaning of the Highway Act, and lays down additional regulations (as to having lighted lamps at night and as to the sounding of a bell) to be observed by the riders of the same, does not include the power given in sections 78 and 79 of the Highway Act, 1835, to apprehend without a warrant; and, therefore, a police-constable who sees a person offending against such regulations by riding at night without a lighted lamp, and who, in order to ascertain the name and address of the offender, who refuses to stop, lays hold of and stops the bicycle, and thereby throws the rider off the bicycle, commits an assault upon such offender.—HATTON v. TREERY, Q.B.D., 6.

14. Highway—Bridge repairable ratione tenuræ—Recovery of expenses incurred by district council in effecting repairs—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict c. 73), s. 25, sub-section 2.—By section 25, sub-section 2, of the Local Government Act, 1894, it is provided that, where a highway repairable ratione tenuræ is not repaired by the person liable to repair when requested to do so by the district council, that body may place the highway in proper repair and recover from the person liable to repair such highway the necessary expenses of so doing.

Held, that the remedy provided by this sub-section is confined to the occupier of the land so chargeable, and does not impose any liability on the owner of the land who is not the occupier thereof to refund to the district council the expenses incurred by the latter in effecting such repair.—CUCKFIELD DISTRICT COUNCIL v. GORING, Q.B.D., 541.

15. Highway — Footway — Main road — County borough—Frontagers—Local Act—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 11.—A local Act passed in 1871 gave power to the corporation of a municipal borough to order that in any street (whether or not a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large) footways should be made by the frontagers of such form, size, and materials as the corporation should direct, and provided that if the frontagers made default in the execution of the work the corporation might cause the work to be executed and recover the expense incurred in respect thereof from the frontagers.

Held, that where the municipal borough had, by virtue of the Local Government Act, 1888, become a county borough, the provisions of section 11 of that Act had not the effect of repealing the provisions of the local Act as regards streets which were main roads within the meaning of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878.—LODGE v. HUDDERSFIELD (MAYOR), Q.B.D.

16. Justices—Private street works—Objection by frontagers — Insufficiency and unreasonableness — Private Street Works Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 57), s. 7 (d).—The appellants, an urban authority, passed a resolution under section 6, sub-section 1, of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, to do what were "private street works" within that section. Such works did not include the widening of the particular street in question. Specifications and plans were prepared, and the appellants passed a resolution approving the same. The respondent, a frontager in the said street, objected, the ground of his objection being that the proposed works were "insufficient or unreasonable" within the meaning of section 7, clause (d), of the Act. It was proved before the justices that the proposed works were necessary and proper for the user of the street as a street. The justices held that the proposed works were "insufficient or unreasonable" within section 7, clause (d), on the ground that the street was too narrow and that the proposed works did not include the widening of it; and accordingly allowed the objection.

Held, that the jurisdiction of the justices upon an objection under section 7, clause (d), was limited to determining whether the proposed works were sufficient to effect the purpose proposed to be effected; and that the order of the justices should be quashed, as they had based their decision upon other considerations—viz., the widening of the street.—MANSFIELD (MAYOR) v. BUTTERWORTH, Q.B.D., 650.

17. Land—Purchase of—Land acquired for sewage works—Land "not required" for purpose—Land not immediately required—User of land—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 175.—Circumstances under which lands acquired by a local authority under section 175 of the Public Health Act, 1875, shall be ordered to be sold as "not required for the purpose for which they were acquired" within the meaning of the section, in cases where the whole of the lands is not immediately required for the purpose.

Consideration of the question what is a lawful interim user of such land not immediately required.

A portion of lands which were bought by the defendants, and as to the greater part used, for the purpose of permanent sewage works, was used by them to receive dustbin refuse, and works had been executed thereon for this purpose.

Held, (1) that the whole of the lands were required for sewage purposes; (2) that the defendants had not dealt with any part of it so that it could not be used for sewage purposes, and the plaintiff was therefore not entitled to a declaration that any portion should be sold under section 175; and (3) that, though the works did not make that portion wholly unfit for sewage purposes, such user was injurious to its proper user for sewage purposes and inconsistent with the purpose for which the land was acquired, and was not a lawful user of the land.

Another portion of the same lands was used as a recreation ground, and a path had been made and some benches put there, and the defendants were alleged to intend making a lake and a bathing-place there.

Held, that it was not unlawful to permit this portion, which was not at the time required for the ultimate purpose for which it was acquired, to be temporarily used as a recreation ground, provided that care was taken to prevent any rights from being acquired over it which would interfere with the user of the land for its ultimate purpose whenever required; but

Held, on the evidence, that the defendants had contemplated using some of this portion for purposes which were not justifiable interim purposes. — ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. TEDDINGTON DISTRICT COUNCIL, Ch.D. Romer, J., 88.

18. London County Council—New street—Improvement charges — "Initial valuation" — Licensed premises—Evidence of takings and payments—Value of the tying covenant—"Trade interest"—London County Council (Tower Bridge Southern Approach) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. cxxx.).—In estimating the "initial value" of licensed premises under the London County Council (Tower Bridge Southern Approach) Act, 1895, the arbitrator must not take into consideration the takings and payments, nor any tying covenant, as elements of the value of the site, nor must he take into consideration the takings and payments as evidence of value of the site and buildings, and such evidence should not be admitted even for the purpose of testing the evidence of witnesses.

In the case of a tying covenant in a lease whereof less than twenty-one years are unexpired, the value of the site and buildings must be treated as the same whether the covenant is considered or not, though the benefit of it may be differently apportioned between the lessor and lessee.

In estimating the value of the owner's estate and interest in the site and building, the tying covenant should be taken into consideration, as it is not a trade interest within section 36.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL AND CITY OF LONDON BREWERY CO.'S ARBITRATION, RE, Q.B.D., 172.

19. Nuisance—Non-removal of milk—"Building" —Dairies, Cowsheds, and Milk Shops Order, 1885.—No. 29 of the Regulations of the London County Council as to Dairies, Cowsheds, and Milk Shops provides that every purveyor of milk shall, on any outbreak of infectious disease within the building or upon the premises in which he keeps milk coming to his knowledge, remove all milk for sale from such building until it has been disinfected.

The respondent, a purveyor of milk, was tenant of a three-storied building, each floor of which was adapted for separate occupation, but with a central staircase common to each. He occupied the ground-floor for the purpose of his business, sublet the first-floor, and occupied the second-floor as a residence for himself and his family. One of his children had scarlet fever in a room on the second-floor.

Held, that this was an outbreak of infectious disease within the building in which the respondent kept milk, and, therefore, that the non-removal from the ground-floor of milk for sale there was an infringement by him of the above regulation.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. EDWARDS, Q.B.D.

20. Practice—Costs—Action against corporation—Action for injunction—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1 (b).—By the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1, where, after the Act, "any action is commenced . . . against any person for any act done in pursuance or execution, or intended execution, . . . of any public duty or authority, the following provision shall have effect: (b) Wherever, in any such action, a judgment is obtained by the defendant, it shall carry costs to be taxed as between solicitor and client."

Held, that the word "action," as used in the Act, referred to every action, and its generality ought not to be restricted, and therefore that an action for an injunction to restrain a municipal corporation from using a building as a small-pox hospital was within the Act.

Held, also, that the court had no discretion under the Act, and that, judgment having been given for the corporation in the action, the Act must be followed, and costs given as between solicitor and client.—HARROP v. OSSETT (MAYOR), Ch.D. Romer, J., 391.

21. Privies and water-closets—Powers of local authority—No general resolution—Notice to provide sufficient water-closet—Specification—Validity of notice—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 36.—The Public Health Act, 1875, provides by section 36 that if a house appears to the local authority to be without a sufficient water-closet, earth-closet, or privy, the authority shall by written notice require the owner or occupier "to provide a sufficient water-closet, earth-closet, or privy," and that "if such notice is not complied with," the authority may do the work and recover the expenses from the owner.

The plaintiff R. was the owner of a house, and on the 24th of November, 1897, the defendants served on him a notice that, as the house was without a sufficient water-closet he was "to provide a sufficient water-closet to the said house according to the specification given by this notice," and then followed the usual notice that if the work was not done the authority would enter and do the work, and a specification of the kind of water-closet to be put in.

In an action for an injunction to restrain the authority from entering,

Held, that the notice was bad on the ground that it did not allow the owner to comply with it by providing any other "sufficient" water-closet than that specified, although it was not given in pursuance of a general resolution without regard to the particular requirements.

Semble, that it might be bad also for leaving out the words "earth-closet or privy," which, according to the section, the premises should be without before the notice can be given.

In such a case the remedy of the plaintiff is not by appeal to the Local Government Board under section 268 of the Public Health Act, 1875, but appeals to that body lie only in cases where the question arises as to the sufficiency.—ROBINSON v. SUNDERLAND (MAYOR), Q.B.D.

22. Provisional order—Construction of—Two provisional orders confirmed by Act of Parliament the same day—Inconsistency between.—Where a provisional order gives power to a local authority to purchase an undertaking upon terms of issuing or transferring to the undertakers such an amount of stock as will produce by the interest or dividends thereon an "annuity" of 5 per cent. per annum upon the sum properly expended by the undertakers upon the undertaking, and chargeable to the capital account, the local authority can only exercise the power to purchase the undertaking by issuing or transferring "irredeemable" stock.

Where a subsequent provisional order took away the power of the local authority to issue "irredeemable" stock, the power to purchase given in the above form is then no longer exerciseable; and the fact that the two provisional orders were confirmed by Act of Parliament on the same day does not give the local authority implied power to issue irredeemable stock to carry out the power to purchase.—SHEFFIELD CORPORATION v. SHEFFIELD ELECTRIC LIGHT CO., Ch.D. North, J., 485.

23. Public Health—Local statute—Implied repeal of special by general Act—Paving expenses in street—Highway repairable by inhabitants at large—Liability of frontagers—Ashton-under-Lyne Improvement Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. xxxv.), s. 20—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 149, 150, 340.—Under a local Act passed in 1849, if any street, whether repairable by the inhabitants at large or not, was not sewered, levelled, paved, and otherwise completed to the satisfaction of the urban authority, the latter might order the frontagers to execute the necessary works, and, upon the frontagers making default, might themselves execute the works and apportion the expenses among the frontagers.

By section 149 of the Public Health Act, 1875, all streets repairable by the inhabitants at large within any urban district were vested in the urban authority, who were bound to cause them to be levelled, paved, altered, and repaired as occasion might require. By section 150 the urban authority had power, in the case of streets not repairable by the inhabitants at large, to charge the expenses of sewering and paving them upon the frontagers.

Held, that there was nothing in the Public Health Act, 1875, which showed an intention to repeal the above provision of the local Act, and that, therefore, the urban authority could, under that section, charge the frontagers with the expenses of sewering, paving, and otherwise completing a street repairable by the inhabitants at large.—ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE (MAYOR) v. PUGH, C.A., 100.

24. Public health—Notice to provide sufficient water-closet—Validity of notice—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 36.—A local authority acting under section 36 of the Public Health Act, 1875, served a notice on the owner of a house requiring him to provide a sufficient privy on the waste water-closet system in accordance with plans which might be seen at the office of the borough surveyor.

Held, that such notice was not in compliance with the statute.

Decision of the Divisional Court (ante, p. 30) affirmed.—WOOD v. WIDNES (MAYOR), C.A., 293.

25. Rating—Drainage board—Classification of properties in district according to amount of benefit received—Proportionate rating—Legality of.—Drainage commissioners, who have all the powers of commissioners of sewers in the levying of drainage rates, cannot classify the different rateable properties in their district and levy proportionate or differential rates upon properties in each class according to the supposed quantum of benefit received or danger avoided by the properties in that class; but they must levy an equal rate upon all properties in their district which are benefited by the works.—KNIGHT v. LANGPORT DRAINAGE BOARD, Q.B.D., 392.

26. Rating—Local Act—Limit imposed by—Public Health Act, 1875, s. 207.—By the Crediton Improvement Act, 1836, after defining the limits of the town of Crediton for the purposes of the Act, the commissioners appointed thereunder were authorized to levy a rate within the limits of the Act not exceeding 2s. 1d. in the pound, and further, all persons assessed under the Act should be released from liability for repairs of highways outside the limits of the Act.

The commissioners are the urban authority under the Public Health Act, 1875, and by section, 207 of the Act if all expenses incurred by them in the execution of the Sanitary Acts, which at the time of the passing of the Act were payable out of a general district rate, then the expenses incurred by the authority in the execution of the Act of 1875 shall be paid out of such rate.

At the time of the passing of the Local Government Act, 1894, the parish of Crediton was partly within and partly without the urban district of Crediton, but by the County of Devon (Crediton) Confirmation Order, 1894, the urban district was extended to include the part of the parish outside the former urban district, and it was further provided that the district should be deemed to have been extended prior to the passing of the Act, and the part of the parish transferred by the Order was deemed not to have been in the rural sanitary district.

The appellant is the occupier of a dwelling-house and lands wholly within the limits of the Improvement Act.

On the 22nd of September, 1896, the Crediton Urban District Council made a rate for the whole district, including the added area, headed "The Crediton Improvement Rate for the year ending Midsummer, 1897."

The rate was at 3s. 6d. in the pound on all houses and buildings, &c., and 10½d. on arable meadow, &c.

The rate was levied to defray expenses to be incurred by the council under the Public Health Act, 1875, including the purposes for which the rates were leviable under the Improvement Act. The rate was for the repair of highways within the area of the Improvement Act, as in that Act defined, and also in the added area.

The court of quarter sessions amended the rate by expressing that it was also made under the Public Health Act, 1875, and so amended held the rate good. The appellant appealed.

Held, that, although a court of quarter sessions has power to amend a rate, the rate in the present case was bad, as it exceeded the limit imposed by the Improvement Act, for that Act was still in force and unaffected by subsequent legislation.—HILL v. CREDITON DISTRICT COUNCIL, Q.B.D.

27. Rating—Retrospective rate—Judgment debt due from local authority—Mandamus to levy—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 230—In 1893 the T. Council agreed to supply the L. Rural Council with water on certain terms. In May, 1895, the T. Council demanded of the L. Council payment of £92 for water supplied in excess of the minimum quantity. The L. Council complained of a breach of contract on part of the T. Council, and claimed to be entitled to damages. In March, 1897, the T. Council brought an action to enforce their claim; and the L. Council delivered a counter-claim. In May, 1897, judgment by consent was entered for the plaintiffs for £63. In October, 1897, the T. Council obtained a rule nisi for a mandamus to the L. Council to levy a rate to pay the judgment debt. In January, 1898, the rule was made absolute. The L. Council contended that they had no power to make a retrospective rate.

Held, that, inasmuch as the debt due from the L. Council was not ascertained till the judgment, and the mandamus was obtained within the rating year, the rate which was ordered was not retrospective.

Held, also, that, even if it was retrospective, yet, being not a poor rate, but a rate for special expenses, excuse might be shown for not having moved for a mandamus earlier, and that in this case ample excuse had been shown.—REG. v. LEIGH DISTRICT COUNCIL, C.A., 471.

28. Rating—Water supply—Water rates—Water rents—Contributory place—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 229.—When a district council provide a supply of water to a contributory place, in pursuance of section 51 of the Public Health Act, 1875, it is within their discretion how much of the sum required to meet the expenses of such supply shall be raised by water rates and water rents. The residue may be raised by a rate upon the contributory place, as for special expenses, under section 229.

Semble, section 229, by which the expenses of providing a water supply to any contributory place are made special expenses, includes such supply to a part of a contributory place.—HORN v. SLEAFORD DISTRICT COUNCIL, Q.B.D., 555.

29. Sewer—Bye-law—Cesspools—Conduit.—B., the owner of certain houses, constructed a series of cesspools for their drainage on his own land. He then constructed a conduit, which conveyed the overflow therefrom to a larger cesspool. He was summoned for constructing these cesspools so as to have an outlet into a sewer—viz., the conduit and the large cesspool, contrary to the local bye-law.

The magistrates were of opinion that the conduit, being used for the drainage of several dwelling-houses occupied by different persons, was a sewer, and that an offence had been committed.

Held, that the magistrates were wrong, and that the appellant had not constructed these cesspools contrary to the bye-law.—BUTTON v. TOTTENHAM COUNCIL, Q.B.D.

Down such pipes and drains, but without the knowledge of the railway company, some sewage from houses erected on adjoining lands within the district of the local authority found its way.

Held, affirming the decision of Stirling, J. (ante, p. 121), that the drains were sewers within the meaning of the Public Health Act, 1875, but, being made under a private Act of Parliament, fell within the second exception contained in section 13 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and were consequently not vested in the local authority.—LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO. v. RUNCORN COUNCIL, C.A., 484.

32. Sewer made for profit—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 13 (1)—Highways Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), ss. 66, 67.—The word "profit" in section 13 (1) of the Public Health Act, 1875, is not to be restricted to a direct money payment, and where a sewer is made, not for sanitary or mere ordinary drainage purposes, but in order to avoid an expenditure which would otherwise have to be incurred in order that the occupation might be equally beneficial, it will be deemed to have been made for the profit of the occupier within the meaning of that section.—CROYSDALE v. SUNBURY-ON-THAMES DISTRICT COUNCIL, *Ch.D. 33. Street—Charges for paving, &c.—Duty imposed by Act of Parliament—Memorial to Secretary of State—West Hartlepool Extension and Improvement Act, 1870 (38 & 39 Vict. c. cxiii.), ss. 3, 69, 80, 82, 349, 350—Where one of two adjoining owners laid out a strip of land 18ft. wide at the edge of his land to make a road, the other agreeing to give a similar strip to make the road 36ft. wide,

Held, under the West Hartlepool Extension and Improvement Act, 1870, that the 18ft. strip so first laid out was a "street" and not merely part of a street, and that, therefore, charges for paving, &c., that strip could properly be made and enforced against the other owner, notwithstanding that he had laid out the agreed additional strip, and had paved and made it good at his own sole expense.

If such charges constitute, in the circumstances, any hardship upon the owner, his remedy is, under section 349 of the Act, to appeal to the Secretary of State by memorial for relief.

Decision of Stirling, J. (45 W. R. 312), affirmed. —WEST HARTLEPOOL (MAYOR) v. ROBINSON, C.A., 218.

34. "Street"—Sewering—Powers—"Highway repairable by the inhabitants at large"—Private Street Works Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 57), ss. 5, 6. —The definition of "street" in the Private Street Works Act, 1892, s. 5, excludes "a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large."

By section 6 an urban authority is empowered, with respect to streets, to do certain sewering works.

An urban authority proposed to do sewering works in a certain place in their borough. The place in question (which was called a street) was formed before 1816, and had always been open at both ends into highways, and the place and buildings had existed in the same condition for seventy years, and since its formation the way had been used by foot-passengers without interruption. Neither public nor private repairs were proved.

On a case stated on the hearing and determination by justices of objections to the proposed works,

Held, that the place in question was not a "street" within the meaning of the Act, being a footway repairable by the inhabitants at large, and therefore the urban authority had no power to execute the proposed works.—RISHTON v. HASLINGDEN CORPORATION, Q.B.D.

35. Transfer of areas—Adjustment—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 68.—By the Local Government Act, 1894, s. 68, (1) when any adjustment is required for the purpose of this Act, or of any order . . . under this Act, then, if the adjustment is not otherwise made, the authorities interested may make agreements for the purpose, and may thereby adjust any property, income, debts, liabilities, and expenses so far as affected by this Act, or such scheme, order, or thing of the parties to the agreement; (2) in default of an agreement, and as far as any such agreement does not extend, such adjustment shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the Arbitration Act, 1889, . . . and his (the arbitrator's) award may provide for any matter for which an agreement might have provided.

By an order of the L. County Council a part of the township of B. was detached from the R. Union, and was included in the H. Union.

The guardians of the R. Union gave notice that this detachment caused them a loss and demanded adjustment by arbitration.

Held, that an adjustment was necessary, and that in making such adjustment the amount of the outstanding loans chargeable upon the common fund of the R. Union, the large amount of workhouse accommodation provided by the R. Union, and the unsuitability and unfitness of a great part of the R. Workhouse for the purposes for which it was provided, should be taken into consideration, as the loan and the workhouse would both require adjustment.

Also, though the fact of the large number of paupers requiring relief in the R. Union owing to the situation and dense population of the town of R., the absence of pauperism in the transferred area, the loss of contribution in that area, and the increase of rates leviable in the remainder of the R. Union by reason of such transfer, might not if it stood without the other considerations need adjustment, yet when adjusting the other matters it might rightly be taken into consideration.—ROCHDALE UNION v. HASLINGDEN UNION, Q.B.D.

36. Unsanitary area acquired under the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 70) —Improvement scheme—Provisional order—Confirmatory Act—Valuation for compensation—Property in premises acquired—Reversioner—Right to use —Costs — Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 70), ss. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 12, 20, 21. —Where property in an unhealthy district is compulsorily acquired by a local authority under the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, persons interested therein retain all their legal rights in respect of the same until the provisional order made in respect thereof under section 8 of the Act has been confirmed by Act of Parliament under sub-section 6 of section 8.

Where property is taken under this Act the estimate of the value payable by way of compensation under section 21 is not limited to the value of the property as given in the estimate made under the improvement scheme provided for by sections 4 and 6.—DYE v. PATMAN, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 200.

37. Vendor and purchaser—Burial—Purchase of land by district council for—Action for injunction under Burial Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 128), s. 9 —Costs—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61).—The rule that a grantor cannot derogate from his own grant disentitles the vendor of land for the purposes of a cemetery from claiming the benefit of the prohibition in section 9 of the Burial Act, 1855, against burying within 100 yards of a dwelling-house, in respect of a house situate on other land of the vendor; and a lessee or occupier thereof, after and with full knowledge of the vendor's grant, cannot be in a better position than his own grantor.

In the above action, which was for an injunction under section 9 of the Burial Act, 1855, to restrain a district council from using land for the purposes of a cemetery within 100 yards from the plaintiff's dwelling-house, judgment was accordingly given for the defendants.

The defendants then claimed that they were entitled as of right to costs as between solicitor and client by virtue of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893.

Held, that the action was for an "act done in pursuance of public duty, and was therefore one to which the Act applied.—TOMS v. CLACTON DISTRICT COUNCIL, Ch.D. Romer, J., 629.

2. Lunatic judgment debtor — Maintenance — Receiver—Execution—Seizure by sheriff—Priority—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 Vict. c. 5), ss. 116, 117.—The Court in Lunacy cannot deprive execution creditors of a lunatic of their rights over his property not under the control of the court when seized under legal process.

The property of a lunatic, though coming within the jurisdiction of the Crown as soon as a summons in Lunacy is issued, is not withdrawn from legal process by a creditor of the lunatic until an order is made showing that the Crown has actually taken the property of the lunatic under its protection.

In Re Winkle, 42 W. R. 513, [1894] 2 Ch. 519, explained.—CLARKE, RE, Lun., 337.

3. Lunatic out of jurisdiction—Property within jurisdiction—Curator according to law of Jersey—Right to transfer—Discretion.—A lunatic who was resident in Jersey owned stock and shares in this country. The curator of the person and property of the lunatic appointed according to the law of Jersey applied for a transfer to him of such stock and shares.

Held, that, under section 134 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, the court had a discretion to refuse such transfer.

In re Brown, 44 W. R. 17, [1895] 2 Ch. 666, considered.—KNIGHT, RE, Lun., 289.

4. Lunatic sole trustee—Government stock—Vesting order—Transfer of stock—Form of order—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 Vict. c. 5), ss. 136 (1) (4), 137.—Where a vesting order is made under sub-section 1 of section 136 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, with reference to Government stock standing in the name of a lunatic trustee, the order should direct the person in whom the right to call for a transfer, and to transfer the stock, and to receive the dividends due and to accrue due thereon, is vested, to transfer the stock into his own name, to be held by him upon the trusts applicable thereto.

Re Gregson, [1893] 3 Ch. 233, approved and followed.

Such an order is not an order appointing a person to make a transfer of stock within the meaning of section 137 of the Act of 1890, and it is not necessary to appoint an officer of the Bank of England to make the transfer.—G——, RE, C.A.

5. Maintenance—Committee of person—Liability to account—Allowance paid quarterly in advance—Death of lunatic before expiration of quarter.—Payment was made quarterly in advance by the committee of a lunatic's estate to the committees of the person of a fixed annual sum which the master had allowed for the lunatic's maintenance, but the order in lunacy did not expressly authorize payment to be made in advance. The lunatic having died shortly after the beginning of the fourth quarter, for which the allowance had been paid in advance as usual, the executors of the lunatic brought an action against the committees of the person to recover so much of the said quarterly allowance as had not been expended in the maintenance of the lunatic.

Held, that, inasmuch as the lunatic was only maintained for nine months and a few weeks, and the committees of the person had received a whole year's allowance, the lunatic's executors were entitled to recover such part as could not be said to have been properly expended by the committees in her maintenance, regard being had to the provisions of the order in lunacy.

The observations of Lord St. Leonards in In re Ponsonby, 3 Dru. & War. 27, 31, 2 Connor & L. 30, 32, must be considered to be made with regard to the ordinary case where the lunatic is properly maintained for the whole year.—STRANGWAYS v. READ, Ch.D. Romer, J., 671.

MANDAMUS:—

Refusal to produce minutes of burial board to ratepayer—Application not bonâ fide—Ulterior motive—Burial Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 85), ss. 16, 17.—By the Burial Act, 1852, s. 16, the minutes of the burial board are to be entered in a book, and by section 17 "all such books are to be open to the examination of every . . . ratepayer . . . who may take copies," and if this is not permitted there is a penalty of £5. A ratepayer named Hatton made an application to the district council of Wimbledon, being the burial board, for his solicitors to inspect and take copies of these minutes. Those solicitors were acting for a company, who for another matter wished to obtain inspection of those books. The board refused to allow the solicitors to inspect, on the ground that the ratepayer alone was the person to whom they were bound to produce the books, and that the present application was not made bonâ fide, but for another purpose, that was indirectly obtaining inspection on behalf of the company for whom the solicitors were also acting.

Held, that the court would not in the exercise of their discretion make absolute this rule for a writ of mandamus, as the application was not made bonâ fide for the purpose of the ratepayer, but for another purpose.—REG. v. WIMBLEDON COUNCIL, Q.B.D.

MARRIED WOMAN:—

1. Bankruptcy — Married woman not trading separately from her husband — Receiving order — Marriage after petition presented—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1, sub-section 5.—A receiving order in bankruptcy cannot be made against a married woman not trading separately from her husband, notwithstanding that she was a spinster when the debt was incurred, judgment obtained, the act of bankruptcy committed, and the petition presented, and when, at a preliminary hearing of the petition, she admitted the debt and the act of bankruptcy.—DEBTOR, A, RE, C.A., 675.

2. Bankruptcy—Money lent for private purposes—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 3.—Section 3 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, does not apply to a case where money has been advanced by a wife to her husband for purposes other than that of the husband's trade or business.—CLARK, RE, SCHULZE, EX PARTE, C.A., 678.

3. Protection order—Power to contract debts—Appointment—Liability of appointed fund for debts—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 4—Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 63), s. 1 (a), (b), (c)—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), ss. 21, 25, 26.—A married woman who has obtained a protection order under the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, is to be regarded as, for the purpose of contracting, a feme sole. Consequently funds appointed by her by a will exercising a general power of appointment will become liable for a debt contracted by her after the protection order, but before the creation of the power of appointment, and before the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882.

Judgment of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 220), affirmed.—HUGHES, RE, BRANDON v. HUGHES, C.A., 502.

4. Restraint on anticipation—Life interest determinable on condition—Bonâ fide but incorrect admission that condition had been fulfilled—Estoppel.—A married woman, who had, subject to a restraint on anticipation, a life interest in certain estates determinable on her coming into an income of £8,000 a year, executed a deed-poll whereby she admitted that she had come into £8 000 a year and released her life interest.

A mortgagee of her husband, relying on this deed, entered into certain arrangements for the benefit of her husband. It was subsequently discovered that the married woman had not in fact come into £8,000 a year.

Held, that a married woman could not, by an incorrect admission, deprive herself of the benefit of the restraint on anticipation, even though by the admission she had induced someone else to alter his position for the worse.

Judgment of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 151), affirmed.—BATEMAN (LADY) v. FABER, C.A., 215.

5. Separate estate—Restraint on anticipation—Judgment against married women—Marriage settlement—Divorce—Second marriage—Appointment of receiver.—By a settlement made upon the marriage of the defendant with P. her property was settled upon trust to pay the income to her for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, and there was an ultimate trust for her absolutely if she survived P. The defendant obtained a divorce from P. and subsequently married E. There was no evidence whether P. was alive or not. The plaintiff obtained judgment against the defendant as a married woman, and then obtained an order appointing a receiver of her interest under the settlement.

Held, that the restraint on anticipation became operative upon the second marriage, and, that, therefore, an order for a receiver ought not to have been made.—STROUD v. EDWARDS, C.A.

6. Separate property—Removal of restraint on anticipation—Charge for payment of husband's debts—Wife's right to indemnity—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 39.—If a married woman raises money for payment of her husband's debts by means of a charge upon her separate property, the presumption in equity ordinarily is that her husband becomes bound to indemnify her; but this is merely an inference of fact, and may be excluded, without express waiver of her right, by the circumstances of the particular case.

Effect of orders creating such a charge upon property subject to a restraint on anticipation, and not reserving any right to indemnity, considered.

Where the money was raised for the purpose of providing means for both husband and wife, who were living together in an expensive style, and of averting the bankruptcy of the husband, which would have seriously affected the social position of both,

Held, on the whole facts of the case, that no presumption arose of a right to be indemnified.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 232), affirmed. —PAGET v. PAGET, C.A., 472.

7. Testamentary capacity—Assent by husband to will—Practice of Probate Division.—A married woman, who died in 1892, and who had no power of disposition by will, except with the assent of her husband, bequeathed all her property to her husband, subject to the payment of a legacy of £10,000, and appointed him sole executor. The husband proved the will generally in accordance with the ordinary practice of the Probate Division.

Held, that, as probate of a married woman's will is now granted only in general terms, the husband had not estopped himself from saying that he had not assented to the dispositions therein contained. —ATKINSON, RE, WALLER v. ATKINSON, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 439.

8. Vendor and purchaser—Mortgagee—Conveyance to purchaser—Concurrence of husband—Acknowledgment—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1—Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), s. 77.—A married woman who is a mortgagee of real estate can convey the same without the concurrence of her husband or acknowledgment of the deed of conveyance by her.

MASTER and SERVANT:—

1. Apprentice—Employed not with master—Master's consent—"Duly and truly serve."—An apprentice "duly and truly" serves his master if, with that master's consent, he is employed otherwise than actually by that master during the term of apprenticeship.—RICHARDSON v. COLNE FISHERY Co., Q.B.D.

2. Contract—Domestic service—Custom—Reasonableness—Notice during first fortnight to determine service at end of first month.—A custom with regard to the hiring of domestic servants, that, in the absence of special contract, there is a right for either party by notice given during the first fortnight of the service to determine the service at the end of the first month, is not a notorious custom of which judicial notice will be taken. But such a custom is not unreasonable, and, if its existence were proved by evidence in any particular case, the court would give effect to it.—MOULT v. HALLIDAY, Q.B.D., 318.

3. Injury of workman—Defect in plant—Chartered ship—Gang employed by agent of defendants—Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 42), s. 1 (1), (2), (3).—The defendants were coal contractors, and contracted to supply coal to the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway. They ship coal at Cardiff in vessels belonging to the London, Antwerp, and Continental Steam Navigation Co. to be carried to Newhaven.

The defendants have to unload the coal there, and engage agents to employ a gang to carry out the work.

One of their agents, W., had a gang unloading the vessel, amongst whom was the plaintiff.

Owing to the hold of the vessel not being properly ventilated there was an accumulation of gas, and when the hatch was removed a violent explosion took place, and the plaintiff was injured.

Held, that the injury was caused by the defective "plant" of the defendants.—CARTER v. CLARKE, Q.B.D.

4. Trades union—Procuring dismissal of servant—Intention to injure—Malice—Motive—Cause of action.—Outside the criminal law an act lawful in itself does not cease to be so, no matter how reprehensible the motive for doing it may be. The existence of a bad motive is therefore immaterial when considering whether an act is a civil wrong or not.

To induce employers, therefore, to dismiss their workmen, and not to employ them in future, in consequence of which the workmen suffer loss, is not, where no breach of contract is involved, a wrongful act, whatever the motive for doing it may be.

5. Tramway company—Conductor—Scope of employment—Alleged counterfeit coin—Giving into custody—Liability of company.—The plaintiff Knight was travelling in one of the defendant company's trams, and tendered sixpence in payment of the fare, and received fourpence change. Shortly after, the conductor alleged it was counterfeit, and, on the plaintiff refusing to give another, the conductor gave him in charge. An inspector of the company, who happened to be passing, sent the conductor down to charge the plaintiff, and went on with the tram. The next morning the magistrate dismissed the charge, the sixpence turning out to be a good one. Another inspector of the company was present in court during the proceedings. In an action against the tramway company for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment, Held, that there was no evidence to show that the conductor acted within the scope of his authority express or implied, or that the defendant company ratified his proceedings.—KNIGHT v. METROPOLITAN TRAMWAYS Co., Q.B.D.

METROPOLIS:—

1. Building—"Dwelling-house"—"To be inhabited or adapted to be inhabited by persons of the working class"—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. cxxiii.), ss. 5 (25) (26) (27) and 13 (5).—By section 13 (5) of the London Building Act, 1894, a building may, without the consent of the London County Council, be re-erected on the site of buildings existing at the passing of the Act, though such site is within the prescribed distance of the centre of the roadway, subject to the proviso that, if such new building be a "dwelling-house to be inhabited or adapted to be inhabited by persons of the working class," it shall not exceed in height the distance of its front wall from the opposite side of the street.

Held, that "to be inhabited" here means intended when erected to be so inhabited, and "adapted to be inhabited" means structurally adapted to be so inhabited.

Held, further, that a public building in the nature of a hotel for poor men is not a dwelling-house within the proviso.

Held further, that, though a building is a "public building" within the definition in section 5 (27), it may also be a "dwelling-house" within section 13 (5).

Per Channell, J.: By "working class" in this section is meant that class of persons who ordinarily live in such a condition of life that overcrowding is likely to take place.

Per Channell, J.: Quære, whether in section 13 (5), where height of dwelling-houses is regulated by distance of their front wall from the opposite side of the street, "street" does not mean a roadway on the opposite side of which buildings are or may possibly be erected. — LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. DAVIS; SAME v. ROWTON HOUSE CO., Q.B.D.

2. Building—Mandamus—Service of summons—Unknown owner — Dangerous structure—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 1—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.) s. 188 (i.).—By section 188 of the London Building Act, 1894, it is enacted that any notice, order, or other document required or authorized to be served under that Act, the service of which is not provided for by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, the Lands Clauses Acts, or the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, may be served, among other ways, by delivering the same to some person on the premises to which it relates, or, if the premises are unoccupied, then by affixing a copy of the summons on some conspicuous part of the building.

The magistrate before whom a summons, addressed only "To the Owner" of certain premises, was returnable, refused to hear the summons in the absence of the defendant because the complainant failed to offer evidence either that he had made all reasonable inquiries to ascertain, before serving the summons in this way, who the owner of the premises was, or that, if such inquiries had been made, in all probability the owner would not have been found, or that the premises were in fact unoccupied.

Held, that, in the absence of such evidence, the procedure under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts must be followed, and that the magistrate was right in refusing to hear the summons.—REG. v. MEAD, Q.B.D., 61.

3. Building—New street—"Direct communication"—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), s. 9, sub-section 4.—Section 9 of the London Building Act, 1894, gives power to the county council to refuse their sanction to the formation of a new street where such street would not afford "direct communication" between two existing streets.

Held, that the question whether a proposed new street did or did not afford such direct communication was a question of fact, with the decision of which the court would not interfere.—WOODHAM v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, Q.B.D.

4. Building—Notice to set back — Forecourt — Boundary wall—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), s. 14.—The London County Council are not empowered by section 14 of the London Building Act, 1894, to give notice requiring the owner or occupier of land, upon part of which he has erected a new building, to set back an old boundary wall forming the boundary of a forecourt left between the new building and a street, so that the wall shall not be at less than the prescribed distance from the centre of the street.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. AYLESBURY DAIRY CO., Q.B.D.

5. Building—Rebuilding on old site — Certified plans of old building—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), ss. 41, 43.—A person intending to erect a domestic building on the site of a domestic building existing at the commencement of the London Building Act 1894, may by section 43 of that Act submit to the district surveyor for certification "plans showing the extent of the previously-existing domestic building in its several parts," and on getting a certificate of the accuracy of the plans may build, provided he does not deviate in any respect from the certified plans, without regard to the restrictions imposed by the Act upon the erection of new buildings.

Held, that the plans which he must get certified under that section are not confined to ground plans or basement plans, but include plans showing every part of the building in every direction in which it extends.—PAYNTER v. WATSON, Q.B.D., 655.

6. Building—Temporary structure—Erected without licence—Metropolis Management and Building Act, 1882 (45 Vict. c. 14), s. 13—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), s. 215.—Section 215 of the London Building Act, 1894, saves only rights and liabilities actually acquired, accrued, or incurred under the Acts repealed by it at the time the London Building Act, 1894, came into operation.

Section 13 of the Metropolis Management and Building Act, 1882 (45 Vict. c. 14), forbids the erection of temporary structures without the written licence of the London County Council. Section 215 of the London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), which came into operation on the 1st of January, 1895, repeals the Metropolis Management and Building Act, 1882, but enacts that the repeal shall not affect any right or liability "acquired, accrued, or incurred under or in accordance with any enactment hereby repealed," or any legal proceeding or penalty in respect of any such liability "as aforesaid."

A., before the 1st of January, 1895, erected a temporary structure without the licence of the London County Council, and thereby made himself liable under the Metropolis Management and Building Act, 1882, to a penalty for erecting it, and also to a penalty for each day he continued it. A. continued this structure until less than six months immediately preceding the 17th of May, 1897, on which day the London County Council applied for a summons against him for an offence under section 13 of the Metropolis Management and Building Act, 1882.

The magistrate refused the summons on the ground that the only liabilities saved by section 215 of the London Building Act, 1894, were liabilities actually incurred on or before the 1st of January, 1895, and that proceedings for these were barred by section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848. On appeal, Held, that the magistrate's decision was right.—REG. v. CLUER, Q.B.D.

7. Drain—Sewer—Liability to repair—Approval of vestry and Metropolitan Board of Works—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c.

120), ss. 68, 69, 74, 250—Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), ss. 47, 48, 61.—In 1866 the owners of a block of houses laid down a certain system of drainage, whereby the houses were drained into a pipe which was connected with a sewer belonging to the vestry. No order was made by the vestry for this purpose, nor had the approval of the Metropolitan Board of Works been obtained.

Held, that the pipe was a sewer vested in the vestry, and repairable by them.

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1896] 2 Q. B. 319, 45 W. R. Dig. 99) affirmed.—ST. MATTHEW, BETHNAL GREEN, VESTRY v. LONDON SCHOOL BOARD, H.L., 353.

8. Nuisance—Defective sewer—Notice served on owner—Abatement of nuisance by owner—Right of owner to recover expenses incurred from sanitary authority—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), ss. 4. 11.—The plaintiff was the owner of two adjoining houses at which a nuisance existed caused by defective drainage. The defendants, the sanitary authority of the district, served a notice in respect of each house, under sections 2 and 4 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, addressed to the owner or occupier of the premises, requiring the nuisance to be abated by the construction of a new drain. The ground was opened up by the plaintiff, and it was discovered that the pipe in question carried off the drainage of both houses; but the plaintiff, under the erroneous impression that the two houses were so drained under the authority of an order for a combined system of drainage, did the necessary work for the abatement of the nuisance. It was subsequently ascertained that the draining of the two houses into one drain was unauthorized, and consequently the pipe in question was a sewer, for the repair of which the defendants were responsible.

Held, that the plaintiff had been legally compelled to expend money in doing work which the defendants were liable to do, and was entitled to recover from the defendants, under section 11 of the Act, the amount expended by him in abating the nuisance.

Gebhardt v. Saunders, 40 W. R. 571, [1892] 2 Q. B. 452, followed.—ANDREW v. ST. OLAVE'S BOARD OF WORKS, Q.B.D., 424.

9. Sewer—Drain for drainage by combined operation—Evidence of order of vestry—Unauthorized connection between drains—Nuisance—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 74, 250. —A metropolitan vestry produced from their records a plan submitted in 1874 by the present appellant for drainage of a group of houses belonging to him by means of a single pipe, bearing on it an application by the owner of the houses to the vestry for their sanction to the proposed work, and evidence was given that the plan was carried out under the superintendence of the officers of the vestry. At a subsequent date the owner of adjoining premises, without authority and without the knowledge of the parties to this appeal, connected with this pipe for the draining by a combined operation the appellant's houses in question, a pipe to carry off sewage from his stables. The drainage became defective, and the question was whether the appellant or the vestry was to abate the nuisance.

Held, that there was evidence upon which it might be inferred that the houses had been drained by a combined operation by an order of the vestry within the meaning of section 74 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and therefore if the drain had been used only for the purposes for which it was originally made the vestry would not have been responsible for the repairs now necessary. The connection, however, of a drain from other premises, although unauthorized, rendered the original "drain" a "sewer" within section 250 of that Act, and it was therefore now repairable by the vestry.

MINES:—

Metalliferous mines — Abandoned — Obligation to fence — Person interested in minerals — Derbyshire Mining Customs and Mineral Courts Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. clxiii.)—Metalliferous Mines Regulations Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 77), s. 13.—A. was the owner of certain land in which there was a lead mine, containing, besides lead ore, calk and calcspar, minerals having a marketable value. By the mining customs of the county—as recognized by 15 & 16 Vict. c. clxiii.—any member of the public was entitled to work this mine for the lead ore, subject to his paying to the Crown (as Duchy of Cornwall) a certain royalty on all lead ore brought to the surface. The lead ore could not be got without raising the calk and calcspar, which were intermixed with it, and by the custom of the county A. was entitled to such calk and calcspar on its being separated from the lead ore. The mine having become abandoned, though both lead ore and calk and calcspar were still in it, the question arose who was liable to fence the mine under section 13 of the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 77).

Held, that A. was liable to fence it, as he was a person interested in the minerals of the mine within that section, inasmuch as (1) the calk and calcspar while in the mine were his property as part of his freehold; and (2) on being taken from the mine by one entitled to take them they were his property by the custom of the county.—STOKES v. ARKWRIGHT, Q.B.D.

MORTGAGE:—

1. Assignment of fund—Notice—Purchase of mortgaged property—Payment off of incumbrance—Intention to keep alive.—Where a person in possession of a fund on which others have charges has received notice of an assignment of his rights by one of the persons entitled to a charge, and nevertheless makes payments to the assignor, the rights of the several persons entitled to the charge, to what remains of the fund, cannot in any way be affected by such payments.

Where neither the deed nor the circumstances under which an assignment is executed show an intention to extinguish an incumbrance paid off, such incumbrance will not merge, but be considered as still existing.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (44 W. R. 612, [1896] 1 Ch. 726) reversed.—LIQUIDATION ESTATES PURCHASE CO. v. WILLOUGHBY, H.L., 589.

2. Equitable interest—Duty of trustee to pay to mortgagee—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 22, sub-section 1.—Though, by virtue of section 22, sub-section 1, of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, the trustees of a mortgaged equitable interest can, by paying to the mortgagee, obtain a good discharge, yet the trustees are not, as between themselves and the mortgagee, under any duty to pay to him. Where there are circumstances to cause reasonable doubt as to the mortgagee's right, the trustees are entitled to pay the money into court.

Order to pay to the mortgagee refused, on the trustees' undertaking to pay into court.

Decision of Kekewich, J., affirmed.

In re Bell, Jeffery v. Sayles, 44 W. R. 99, [1896] 1 Ch. 1, approved.—HOCKEY v. WESTERN, C.A., 312.

3. Equitable interest—Subsequent mortgage and settlement of equity of redemption—Notice—Priority.—Although an assignment of an equitable interest is, as between assignor and assignee, perfect without notice to the trustees holding the trust property under a will or settlement, yet as between assignees notice is necessary to confer priority, and so long as the first assignee in point of date omits to give notice, it is competent to the assignor to make a title to a more diligent stranger. Accordingly, where the first mortgagee of an equitable interest does not give notice of his mortgage to the trustees of the fund, his security will be postponed in favour of a subsequent mortgage by the mortgagor and a settlement subject thereto of his equitable interest, notice whereof has been duly given to the trustees of the fund by the respective assignees.

The first mortgage, moreover, will operate to effect a forfeiture under the trusts of the settlement of the mortgagor's life interest thereunder, determinable on his charging or assigning the same.

Semble, that, if the subsequent mortgage and settlement formed in effect one transaction, and the trustees of the settlement had thereby covenanted to make further advances as part of the consideration for the mortgage, the element of obligation to make further advances so introduced would render inapplicable the doctrine of Hopkinson v. Rolt, 9 W. R. 900, 9 H. L. Cas. 514.

4. Principal not to be called in for three years if interest paid "punctually"—Payment within reasonable time after due date, whether "punctual"—Injunction to restrain sale by mortgagee.—When a mortgage contains a proviso that the principal money shall not be called in for a specified period, if in the meantime the interest is "punctually" paid, the mortgagor, to entitle himself to the benefit of the proviso, must make each payment of interest on the day on which it becomes due.—LEEDS THEATRE OF VARIETIES v. BROADBENT, C.A., 230.

4A. Priorities—Notice—Equitable sub-mortgagees of mortgage of land.—Where there were successive equitable sub-mortgagees of a mortgage of land, and the second sub-mortgagee in point of time gave notice to the original mortgagor, Held, that the second sub-mortgagee did not obtain priority by means of being the first to give notice to the mortgagor.

5. Receiver—Arrears of interest due at date of appointment—Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 24 (8) (iv.).—A receiver appointed by a mortgagee under section 19 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, is bound under section 24, sub-section 8, of that Act to pay arrears of interest due to the mortgage at the date of the receiver's appointment, and not merely interest accruing after that date.—NATIONAL BANK v. KENNEY, V.C. (Ir.).

6. Right to redeem—Second mortgagee—Order nisi for foreclosure, with liberty to redeem—Chief clerk's certificate finding six months' interest due to first mortgagee—Second mortgagee seeking to redeem on payment only of interest to date.—Where an order for foreclosure directed (in the usual form) that the second mortgagee should be at liberty to redeem on payment to the first mortgagee within six calendar months after the date of the chief clerk's certificate of what should be certified to be due, and the chief clerk's certificate included (in the usual way) interest to the end of the six calendar months so allowed for redemption,

Held, that the second mortgagee was not entitled to have the premises reconveyed to him on payment of the principal and costs, together with interest merely to the date of payment, but that payment of interest for the full period of six months was necessary.—HILL v. ROWLANDS, C.A., 26.

7. Tender—Cheque—Authority of solicitor of mortgagee—Payment under protest.—A mortgagee's solicitor is not authorized to accept a cheque in payment of the debt due in respect of the mortgage unless he is expressly empowered to do so. The tender, therefore, of a cheque to a mortgagee's solicitor not having such express authority is not a good tender even though he consent to accept the cheque.

NATAL, LAW of:—

Practice—Verdict—Jurisdiction of court as to setting it aside.—The law of Natal does not authorize judges to set aside a verdict as if they were a court of appeal upon questions of fact.

Where a jury had found that a binding agreement had been entered into between appellant and respondents, and had given a verdict for damages for its breach,

Held, that by the law of Natal the verdict could not be set aside unless it were one which the jury could not reasonably find.—PEARSE v. SCHWEDER, P.C.

NEWFOUNDLAND, LAW of:—

Insolvency—Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland, c. 90, s. 34—Debts due to Government—Education Act, 1892 (55 Vict. c. 5)—Higher Education Act, 1893 (56 Vict. c. 7).—Payments made by the Colonial Treasury to a bank to the credit of the several boards of education established under the "Education Act, 1892," or the "Higher Education Act, 1893," do not constitute debts due to the Government within the meaning of the Colonial Insolvency Act.—FOX v. NEWFOUNDLAND GOVERNMENT, P.C.

NEW SOUTH WALES, LAW of:—

1. Crown—Civil servant—Abolition of office—Civil Service Act, 1884 (48 Vict. No. 24).—There is nothing in the Civil Service Act, 1884, of New South Wales to affect the right of the Crown to abolish a civil office; or to oblige the Crown to make compensation to a civil servant, whose office is abolished from no fault on his part, by giving him employment in some other public department.—WALLER v. YOUNG, P.C.

2. Crown—Dismissal of civil servant—New South Wales Act (59 Vict. c. 25), s. 58.—Section 58 of the New South Wales Act (59 Vict. c. 25) is not retrospective.

Held, therefore, that the respondent, who had been dismissed from the public service before the said Act came into operation, but not in the manner prescribed by the Civil Service Act, 1884, was not affected by the provisions of the later Act. —YOUNG v. ADAMS, P.C.

3. Crown lands—Adverse possession—"Nullum Tempus" Act (9 Geo. 3, c. 16).—The English "Nullum Tempus" Act (9 Geo. 3, c. 16) is in force in the Colony of New South Wales, and applies to land which has never been granted out or dealt with by the Crown.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR NEW SOUTH WALES v. LOVE, P.C.

4. Crown Lands Act, 1884, s. 13 (2), 14, 18, 19, 20, 39—Forfeiture.—Any reference to the Land Board on an issue of fact which, if found against the conditional purchaser, involves the forfeiture of his purchase, must, even if framed under section 13, sub-section (2), of the Crown Lands Act, 1884, be tried in the manner prescribed by section 14; and the finding thereon is final under section 20. If the finding is that the statutory requirements have not been complied with, section 39 gives a discretionary power to the Minister to declare a forfeiture. That power is not abolished by the Act of 1889, which established a Land Court to hear appeals from the Land Board in lieu of the Minister to whom such appeals lay under sections 18 and 19 of the Act of 1884.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR NEW SOUTH WALES v. WALTERS, P.C.

5. Crown Lands Act, 1894 (45 Vict. No. 18)—Conditional purchase—Forfeiture—Provisional reversal—Crown Lands Act, 1889 (53 Vict. No. 21), s. 8, sub-section 6—Appeal—Special case—Crown Lands Amendment Act, 1891, s. 3.—The provisional reversal under section 3 of the Crown Lands Amendment Act, 1891, of a forfeiture of a conditional purchase of lands under the Crown Lands Act, 1884 (though itself subsequently revoked), prevents the lands from being dealt with as Crown lands after the date of such provisional reversal till its revocation.

A decision of the Supreme Court upon a special case stated by the local court, on an appeal from a local land board, under the Crown Lands Act, 1889, is final and conclusive, and the question cannot be re-opened in any subsequent proceedings between the parties.—GARNSEY v. FLOOD, P.C.

6. Crown Lands Act, 1889 (53 Vict. No. 21), s. 8, sub-section 6—Special case stated by Land Court—Duty of Supreme Court—Law of New South Wales.

Held, that under the Crown Lands Act of 1889, s. 8, sub-section 6, it is the duty of the Supreme Court to hear a case stated by the Land Court in pursuance of that sub-section and to return it to the Land Court with a decision on the question submitted. The Land Court has jurisdiction to state it; and if stated without due precision the Supreme Court can return it for amendment.—HILL v. DALGETY, P.C.

NEW ZEALAND, LAW of:—

1. Contract—Construction—Use.—The respondents contracted with the appellants not to "erect or assist, or be in any way concerned or interested in the erection of or use of freezing works at Bluff," and thereafter contracted with W. first to purchase all frozen meat produced at his works at Bluff, and secondly to purchase his works at the expiration of their contract with the appellants, together with additional works to be completed by that date.

Held, that neither of these contracts with W. was a breach of the contract with the appellants, by the true construction whereof use means the manufacturing use, and does not include the uses contemplated by the respondents in either of their purchases.—SOUTHLAND FROZEN MEAT CO. v. NELSON, P.C.

2. Husband and wife—Marital coercion—Leave to appeal granted under a misapprehension of fact—Practice—New Zealand Criminal Code, 1893 (57 Vict. No. 56), s. 24.—Where the jury found that the prisoner, a married woman, had acted under her husband's control in the commission of an offence, for which they were jointly charged but separately tried, but it appeared that there was no evidence to that effect, and that the question should not have been left to the jury, Held, that whatever the true effect of section 24 of the New Zealand Criminal Code as to marital compulsion, leave to appeal from an order affirming the conviction had been granted under a misapprehension of fact, and that the appeal must be dismissed.—BROWN v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR NEW ZEALAND, P.C.

NUISANCE:—

Black smoke—Notice—Public Health Act, 1875, s. 94.—A notice under section 94 of the Public Health Act, 1875, requiring a person to abate a nuisance of black smoke, is good notwithstanding it omits to state what works and things are required to be executed and done in order to abate the nuisance. —MILLARD v. WASTELL, Q.B.D., 258.

PARTITION:—

1. Occupying co-owner—Mortgage of share—Occupation rent—Set-off as against mortgagee.—Where one of several co-owners was in occupation of premises and mortgaged his share, and, on a partition action being subsequently brought, an inquiry was directed as to what was due from him in respect of such occupation, Held, that the sum found to be due could only be set off against what the occupying co-owner was personally entitled to receive, and could not be set off to the detriment of his mortgagee.—HILL v. HICKEN, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 137.

2. Parties—Sole defendant—Tenant of undivided

moiety—Partition Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 40), ss. 4 and 9.—An order for sale in lieu of partition can be made under the Partition Acts where the plaintiffs are the owners of one undivided moiety of the premises and the sole defendant is the lessee of the other undivided moiety under a lease for seven years granted by the owner of that moiety.—MASON v. KEAYS, Ch.D. North, J.

PARTNERSHIP :—

1. Arbitration—Notice of expulsion—Quasi-judicial position of co-partners.—Partners, in exercising the power of giving notice of expulsion to a co-partner for a breach of partnership articles, must do so in a quasi-judicial manner, and give the person complained of a hearing. Disputes between partners involving questions of law, or where a primâ facie case of fraud is set up, should not as a rule be referred to arbitration.—BARNES v. YOUNGS, Ch.D. Romer, J., 332.

2. Deposit of title-deeds by a partner to secure overdraft of firm—Specific devise of real estate charged—Partnership assets sufficient—Locke-King's Act, (17 & 18 Vict. c. 113).—A testator who was a partner in a shipbuilding firm had deposited at a bank the title-deeds of certain parts of his private real estate and signed a memorandum of charge of the said real estate, to secure the partnership overdraft. By his will he specifically devised the said real estate. The partnership assets were, at the testator's death, sufficient to pay the firm's debts.

Held, that the charge only extended to the debts of the partnership, and that, as the partnership assets were sufficient to pay these, the specific devisee of the real estate charged could not be called upon to pay the charge.—RITSON v. RITSON, Ch.D. Romer, J., 478.

3. Dissolution—Retainer of solicitor to conduct action—Retirement of dormant partner—Costs incurred subsequent to dissolution—Liability of dormant partner—Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), ss. 17 (2), 36 (3).—A solicitor was retained by the managing partner in a firm to bring an action to recover a debt due to the firm. The firm consisted of the managing partner and two dormant partners. While the action was proceeding the partnership was dissolved, the dormant partners retiring from the firm. The solicitor, who did not know that the dormant partners were members of the firm, nor of the dissolution of partnership, continued the action, and judgment was recovered. In an action by the solicitor against the three partners upon his bill of costs,

Held, that the dormant partners were liable for the costs incurred subsequently to the dissolution of partnership.—COURT v. BERLIN, C.A., 55.

4. Dissolution—Sale of assets by one partner to the other—"Assets"—Goodwill—Right of vendor to canvass old customers.—After a sale by one of two partners of all his interest in the partnership assets to the other partner, the goodwill not being expressly mentioned, the vendor may not canvass the customers of the old firm.

Gray v. Smith, 38 W. R. 310, 43 Ch. D. 208, and Pearson v. Pearson, 32 W. R. 1006, 27 Ch. D. 145, distinguished.—JENNINGS v. JENNINGS, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 344.

5. Liability of estate of deceased partner for goods ordered before, but delivered after, his death—Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), s. 9—Statute of Limitations—Merchant and factor—Fiduciary relation—Acknowledgment by debtor—Appropriation by creditor.—E. & Co. employed F. & Co. as commission agents. The course of business was for E. & Co. to send goods to F. & Co. to be forwarded to the purchasers. F. & Co. received the purchase-money and accounted for the same to E. & Co. after deducting their commission.

After the death of one of the partners in F. & Co., E. & Co. recovered judgment for sums due to them in respect of several business transactions with the firm of F. & Co. against the surviving partner, who became bankrupt, and nothing was obtained from his estate under the judgment. E. & Co. now claimed to prove for the balance against the estate of the deceased partner.

As to certain items which were for goods delivered to the firm of F. & Co. after, but under an order given before, the death of the partner,

Held, that the contract was really one of agency, and that the death of the partner terminated the partnership before the agency began, and terminated the contract too; and that, accordingly, no obligation was incurred by his estate.

As to certain other items with regard to which the defence of the Statute of Limitations was set up,

Held, that there was no fiduciary relationship between the parties so as to prevent the statute being set up; but that a payment had been made by F. & Co. which constituted an acknowledgment of the debt, and accordingly took the case out of the statute, though the fact that E. & Co. had appropriated the payment to the account of which these items formed part would not in itself have been sufficient to take the case out of the statute.—FRIEND, RE, FRIEND v. YOUNG, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 139.

PATENT :—

1. Agreement to assign—Subsequent licence—Notice—Priority—Equitable rights—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 87.—The proprietor of letters patent agreed to assign them to a company. He subsequently granted a licence to work the patent to certain persons, who had, however, express notice of the agreement. The licence was registered before the agreement.

Held, that the licence, though on the register prior to the registration of the agreement, was void as against the company.—NEW IXION TYRE CO. v. SPILSBURY, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 567.

2. Infringement—Anticipation—Revocation of infringing patent—Amendment by way of disclaimer—Patents, &c., Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), ss. 19, 26, sub-section 4 (e)—Appeal—Stay of proceedings—Practice—Patent Rules, 1890, r. 74.—The discretion reposed in the court or a judge, by section 19 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, to grant liberty to a patentee to apply at the Patent Office for leave to amend his specification by way of disclaimer, will not be interfered with by the Court of Appeal, unless that court be clearly of opinion that such discretion has been exercised upon a wrong principle.

Rule 74 of the Patent Rules, 1890, does not deprive the court of its jurisdiction to stay execution and cancellation, pending an appeal from an order on a petition for the revocation of a patent.—YATES v. ARMSTRONG, C.A.

3. Infringement—Patent applicable to United Kingdom only—Infringing goods sent to England—Order from English purchaser.—A manufacturer of goods abroad which are an infringement of a patent applicable to the United Kingdom alone, who sends these goods by post to an English customer in compliance with his order to so send them, does not infringe the patent for the United Kingdom, for in such a case the sale and delivery take place o utside this country.

4. Invention—Monopoly—Monopoly Act, 1623 (21 Jac. 1, c. 3), ss. 4, 6.—The proviso in section 6 of the Monopoly Act, 1623, which exempts letters patent for new inventions from the operation of the Act, must be construed as including in the exemption letters patent for new inventions which by reason of some defect in the specification capable of amendment by disclaimer, cannot for the time being and until the disclaimer has been filed be enforced.—PECK v. HINDES, Q.B.D.

5. Prolongation of term for ten years—New patent.—Where it appeared that an invention was of considerable merit, that there were great difficulties in introducing it, and that the petitioner had incurred loss in his endeavours so to do, their lordships recommended a new patent for the term of ten years.—CURRIE AND TIMMIS' PATENT, RE, P.C.

6. Revocation—Evidence of prior user—Admissibility.—Where an action for infringement of a patent had been dismissed on the ground that there had been a prior use of the invention at a specified place, and a petition was then presented to have the patent declared void, the petitioner relying solely on the instance of prior user which had been proved in the infringement action,

Held, that evidence sought to be adduced by the respondent to the petition as to alleged prior user at other places was not admissible.—HAGGENMACHER'S PATENT RE, Ch.D. Romer, J.

POOR LAW:—

1. Loan for term of years—Redemption without consent of lender—Poor law Loans Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 11), s. 2.—Guardians of the poor who have since the 24th of April, 1871 (the date of the passing of the Poor Law Loans Act, 1871) borrowed moneys, to be repaid at stipulated times, cannot even with the authority of an order of the Local Government Board under section 2 of the Act compel the lender to accept against his will repayment otherwise than in accordance with the contract.

The decision of the Court of Appeal ([1897] 1 Ch. 335), affirmed.—WEST DERBY UNION v. METROPOLITAN LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, H.L.

2. Rating—Beneficial occupation—London County Council—Assessment of public park—Rateable Value—London Council (General Powers) Act (53 & 54 Vict. c. ccxliii.), ss. 4, 5.—Where lands are held by a county council, and every part thereof must by statute be retained by the county council in perpetuity for the use of the public, and the expenses of management exceed the incomings, the county council is not rateable in respect of such lands.

Hare v. Overseers of Putney, 29 W. R. 721, 7 Q. B. D. 223, approved.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (44 W. R. 621, [1896] 2 Q. B. 25) affirmed.—LAMBETH OVERSEERS v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, H.L., 79.

3. Rating — Coal mines — Evidence — Profits or annual value—Gross and rateable.—At the hearing of an appeal against a rate on a colliery, the colliery company put forward evidence that the best and only fair method of arriving at the net annual value was that of ascertaining the receipts in the year, and then deducting therefrom the proper deductions; in fact, rating it like a railway. If this was admissible, it worked out substantially correct. It was contended that this evidence was not admissible, but that it should be rated on the annual rent obtainable.

Held, that the evidence was admissible.

Held, further, that where in a rate the gross and rateable value are entered at the same figure, the gross is to be treated as an ascertained figure, and such deductions as can be properly made may be made therefrom.—DENABY COLLIERY CO. v. DONCASTER UNION, Q.B.D.

4. Rating — Exemption — Buildings occupied for police purposes—Chief constable's residence—43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1.—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 64.—By section 64 of the Local Government Act, 1888, the buildings used by the police at Leicester, then vested in the justices, became the property of the county council.

The chief constable for the county, on his appointment to that office, had to reside in a certain part of the police premises, and the assessment committee assessed that portion of the police buildings to the poor rate.

Held, that such rate should be quashed, because that part of the police premises occupied by the chief constable was occupied by him for the purposes of the police, and the fact that he was permitted to keep his wife and family there also rendered his occupation thereof none the less an exclusive occupation of that part of the building for the purpose of the county police.—LEICESTER COUNTY COUNCIL v. LEICESTER ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, Q.B.D., 585.

5. Rating—Exemption by private Act—Construction—20 Geo. 3, c. lv.—38 & 39 Vict. c. lxxxii.—A private Act of 1780 vested a piece of land in trustees for certain purposes therein mentioned for the benefit of the inhabitants of a borough and provided that for ever thereafter the land should be deemed and taken as within and parcel of the borough, but should in no wise be assessed to poor's rate.

Held, that the land was exempt for ever from being assessable to poor's rate and therefore a race committee, to whom the trustees had leased a portion of the land for a racecourse, were not liable to poor's rate by reason of their occupation.—PONTEFRACT ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE v. PONTEFRACT PARK TRUSTEES, C.A.

6. Rating — Exemption — Society instituted for purposes of the fine arts—Royal College of Music—Society not making "any dividend, gift, division, or bonus in money unto or between any of its members"—Scientific Societies Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 36), s. 1.—The Royal College of Music was a society created and incorporated by royal charter, for the advancement of the art of music by means of a teaching and examining body charged with the duty of providing musical instruction of the highest class, and of rewarding with academical degrees and certificates of proficiency, and otherwise, persons, whether educated or not at the college, who on examination might prove themselves worthy of such distinctions, for the promotion and supervision of musical instruction in schools and elsewhere conducive to the cultivation and dissemination of the art of music, and for the encouragement and promotion of the cultivation of music as an art. The college erected a building on land demised to them by a lease containing a stipulation that the building should be used for the purposes of their charter only, and it was so occupied and used by them. The charter prohibited any "dividend, gift, division, or bonus in money" to the members. The college paid out of its funds remuneration to certain members of its teaching staff who were also members of the society.

Held (affirming the judgment of Hawkins and Channell, JJ., [1898] 1 Q. B. 304), that the college was a society instituted for purposes of the fine arts exclusively, within the meaning of the Scientific Societies Act, 1843, s. 1, and did not, in making the above-mentioned payments to members of the teaching staff "make any dividend, gift, division or bonus in money" to its members within the meaning of the section; and therefore that the society was entitled to exemption from parochial rates in respect of the building occupied by them as aforesaid.—ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC v. WESTMINSTER VESTRY, C.A.

7. Rating—Gross estimated rental—Rateable value—Appeal against rateable value—Right of rating authority to adduce evidence to increase gross value in rate-book—Parochial Assessments Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96). s. 1.—On a ratepayer's appeal to quarter sessions against a poor rate on the ground that, though the estimated gross rental in the rate-book is correct, the rateable value is too high in consequence of a sufficient sum not having been allowed for deductions, the rating authority are bound to accept the gross value as appearing in the rate-book, and cannot, in order to show that the rateable value is not too high, give any evidence to show that in fact the gross estimated rental as appearing in the rate-book is too low.—HORTON v. WALSALL GUARDIANS, Q.B.D., 607.

8. Rating—Market garden—Land covered with greenhouses—"Agricultural land"—"Buildings or other hereditaments"—Liability of land covered with glass, being part of a market garden—Agricultural Rates Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 16), ss. 1, 5, 6, 9.—Land covered with glasshouses erected for the purpose of its cultivation is, though used solely as a market garden, a "building or other hereditament," and not "agricultural land," within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1, of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896; and is, therefore, not entitled to the partial exemption from rates granted by that Act to "agricultural land."

Decision of the Queen's Bench Division reversed (Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting).—SMITH v. RICHMOND, C.A., 401.

9. Rating—Railway—Railway lines at station—Station appurtenances—Running lines or sidings.—In addition to the four main lines passing through a railway-station, certain other lines were made at the station and used, some for the purposes of through traffic when the main lines were occupied, or likely to be occupied, and others for the purposes of carrying goods into the railway company's warehouse and into a private coal yard adjoining the station, and for the making up and departure of local passenger trains. These lines were also used for the standing of empty trains without engines.

Upon a case stated by a court of quarter sessions for the opinion of the High Court, the question being whether these lines were to be rated as running lines or sidings, Held, that the primary and principal purpose for which the lines in question were made and used was the carrying of passenger and goods traffic, and that they were running lines and should be rated accordingly.—STOCKPORT UNION v. LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO., C.A.

10. Rating—Reservoir of water company—Assessment of—"Land covered with water"—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 211, sub-section 1 (b).—A reservoir of water covering an area of some ten acres was constructed by a water company for the purpose of storing water. The bed of the reservoir consisted of a thick lining of concrete laid on the earth, which had been excavated for the purpose, and was permanently covered with water; and the reservoir was surrounded by an embankment lined with concrete, which embankment was used solely for the purpose of keeping the water in the reservoir and rose above the surface of the ground.

Held, that the reservoir was "land covered with water" within the meaning of section 211, sub-section 1 (b), of the Public Health Act, 1875, and was consequently rateable at one-fourth part only of the net annual value.—SOUTHWARK WATER CO. v. HAMPTON COUNCIL, Q.B.D.

The effective capital value of such reservoir and works should be arrived at from their cost as a basis, and so from that by a percentage of interest, the gross rental and rateable value can be arrived at.

By the Acts which empowered the waterworks to be carried out the corporation had made roads and bridges around the lake, and substituted a church, schools, and vicarage for those submerged by the lake.

Held, that the expense incurred in carrying out these operations ought not to be included in arriving at the total costs of the works to ascertain the effective capital value.

The reservoir was at present capable of delivering 52½ million gallons per day, but the catchment area at present connected with the reservoir was only sufficient to provide 41 million gallons. Catchment areas capable of providing the remaining 11½ million gallons would ultimately be connected. Of the 52½ million gallons 39 would be delivered by means of three pipes at Liverpool, and the remaining 13½ million gallons would be passed down the River Vyrnwy as compensation water in accordance with the provisions of the Act of 1889. At present only one of the lines of pipes, capable of carrying 13 million gallons a day, had been laid.

Held, that the effective capital value of the undertaking ought to be taken at 26½–52½ of the total capital expenditure.

The rate per cent. on the effective value of the undertaking to be taken to make the rateable value is a question of fact, and the court will not interfere unless it is shown that the percentage is arrived at on a wrong basis.—LIVERPOOL (MAYOR) v. LLANFYLLYN UNION, Q.B.D.

11. Rating—"Tied" public-house—Market value above rent actually paid—Brewers as hypothetical tenants—Exclusion of personal contracts between publican and brewers—Parochial Assessment Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96), s. 1.—The occupier of a tied public-house appealed to quarter sessions against an increased assessment on his licensed premises.

The quarter sessions reduced the assessment subject to a case being stated, and the question raised was on what basis the tied house—the rent paid for which by the occupier to his brewers being admittedly less than the market value of the house—ought to be estimated at for the purposes of the poor rate.

Held, that the statute required the assessment to be based on the value of the hereditament itself, but that in estimating that value the quarter sessions were right in taking into consideration the fact that rival brewers would give a price in the market for the house above that which would support a rent given by a publican who merely took the premises for the purposes of his own retail trade as a yearly tenant; but that any special value which brewers might for reasons connected with their own brewery be willing to give for the premises ought to be excluded, since a publican had a right, like an ordinary tenant, to have his premises rated apart from any personal contract existing between himself and his landlord.—WHITE v. BRADFORD-ON-AVON ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, Q.B.D., 603.

12. Settlement—Divided parish—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), ss. 1 (3), 67, 68.—A poor-law settlement gained by birth is a settlement in a particular parish. Consequently the settlement is destroyed on the division of the original parish under section 1, sub-section 3, of the Local Government Act, 1894, as the parish in which it was acquired thereby ceased to exist.—DORKING UNION v. ST. SAVIOUR'S UNION, C.A., 309.

POST OFFICE:—

Telegraphs and telephones—Underground wires—Postmaster-General—Road authority—Power of, to impose conditions on Postmaster-General—What conditions may be imposed—Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112), s. 5, sub-section 3; s. 9.—Section 9 of the Telegraph Act, 1863, provides that the company—which by a later Act includes the Postmaster-General—shall not place any telegraph under any street except with the consent of the bodies having the control of the streets; and section 5, sub-section 3, provides that any consent may be given "on such pecuniary or other terms or conditions as the person or body giving consent thinks fit."

Held, that the objections which the road authority are entitled to raise under section 5, sub-section 3, are objections as to matters only which concern them as a road authority, and that they cannot raise objections as to the modes or conditions of carrying on the service or the reasonableness of the charges for such service; and that they cannot, therefore, when giving consent to the Postmaster-General to lay an underground telephone wire, impose the condition that the wire should not be laid for the use of a particular telephone company unless such company were prepared to provide an improved service at a reduced cost, as such condition would be not only outside the scope of their duties as a road authority, but also unreasonable.—POSTMASTER-GENERAL v. LONDON CORPORATION, Q.B.D.

1. Appeal—Appeal from judge without jury—Appeal raising questions of fact.—The rehearing on appeal of a case tried by a judge without a jury is not governed by the rules applicable where there has been a trial and verdict by a jury. The Court of Appeal must act on its own considered conclusion on questions of fact as well as law.—COGHLAN v. CUMBERLAND, C.A.

2. Appeal—Case stated for opinion of Queen's Bench Division—12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 11—Judicature Act, 1873, s. 19.—An appeal lies from a decision of the Queen's Bench Division on a special case stated with respect to an appeal to a court of quarter sessions under section 11 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, although judgment has been entered in the court of quarter sessions in conformity with that decision.—LODGE v. HUDDERSFIELD (MAYOR) (No. 2), C.A., 482.

3. Appeal—School board election—Petition—Interlocutory order—Appeal to Court of Appeal—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), Part IV., s. 93, sub-section 7—Municipal Elections (Corrupt and Illegal Practices) Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 70), s. 36—General Rules, 1883, for the execution of Part IV. of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, rr. 48, 57.—From an order of a judge at chambers in an interlocutory application arising in a school board election petition an appeal lies to the Court of Appeal.—MONKSWELL (LORD) v. THOMPSON (No. 2), C.A.

4. Costs—Action against public authority—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1 (b).—When in substance "judgment has been obtained" by a public authority as defendant within the meaning of sub-section (b) of section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, and costs have been given in its favour, such judgment carries the right to have taxation as between solicitor and client, although no direction as to the mode of taxation is given in the judgment.—NORTH METROPOLITAN TRAMWAYS CO. v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, Ch.D. Romer, J., 554.

5. Costs—Application for judgment under order 14—Leave to defend—Case remitted to county court—Costs of application under order 14 to be costs in the cause—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), ss. 65, 116—Rules of the Supreme Court, ord. 14, r. 9 (a).—In an action to recover under a contract a sum above £20, but less than £50, the plaintiff applied for judgment under order 14. The defendant obtained leave to defend on payment of the amount claimed into court, and the money was paid in. An order was subsequently made on the application of the plaintiff, and affirmed by a judge at chambers, remitting the action to the county court, and directing that the costs of the application under order 14 should be costs in the cause. On appeal, Held, that as the case was not brought within section 116 of the County Courts Act, 1888, or ord. 14, r. 9 (a), there was no jurisdiction to make the order as to the costs of the application under order 14.

Quære, whether an order purporting to make costs under order 14 costs in a county court action could be made at the hearing under ord. 14, r. 9 (a).—DUNN v. APPLETON, C.A.

6. Costs—Interlocutory proceedings—Costs reserved—New regulation.—Where interlocutory applications have been ordered to stand to the trial and are not then mentioned to the judge, the costs of such applications are to be treated as costs in the action, and taxed accordingly, and need not be mentioned in the judgment. Where such applications have been disposed of, but the costs have been reserved, such costs are not to be mentioned in the judgment nor allowed on taxation without the special direction of the judge.—BRITISH NATURAL PREMIUM ASSOCIATION v. BYWATER, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 28.

7. Costs—Security for costs—Limited company—Plaintiffs in action—"Sufficient security"—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 69.—The security for costs required to be given by a plaintiff company, under section 69 of the Companies Act, 1862, must, as that section provides, be "sufficient"—neither illusory nor oppressive—having regard to the probable costs likely to be incurred by the defendant.—DOMINION BREWERY CO. v. FOSTER, C.A.

8. Costs—Set-off—House of Lords—R. S. C., ord. 65, r. 14.—The Appeal Committee after final judgment has been given in the appeal will not set off costs due by an appellant in the House of Lords against balance costs due to the appellant as the result of a decision in the Court of Appeal. If there is a probability of any question of costs or any other matter arising after and as incident to the appeal, the matter ought to be mentioned at the hearing.—RUSSELL v. RUSSELL (No. 2), H.L.

9. Costs—Taxation—General costs of action—Costs of counter-claim.—Where the plaintiff is ordered to pay the costs of the action, and the defendant to pay the costs of the counter-claim, only costs actually occasioned by the counter-claim can be charged to the defendant, and the general costs of the action must not be apportioned between the plaintiff and the defendant, but must all be paid by the plaintiff.—ATLAS METAL CO. v. MILLER, C.A., 657.

10. Declaratory judgment—Injunction—Jurisdiction—Local Government—Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 52), s. 3—Ord. 25, r. 5.—Where the Legislature has pointed out proceedings before magistrates as the proper course for a local authority to take with regard to offences under a particular statute the Court of Chancery will be very slow to exercise its jurisdiction to restrain such proceedings by injunction where there is no evidence that the local authority intend to commit any illegal act.

A fortiori it will be still less likely to make a declaration of rights where no relief, by way of injunction or damages, is asked.

Whether the court has, under ord. 25, r. 5, jurisdiction to make such a declaration under such circumstances, quære.—GRAND JUNCTION WATERWORKS CO. v. HAMPTON DISTRICT COUNCIL, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 644.

11. Discovery—Interrogatories—Criminal or penal proceedings—Pollution of river—Proceedings to restrain—Penalty—Rivers Pollution Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), ss. 3, 10.—Proceedings instituted in a county court for an order under section 10 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, requiring a person to abstain from polluting a river, which is constituted an offence against the Act, are not proceedings of a criminal or penal nature, although disobedience by the person against whom the order to abstain is made renders him liable to a penalty. An order for discovery by the person against whom proceedings for the abstention of pollution of a river are pending may accordingly be made.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (45 W. R. 3, [1896] 2 Q. B. 297) affirmed.—DERBY CORPORATION v. DERBYSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL, H.L., 48.

12. Discovery—Production of documents—Insurance, marine—Ship's papers—Re-insurance.—In an action by the original underwriter against the re-insurers upon a policy of marine insurance, the defendants are entitled to an order for production of ship's papers.—CHINA TRADERS' INSURANCE CO. v. ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE ASSOCIATION, C.A., 497.

13. Discovery—Production of documents—Privilege—Copies—Secondary evidence.—A document once privileged is always privileged.

After the trial of an action certain documents relating to the same subject-matter in a previous action were discovered at the office of a solicitor, who had obtained them from the representatives of the solicitor of the plaintiffs' predecessor in title. The defendant, having appealed from the judgment, sought production of the documents on the hearing of the appeal.

Held, that the documents were privileged from production.

Minet v. Morgan, 21 W. R. 467, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 361, followed.

Wheeler v. Le Marchant, 30 W. R. 235, 17 Ch. D. 675, explained.

But, held, further, that the defendant, having had an opportunity of taking copies of some of the documents, was entitled to give secondary evidence of such as he had copies of.

Lloyd v. Mostyn, 10 M. & W. 478, followed.—CALCRAFT v. GUEST, C.A., 428.

14. District registrar—Jurisdiction—Power to set aside judgment—Ord. 35, rr. 1, 5, 6.—Where in an action proceeding in a district registry the plaintiff has signed judgment in default of appearance, the district registrar has jurisdiction to set the judgment aside on the ground that it has been entered for a larger sum than was in fact due.

The effect of rule 6 of order 35 is that in all matters other than those in which the district registrar has exclusive jurisdiction under rules 1-5, proceedings may be taken either before the district registrar or a master.—TOWNEND v. KIRKHAM, C.A., 65.

16. Evidence—Inspection—Examination of witnesses on commission—Order to send abroad property in dispute—Jurisdiction—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 37, r. 5; ord. 50, r. 3.—In interpleader proceedings as to the right to the possession of a stamp album, one of the claimants applied for an order that the album might be sent abroad for inspection by witnesses who were to be examined there on commission.

Held, that the court had jurisdiction to make such order under ord. 37, r. 5, and ord. 50, r. 3.

Leader v. Smyth, 8 Times L. R. 612, overruled.—CHAPLIN v. PUTTICK, C.A., 481.

17. Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 94)—Japan Consular Court—Criminal case—Appeal—Special leave.—Under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 94), her Majesty has power to constitute for Japan a court, by Order in Council, with a jury of five, with jurisdiction over her Majesty's subjects.

The rule as to special leave to appeal in criminal cases laid down in In re Dillet, 12 App. Cas., affirmed.—CAREW, EX PARTE, H.L.

18. Foreign state plaintiff—Action for appointment of new trustee—Counter-claim for damages for libel—Order excluding counter-claim—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 19, r. 27; ord. 21, r. 15.—The fact that the plaintiff is a foreign state is not a sufficient reason for allowing the defendant to set up by way of counter-claim a claim which he could not set up against an ordinary plaintiff. An order will therefore be made excluding a counter-claim for damages for a libel alleged to have been published by a foreign state which is plaintiff in an action seeking the appointment of new trustees of a fund in court.—SOUTH AFRICAN REPUBLIC v. COMPAGNIE FRANCO-BELGE DU CHEMIN DE FER DU NOR DE LA REPUBLIQUE SUD AFRICANE, C.A., 67.

19. Foreign state—International law—Cross-action.—Where a foreign state sues in this country, a counter-claim cannot be made against it except for matters arising out of the original action, and claims for damages for breach of agreement by the plaintiff state which would, if a subject were suing, form the subject-matter of a separate action will be struck out.—SOUTH AFRICAN REPUBLIC v. LA COMPAGNIE FRANCO-BELGE DU CHEMIN DU FER DU NORD.—Ch.D. North, J., 151.

19A. Garnishee—Rent—Apportionment Act, 1870, s. 2.—Notwithstanding the Apportionment Act, 1870, rent cannot, before it is payable, be attached under a garnishee order as a debt owing or accruing due.—BARNETT v. EASTMAN, Q.B.D.

20. House of Lords—Decision on question of law final.—A decision of the House of Lords once given upon a question of law is conclusive upon the House afterwards.—LONDON TRAMWAYS CO. v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, H.L., 609.

21. Interpleader—Sheriff's interpleader—Claim to goods seized in execution—Claimant ordered to pay value of goods into court—Withdrawal of sheriff—Second execution—Liability of claimant to make further payment into court.—Where a claimant of goods seized by the sheriff in execution has paid into court the value of the goods and the amount of the sheriff's charges as a security for the execution pending the hearing of an interpleader issue, and before the hearing a second execution has been levied on the same goods, and the claimant has claimed the goods again, he may be ordered, as a condition to the sheriff being directed to withdraw, to pay into court again the value of the goods and the sheriff's charges as a security for the second execution creditor.—KOTCHIE v. GOLDEN SOVEREIGNS, C.A., 616.

22. Judgment—Joint debtors—Effect of judgment against one—Pleading—Costs.—The rule in King v. Hoare, 13 M. & W. 494, that a judgment against one of two joint debtors is a bar to proceedings against the other, applies where both joint debtors are originally made defendants to, and enter an appearance in, the same action, and judgment by consent has been obtained against one of them in that action.

Where one joint debtor has consented to judgment, the other, if he wishes to avail himself of the judgment as a defence, should plead it; and where he did not plead it, he was ordered to pay the costs of the action up to the time of the consent judgment.—MCLEOD v. POWER, Ch.D. Byrne, J.

23. Judgment—Setting aside—Judgment obtained by fraud—Fresh action to set aside judgment—Jurisdiction.—Where a judgment has been obtained by fraud, the court has jurisdiction, in a subsequent action brought for that purpose, to set the judgment aside.—COLE v. LANGFORD, Q.B.D.

23A.—Judgment—Setting aside judgment—Jurisdiction—Perjury.—A judgment obtained in an action will not be set aside in a subsequent action upon proof merely that the judgment was obtained by perjury.—BAKER v. WADSWORTH, Q.B.D.

24. Lis pendens—Dismissal of action for specific performance — Order vacating registration — Lis Pendens Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 47), s. 2.—Upon the dismissal of an action for specific performance, which has been registered as a lis pendens, the successful party may, in addition to the usual judgment, have an order to the effect that the registration shall be vacated unless an appeal is set down within a certain specified time.—BAXTER v. MIDDLETON, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 350.

25. Mayor's Court—Costs—Libel—Less than £5 recovered—Mayor's Court of London Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. clvii.), s. 11—Rules of 1890 and 1892.—The fact that in a particular case no scale of costs is provided by the Mayor's Court of London Rules, 1890, is not in itself sufficient to show that that court has no inherent jurisdiction to order costs in the cases not specifically provided for.

Semble, that in actions for libel tried in the Mayor's Court of London, in which less than £5 is recovered, the court has jurisdiction to order costs to be paid to the plaintiff, beyond court fees and allowances to witnesses, although no scale is provided by the rules for such a case.—HALL v. LAUNSPACH, C.A.

26. Nonsuit—Discontinuance—Ord. 26, r. 1.—A plaintiff can no longer claim as of right to be nonsuited so as to be at liberty to bring a second action. The right to discontinue an action is now entirely regulated by order 26, and the plaintiff cannot discontinue at the trial without an order of the judge, who may make such terms as he thinks just with regard to the plaintiff's right to bring another action.—FOX v. STAR NEWSPAPER CO., C.A., 340.

27. Palatine Court—Order for attachment—Defendant out of jurisdiction—Court of Chancery of Lancaster Act, 1850, s. 15—Court of Chancery of Lancaster Act, 1854, s. 7—Order made order of High Court.—Where a defendant in an action in the Chancery Court of Lancaster appears to the action, but resides out of the jurisdiction, and after judgment an order is made in the Palatine Court for leave to issue a writ of attachment against him, that order will be made an order of the High Court under section 15 of the Court of Chancery of Lancaster Act, 1850.—DUNMORE v. WHARAM, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 366.

28. Parties—Joinder of defendants—Joinder of separate causes of action against several defendants—Ord. 16, rr. 4, 5; ord. 18, r. 1.—A claim to recover damages from three defendants on the ground of deceit cannot rightly be joined in the same action with a claim to recover damages from two of such defendants on the ground of conspiracy.

Sadler v. Great Western Railway Co., 45 W. R. 51, [1896] A. C. 450, followed.—GOWER v. COULDRIDGE, C.A., 214.

29. Parties—Joinder of plaintiffs—Separate causes of action—Right to relief arising out of same transaction—Ord. 16, r. 1.—In an action by a shareholder in a limited company against the directors, the company being joined as a defendant, the plaintiff claimed damages from the directors for having induced him by deceit and fraud to buy shares in the company, one of the particulars of deceit and fraud being the payment of a dividend out of capital. The plaintiff also claimed on behalf of himself and all the other shareholders a declaration that the payment of the said dividend was ultra vires and illegal, and that the directors were liable to repay to the company the money so paid by them.

Held, that the plaintiff, suing in two different capacities, could not join the two separate causes of action in one action, inasmuch as they did not arise out of the same transaction, or series of transactions, within the meaning of ord. 16, r. 1.—STROUD v. LAWSON, C.A., 626.

30. Payment into court — Acceptance — Costs — Jurisdiction—R. S. C., ord. 22, r. 7.—Where money has been paid into court before delivery of defence and accepted by the plaintiff in satisfaction within the time limited by ord. 22, r. 7, there is no jurisdiction to order the plaintiff to pay the costs of the defendant incurred between the dates of payment into court and the acceptance in satisfaction.

Ord. 22, r. 7, is applicable to cases in which there are no pleadings.—LOMER v. WATERS, C.A.

31. Pleading—Action by one of two joint promisees —Refusal of other to join as co-plaintiff—Power to add him as co-defendant.—One of two joint promisees can maintain an action on the contract, making the other joint promisee a co-defendant if the latter, after being tendered an indemnity against costs, refuses to be joined as co-plaintiff.—CULLEN v. KNOWLES, Q.B.D.

32. Pleading—Counter-claim—Parties—Claim by defendant and other person against plaintiff—Ord. 21, r. 11.—The defendant and a third person had a joint cause of action against the plaintiff arising out of the same circumstances as the plaintiff's cause of action. The defendant delivered a counter-claim in respect of such joint cause of action, making the third person a defendant to the counter-claim.

Held, that such counter-claim could not be set up in the action.—PENDER v. TADDEI, C.A., 452.

33. Staying proceedings—Frivolous and vexatious action—Action raising question decided in an interlocutory application in county court.—The defendant recovered judgment against the plaintiff in a county court for a sum of money. Before the costs were taxed the defendant, upon representations as to the plaintiff's poverty, agreed to accept a smaller sum, and executed a deed releasing the plaintiff from the judgment debt and costs. The defendant subsequently applied to the county court judge for an order to tax the costs upon the ground that the release had been obtained by misrepresentation. The county court judge came to the conclusion that the release had been obtained by misrepresentation, and directed the costs to be taxed, and ordered the balance of the judgment debt and the taxed costs to be paid by the plaintiff. The plaintiff thereupon commenced an action in the High Court claiming a declaration that the defendant had released him from the judgment debt and costs, and an injunction to restrain the defendant from enforcing payment thereof. Upon an application by the defendant to stay the action,

Held, that, as the identical question sought to be raised in the action had been determined by the county court judge on the application to tax the costs, the court would stay the action as frivolous and vexatious and an abuse of the process of the court.—STEPHENSON v. GARNETT, C.A., 410.

34. Stay of proceedings—Matrimonial suits between same parties in England and Scotland—Motion to restrain Scotch proceedings — Order. — The wife instituted proceedings in England, claiming a judicial separation on the grounds of the husband's alleged cruelty, desertion, and adultery. The husband appeared under protest, and filed an act on petition, disputing the jurisdiction. Negotiations were afterwards entered into for a separation to be effected by deed, and after these had been pending for some time the husband commenced proceedings in the Scotch court praying for a dissolution of marriage on the ground of alleged malicious desertion for a period of four years.

The court, upon the application of the wife, granted an injunction restraining the husband from prosecuting the proceedings in Scotland until the act on petition should be heard and determined in this court, or until further order.—CHRISTIAN v. CHRISTIAN, P.D. & Ad.D.

35. Staying proceedings—Unpaid costs.—Although mere non-payment of the costs of an interlocutory application which the plaintiff has been ordered to pay, and his inability to pay, furnish no sufficient ground for ordering proceedings in the action to be stayed until payment, the court has jurisdiction to order such stay if the action is vexatious, or has been vexatiously conducted by him.—GRAHAM v. SUTTON & Co., C.A.

36. Trial—New trial—Misdirection—Ejectment Possession of plaintiffs.—Where in an action the plaintiffs' title was admitted, it is a misdirection to withdraw the facts from the jury and direct a verdict for the defendants on the ground that the plaintiffs had not proved possession during any part of the statutory period. Evidence having been submitted which, if believed, proved their possession of part of the lands sued for, a new trial was rightly ordered.—KINGSTON RACE STAND v. KINGSTON (MAYOR), P.C.

37. Trial—New trial—Verdict against evidence.—Where a question of fact is left to the jury, and they have answered it reasonably, their verdict cannot be disturbed. But where the verdict is one that could not reasonably have been found if the attention of the jury had been directed to the whole of the facts of the case, or if the court is not satisfied that the real question to be determined was so left to them that their verdict was given upon the determination of that question, the court may set aside the verdict and order a new trial.—JONES v. SPENCER, H.L.

38. Writ—Service—Scotch defendant—Agreement for service within the jurisdiction—Ord. 9, r. 2; ord. 11, r. 1 (e).—The defendant, who was a domiciled Scotchman, entered into a contract of sale with the plaintiffs. The contract contained an agreement that in case of disputes between the parties proceedings might be served on the defendant by leaving the same at a certain office in London and posting a copy thereof to the defendant's address in Scotland.

Held, that such agreement was valid, and that service of a writ in the way specified could not be set aside.

British Wagon Co. v. Gray, 44 W. R. 113, [1896] 1 Q. B. 35, distinguished.—MONTGOMERY v. LIEBENTHAL, C.A., 292.

39. Writ—Service out of jurisdiction—Foreclosure action—Ord. 11, r. 1 (e) (g).—Mortgagees purchased an equity of redemption and had it conveyed to trustees for themselves. They then brought a foreclosure action against the trustees and a second mortgagee who was resident out of the jurisdiction. On a motion to discharge an order for service of the writ out of the jurisdiction,

Held, (1) that the action was not founded on a breach of contract so as to fall within ord. 11, r. 1 (e); and (2) that the trustees, though necessary parties to a foreclosure action, were not necessary defendants so as to bring the action within ord. 11, r. 1 (g), and that the order for service out of the jurisdiction must, therefore, be discharged.—DEUTSCHE NATIONAL BANK v. PAUL, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 243.

40. Writ—Substituted service—Defendant out of jurisdiction—Ord. 9, r. 2.—A person who was in England at the time when a writ for service within the jurisdiction was issued against him went out of the jurisdiction before the writ was served upon him, but not in order to evade service.

Held, by Lord Halsbury, L.C., and Collins, L.J. (Rigby, L.J., dissenting), that an order for substituted service of the writ could be made.—JAY v. BUDD, C.A., 34.

PRINCIPAL and AGENT:—

1. Authority of agent—Stockbroker's clerk—Agent to accept orders—Evidence of holding out—Liability of principal.—The defendants, a firm of stockbrokers, allowed one of their clerks a commission upon business introduced by him. On three separate occasions the plaintiff gave the clerk orders to take to the defendants for the purchase of shares, and the plaintiff received through the clerk bought-notes signed by the defendants in respect of these shares. No notice of assent to the orders was given by the defendants before executing them. In the first two transactions the plaintiff paid for the shares by cheque drawn in favour of the defendants, which he handed to the clerk to take to them. In the third transaction he paid for the shares by cheque drawn in favour of the clerk, which the clerk handed to the defendants. Subsequently the plaintiff gave the clerk further orders for the purchase of shares, but the clerk, instead of taking these orders to the defendants, forged the defendants' signature to bought-notes and handed them to the plaintiff, and in return received cheques in payment, which he appropriated to his own use.

In an action against the defendants to recover the money so paid, the jury found that the clerk had no express authority to enter into the contracts; but that the defendants held him out, or permitted him to represent himself, as possessed of such authority.

Held, by A. L. Smith and Chitty, L.JJ., that the course of business in the first three transactions did not afford any evidence upon which the jury could reasonably find that the defendants held out the clerk as having authority to bind them by contracts, or as representing that the defendants would execute the orders given to the clerk.

Held, by Collins, L.J. (dissenting), that, as no notice of assent was given by the defendants before executing the first three orders, there was evidence for the jury, arising out of the mode of doing business, that the defendants by conduct represented, or permitted their clerk to represent, that orders received by him would be executed by the defendants unless they gave notice to the contrary.—SPOONER v. BROWNING, C.A., 369.

2. Broker—Stock Exchange—Wrongful sale by broker—Indemnity.—A stockbroker who on behalf of a principal buys stock upon the Stock Exchange for the next settling day, and without authority from his principal, and contrary to the agreement between them, sells the stock before that day at a loss, cannot claim indemnity from his principal.

The plaintiff, a stockbroker, having prior to the 10th of November bought stock of a railway company for the defendant on the London Stock Exchange, it was agreed between them that the plaintiff should take part of the stock so purchased off the market by paying for it with money advanced by him for the purpose, which he accordingly did, and that he should hold that stock as security for his advance with interest, and should not sell the same before the account of the 26th of November. On the 10th of November the plaintiff by the defendant's instructions carried over the residue of the stock till the 26th of November, and bought a further amount of stock for that day. On the 19th of November the plaintiff, without the defendant's authority, and contrary to his agreement, sold the whole amount of stock purchased at a loss in order to close the account between them. If the stock had been sold on the 26th of November it would have realized a price higher than that at which the plaintiff sold, but lower than that at which he had bought it for the defendant. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant for indemnity in respect of the difference between the prices at which he had bought and sold the stock,

Held, first, as to the plaintiff's claim in respect of the stock paid for and taken off the market by the plaintiff as before mentioned, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover as for money paid for the defendant at his request, subject to the defendant's right to counter-claim damages for the loss occasioned by the plaintiff's wrongfully selling the stock before the 26th of November;

Held, secondly, as to the plaintiff's claim in respect of the stock carried over and that which was purchased on the 10th of November as before mentioned (by A. L. Smith, L.J., and Collins, L.J., Rigby, L.J., dissenting), that no action for indemnity was maintainable, the loss having arisen, not through any breach of contract by the defendant, but through the wrongful sale by the plaintiff.

By Rigby, L.J., in affirmance of Mathew, J., that the plaintiff was entitled to be credited in account with the price at which he purchased for the defendant, being charged by way of damages with the loss arising from the wrongful sale.

3. Commission on "hire earned"—Time charter-party—Cancellation.—The plaintiff, acting as broker for the defendants, obtained a time charter-party for their ship upon terms of being paid a commission on all hire earned. During the currency of the charter-party litigation arose between the defendants and the charterers as to the fitness of the ship for the purpose for which she was chartered, which resulted in the cancellation of the charter-party, there being no wilful act or default on the part of the defendants in bringing about this result.

Held, that, upon the true construction of the contract, the intention of the parties was that the plaintiff should not be entitled to commission if the earning of hire was prevented by reason of causes such as had in fact put an end to the charter-party.—WHITE v. TURNBULL, C.A.

4. Negligence—Public body—Contractor—Payment into court by one joint tortfeasor—Separate defences.—The Wimbledon District Council had given notice to the owner of a certain road to repair, and the requirements of such notice not having been complied with, they proceeded to have the works carried out themselves.

They thereupon entered into a contract with the defendant Iles to do the works, and by his contract he was to supply all materials and labour, and the work was to be in accordance with the specifications and plans prepared by the surveyor, who was to have the power to require improper materials to be removed, and other and proper material substituted, and under certain circumstances could require workmen to be discharged. Iles left a heap of soil in the road at night, over which the plaintiff fell and was injured, and after this accident, by order of the district council, lights were placed.

Separate defences were delivered by the defendants. Iles denied liability, and paid £75 into court. The district council paid nothing into court, but pleaded that, "the defendant Iles, while denying liability, has paid into court £75, and these defendants say that sum is sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim."

The jury returned a verdict for £50.

Held, that the duty of affording protection to the public was in the circumstances also incurred by the district council, and that by entering into a contract such as this with Iles they could not avoid the obligation of the duty.

Further, that, although the two defendants might have joined in a defence of payment into court which would have availed them both, yet as they did not do so, but had put in a separate defence, they could not avail themselves of the payment into court by Iles, and that judgment must therefore be entered against them.—PENNY v. WIMBLEDON DISTRICT COUNCIL, Q.B.D.

PROBATE:—

1. Administration — Attorney of an attorney — Egyptian Law.—Where a power is given by an heir-at-law to an attorney to appoint another attorney for the purpose of administration of the estate of a deceased foreigner, and such power is allowable by the law of the deceased's domicil, letters of administration will be granted to the attorney duly appointed by the first attorney.

Quebec and Richmond Railway v. Quinn, 12 Moo. P. C. C. 232, affirmed and followed.

Semble, where a power of attorney expressly authorizes the appointment of an attorney by an attorney, the maxim Delegatus non potest delegare does not apply.—ABDUL HAMID BEY, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

2. Administration de bonis non—Grant to attorney —Necessity for notice.—Where administration had been granted to the attorney of one of two next-of-kin, both of whom resided out of the jurisdiction, and the administrator died leaving the estate partly unadministered, the court, upon proof of notice to the next-of-kin for whose benefit the administration had been granted, granted administration de bonis non to the attorney of the other next-of-kin. —BARTON, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

3. Administration—Creditor—Right of retainer by next-of-kin.—A creditor will not be granted administration to defeat the right of retainer of the next-of-kin, unless he can show the existence of assets within the jurisdiction. A general allegation of information and belief as to the existence of assets is useless.—FOY, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

4. Administration—Grant to administratrix of widow who had not taken out administration—Intestates Estates Act, 1890, s. 1.—A widow died without taking out administration to her husband's estate of which she had taken possession, he having died intestate and without issue. The widow, by her will, disposed of all her property (including her husband's assets) but appointed no executor. The husband's assets were of small amount but there was a possibility that they might prove of greater value than £500.

The court granted administration of the personal estate of the husband to the administratrix of the widow. — MCDONAGH, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D. (Ir).

5. Administration — Grant to creditor. — The deceased in 1871 charged a reversionary interest in personalty in favour of a creditor. He died intestate in 1878 leaving his father his next-of-kin. His father died in 1888 having appointed A. his executrix. A. died in 1896 having appointed L. her executrix. No letters of administration had been taken out to the estate of the deceased. The reversionary interest fell into possession in 1897. The charge had been assigned to the applicants and the sum due on it exceeded the property charged. L. consented to the application.

Held, that a grant ought to be made to the applicants.

In the Goods of Elizabeth Godfrey, 2 Sw. & Tr. 133, approved.—LOWE, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

6. Administration—Limited grant to husband—Wife's property not for her separate use—Probate Rules 15 and 18 of March, 1887.—The deceased was at the time of her marriage in 1872 entitled to a mortgage debt not settled for her separate use. This debt was never reduced into possession. The deceased made a will purporting to dispose of the whole of her property, under which the husband was appointed executor.

The court gave the husband a grant of administration limited to such property as the wife could not dispose of by will.—LEMAN, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

7. Administration—Limited grant to husband—Wife's property not for her separate use—Probate Rules 15 and 18 of March, 1887.—Under certain circumstances a grant of letters of administration limited to such property as the wife could not dispose of by will may still be made to a husband though the wife has made a will.

In 1875 the deceased, a married woman domiciled in New Zealand, the law of which colony in respect of married women's property was at that time identical with English law before the passing of the Married Women's Property Acts, made a will purporting to dispose of all her property, and after her death in 1875 the will was proved in New Zealand. She had been at the time of her marriage entitled to certain sums under English settlements. These were not limited to her separate use and had never been reduced into possession during her lifetime.

Held, that letters of administration to these sums might be granted to the husband.—DONOVAN, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

8. Administration—Lunacy of administratrix—Foreign administrator.—Where the wife of a domiciled foreign subject obtained letters of administration with the will annexed to his assets in England, and became insane abroad, the court granted administration to an administrateur provisoire appointed by a foreign court, for the use and benefit of the lunatic so long as the applicant remained administrateur provisoire.—GOLDSCHMIDT, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

9. Administration—Married woman—Grant to heir-at-law of intestate wife passing over husband—Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), Part I., s. 2, sub-section 4—Court of Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), s. 73.—By the Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), Part I., s. 2, sub-section 4, "Where a person dies possessed of real estate, the court shall, in granting letters of administration, have regard to the rights and interests of persons interested in his real estate, and his heir-at-law, if not one of the next-of-kin, shall be equally entitled to the grant with the next-of-kin, and provision shall be made by rules of court for adapting the procedure and practice in the grant of letters of administration to the case of real estate."

A wife died intestate. Her husband survived her, and she left a son by a former marriage, a minor, who was her heir-at-law.

On it appearing that the husband was a dissipated man, who was mismanaging a public-house which was part of the estate, and of which he refused to give up possession, the court, acting under the sub-section and s. 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, granted administration of the estate to the guardian ad litem of the infant heir-at-law.—ARDERN, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

10. Administration—Married woman—Practice—Real estate—Heir-at-law—Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), Part I., s. 2, sub-section 4.—Where the title of the person applying for administration as heir-at-law under sub-section 4 of section 2 of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, is clear, and there is no personalty, a grant may be made to the applicant without notice to the next-of-kin; but where the title of the applicant is doubtful, or the amount of the personalty is large as compared with the realty, notice should be given to the next-of-kin.—BARNETT, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

11. Administration — Married woman — Will annexed—Practice—Heir-at-law — Citation — Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 2. sub-section 4—Rules of 20*th of November*, 1897.—A married woman who owned certain farms made a will, by which she left her real estate to her husband for life, with remainder to her natural daughter absolutely, and all her personal estate to her husband, whom she appointed executor. Her natural daughter died in her lifetime. Her husband died without proving the will, and administration of his personal estate was granted to his sister as next-of-kin. It was not known who was the heir-at-law of the testatrix. The value of the real estate was £7,688, and that of the personal estate £45.

Held, on an application by the administratrix of the husband for a grant of administration of the real and personal estate of the testatrix, that having regard to the provisions of sub-section 4 of section 2 of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, as the heir-at-law had not been cited, a general grant of administration ought not to be made, but that the applicant might take a grant ad colligendum, which would enable her to let and manage the lands until the heir-at-law could be cited.—ROBERTS, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

12. Administration—Widow—Misconduct—Grant to son of intestate.—Where the widow of an intestate, whose estate was small, was shown to have been a woman of dissipated habits, who had eloped with another man sixteen years before the application, and had not since been heard of, the court made a grant of administration to the only son of the intestate, without the citation of the widow.

13. Executor renouncing—Application to retract—Court of Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), s. 79.—One of several executors, who has renounced, will, under proper circumstances—e.g., where, as in the present case, the other executor had absconded, and where administration has not been granted—be allowed to retract his renunciation and carry on the executorship.

Section 79 of the Probate Act of 1857 has not altered the practice in this respect.—STILES, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D., 444.

14. Insolvency—Trust estate—Limited administration—Annexing will.—The court, in granting administration, limited to certain leaseholds of which the deceased, who died insolvent, was trustee, directed his will to be annexed to the grant.—BUTLER, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D., 445.

15. Practice—Presumption of death—Affidavit of applicant.—On an application for leave to presume the death of a person who has disappeared, the affidavit of the applicant should contain a statement of belief that the death occurred at the alleged date.—HURLSTONE, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

16. Practice—Presumption of death—Commorientes—Brothers on board same vessel—Total loss—Leave to swear to death—Declaration of non-survivorship.—Two brothers sailed in the same vessel in 1896, but nothing had been heard of them, or anyone else on board, from that time.

The court, in giving leave to swear that both the brothers died on or about the 14th of May, 1896, added a declaration, and permitted the same to be included in the oath in each case, to the effect that there was no reason to suppose that either died before the other.—JOHNSON, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

17. Practice—Presumption of death—Seven years' disappearance.—On an application, made in 1898, for leave to presume the death of a person who had not been heard of since 1891, of whose death no evidence was offered beyond the fact of his disappearance, and who had been cited in a suit which was pending in the Chancery Division, the court, in giving leave to depose to the death, directed that the grant of administration should, except in so far as it might be required in the Chancery Division, remain in the registry till the expiration of seven years from the date of the disappearance.—WINSTONE, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

18. Practice—Presumption of death—Time of application.—The court, on proof of sufficient inquiries, allowed the death of a testator to be sworn to three years after his disappearance.—MATTHEWS, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

19. Practice—Undue influence and other pleas—Right of plaintiffs to open whole case, and to reserve part of evidence in rebuttal of charge of undue influence.—In a probate case, wherein the three plaintiffs propounded the will, which was opposed on various grounds, including a charge of undue influence against all three of the plaintiffs,

Held, that counsel for the plaintiffs was entitled to open the whole case, and, after calling one of the plaintiffs only, to reserve the evidence of the other two plaintiffs.—FALDO v. LOVETT, P.D. & Ad.D.

20. Will—Alteration in will—Appointment of executors.—A reference in a marginal note to certain persons as executors, whose express appointment as executors has been cancelled, but who are left trustees of the will, may have the effect of appointing them executors, and not only according to the tenor.—NUSSEY, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

21. Will—Codicil not forthcoming at testator's death—Presumption of destruction animo revocandi —Probate of such parts only of will as not revoked by execution of codicil.—A testator duly executed a will and afterwards a codicil revoking certain portions of the will. Both documents were handed to him by his solicitor. They were in separate envelopes which were sealed up. On the testator's death the will only was found, with the seal of the envelope containing it broken.

Held, that, although the presumption of law must prevail as to the destruction of the codicil, probate could only be granted of such parts of the will as the codicil by its execution had not revoked.—DEBAC, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

21A. Will—Erroneous description of executor.—Where it is shown that a testator has misdescribed the name and residence of an executor, probate may be granted to the executor in his real name and as of his real residence, described in the will as of another name and another residence.—BASKETT, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

21B. Will—Execution—Part of will subsequent to signature.—A testator executed a testamentary document, which consisted of two pages, and the whole of which was written before execution. The first page, which alone was signed by the testator and the witnesses, contained the major part of the will. It concluded with an unfinished sentence continued on the second page. The second page also contained bequests.

Held, that the first page only could be admitted to probate.—GEE, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

22. Will—Limited power of appointment—Will in exercise of power—Subsequent wills—No clause of revocation.—A testatrix made a will in 1890, in which (inter alia) she exercised a limited power of appointment under her father's will. She made a second will in 1894, and a third will in 1895, neither of which contained words of revocation nor any execution of the limited power of appointment. Otherwise each of the later wills dealt with the whole of the testator's property, so that the 1894 will was revoked by the 1895.

Held, that the wills of 1890 and 1895 must be both admitted to probate.—CADELL v. WILCOCKS, P.D. & Ad.D., 394.

23. Will—Mutual and joint will—Death of one—Grant of probate of operative part.—A husband and wife made a will which contained mutual dispositions in favour of the other on the death of one, followed by joint dispositions to take effect on the death of the survivor, but with full power to the survivor to alter the same.

On the death of the wife the court granted probate to the husband of so much of the will as then became operative.—SMYTH, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D., 426.

24. Will—Personalty abroad—Certified copy.—Where a later will confirms an earlier will dealing only with assets out of the jurisdiction, both wills must be proved.

Where a will has been filed in a court in the colonies for probate, but has not yet been proved, a certified copy issuing from that court will be admitted to probate.—WESTERN, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

25. Will made abroad—24 & 25 Vict. c. 114, s. 1 (Lord Kingsdown's Act)—Law of the Congo Free State—General principles of law and equity—The testator, an English subject, residing in the Congo Free State, made a will in holograph unattested form in that state.

Held, that such a will was good as "made according to the forms required by the law of the place where the same was made" because in fact the courts of the Congo Free State would have upheld the will.

Semble, also, that where there is an absence of any specific provision in the law of a foreign country as to the forms of wills, and there is a general provision that where no specific provision exists cases are to be decided according to general principles of law and equity, any form is sufficient which carries out the necessary requirements of testamentary disposition.

Meaning of general principles of law and equity discussed.

If no particular form is prescribed by the lex loci, any form allowed by it is sufficient to satisfy 24 & 25 Vict. c. 114, s. 1.—STOKES v. STOKES, P.D. & Ad.D.

26. Will—Incorporated document—Library catalogue—Custody.—A testator made a bequest to a college of his books as enumerated in his library catalogue, a voluminous document, a copy of which would entail considerable expense. Probate was granted of the will without requiring the catalogue to be brought into the Probate Registry, the college undertaking to hold the catalogue for the registry, and a note to that effect being made upon the probate.—BALME, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

27. Will—Revival of revoked will—Non-disclosure of revocation to solicitor—Codicil—Express "words of reference"—Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 22.—In 1889 the testatrix made a will. In 1892 she obtained from the same solicitors a draft codicil, which she took away, as they believed, to execute it; but, instead of executing it, she, with the assistance of another person, executed a new will revoking the first. In 1893 she asked her solicitors to prepare another codicil, and they, thinking she had executed the first codicil, and in ignorance of the execution of the will of 1892, in drafting it described it as a second codicil to the will of 1889, and concluded it by confirming the said will and codicil. This codicil the testatrix duly executed.

The court, on motion to allow proof only of the will of 1892 and codicil of 1893, ordered proof of all three documents.—CHILCOTT, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D., 32.

28. Will—Revocation—Destruction under mistaken belief as to effect of codicil—Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 20—No revocation.—A testator, who had made a will in December, 1891, leaving his property amongst his six children, executed a codicil in 1895, wherein, after reciting the bequest in the will, he cut out one of the children, and gave that child's share among the other five. He thereupon, having read over the codicil, put the will in the fire, saying it was "no good," and adding that there were now five to take the money. The codicil was admitted to be entitled to probate, apart from the will.

Held, that the Wills Act only expressed the old law, applied in analogous cases, as expounded in Perrott v. Perrott, 14 East 423; that this was a case of mistake, and not a case of dependent relative revocation; that the testator, when he destroyed the will, entertained a belief that the codicil would effect all that he wished in regard to the disposal of the whole of his property; and that, as this was a mistaken belief on his part, the animus revocandi did not accompany the physical act of destruction, and the contents of the will should be admitted to probate along with the codicil.—BEARDSLEY v. LACEY, P.D. & Ad.D.

29. Witness—Order for examination of—Costs—Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), s. 26.—Where a witness attends in court for the purpose of being examined pursuant to an order made under section 26 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), he is not entitled to conduct-money before being examined.—WYATT, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D., 425.

RAILWAY:—

1. Crossing of road—Penalty for not making substituted road—By whom recoverable—Road belonging to adjoining landowners—Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), ss. 53, 54.—By section 54 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, if a railway company cross a road so as to interfere with it, and do not make a substituted road, they shall forfeit £20 for every day during which such substituted road shall not be made, and such penalty shall, in the case of a private road, be paid to the owner thereof.

Held, that a part owner of that portion of the road interfered with can sue for and recover the penalty without joining the owners of the rest of that portion of the road.

Held, also, that the railway are only liable to one penalty for each day during which they fail to make a substituted road.—LLEWELLYN v. VALE OF GLAMORGAN RAILWAY CO., C.A., 290.

2. Footway—Railway across public footpath—Duty to build bridge—Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 46.—Where the special Act (which incorporated the provisions of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845) of a railway company contains no provisions dealing with footways, the 46th section of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, imposes no obligation on the railway company to provide a bridge so as to carry the railway over the footway, or the footway over the railway.

Per Lord Herschell.—The Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, has not of itself any operation in respect of any road whatever, whether a carriage-way, a footpath, or a public road, unless brought into effect by some rights being given and corresponding obligations created by a special Act.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (44 W. R. 501, [1896] 2 Q. B. 74) affirmed.—DARTFORD COUNCIL v. BEXLEY HEATH RAILWAY CO., H.L., 235.

3. Master and servant—Station-master—Scope of authority.—The plaintiff, a passenger on the defendant company's line, alighted at the station next before that for which his ticket was issued. He refused to give up his ticket alleging that he was breaking his journey, but offered his name and address. The station-master thereupon locked the only door leading out of the station and thereby detained the plaintiff for a considerable time until his ticket was given up. In an action against the company for false imprisonment,

Held, that the company were responsible for the act of the station-master, which was done in the course of his employment, and that the detention of the plaintiff was unjustifiable in the circumstances of the case.—FARRY v. GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY CO., Q.B.D. (Ir).

4. Negligence—One company using trucks of another.—The C. Railway Co. brought coal in their own trucks to D. station where their obligations to the consignees ended. At D. the trucks were allowed by the C. Railway Co. to be hauled along a tramway by the G. and S.W. Railway Co. to the works of the consignees, during which transit one of the employees of the G. and S.W. Railway Co. was killed owing to a defective truck. The widow brought an action for damages against the C. Railway Co.

Held, that these facts disclosed no liability on the part of the C. Railway Co. towards the plaintiff.

Heaven v. Pender, 11 Q. B. D. 503, distinguished.

Decision of the Second Division of the Court of Session (34 Sco. L. R. 317) reversed.—CALEDONIAN RAILWAY CO. v. MULHOLLAND, H.L., 236.

5. "Part only of any house or other building"—Avenue—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 92.—Prior to 1890 a mansion-house and grounds, and a private road forming the approach thereto, formed part of the T. Estate. In 1890 the then owners conveyed to the plaintiff (inter alia) the mansion-house and grounds and the site of the private road, reserving to themselves a right of way over the road. The defendant railway company having served notice to treat for a portion of the road,

Held, that the said portion of the road did not form part of the plaintiff's "house" within the meaning of section 92 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and that the plaintiff could not require the defendants to take the whole of the house and grounds.

Decision of Stirling, J. (ante, p. 388), affirmed.—ALLHUSEN v. EALING AND SOUTH HARROW RAILWAY CO., C.A., 483.

6. Station—Right of railway company to exclude from the station persons other than travellers—Exclusion of hotel servant wearing hotel badge—Trespass—Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 31)—Regulation of Railways Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 48).—Apart from any facilities granted by the Railway Commissioners, a railway company have the right of excluding from their stations all persons except those using or desirous of using the railway; and may impose upon the rest of the public any terms they think proper as the condition of admittance. And it follows that a railway company who have an hotel of their own within the limits of the station may qualify their permission to other hotel proprietors and their servants to have free access to the platform with the condition that on those occasions no hotel servant shall wear a distinctive badge or livery.

So held (Lord Morris dissenting), reversing the decision of the Second Division of the Court of Session ([1896] 23 R. 885).

The jurisdiction to determine whether there is a statutory right to demand from a railway company a facility or privilege belongs exclusively to the Railway Commissioners. — PERTH GENERAL STATION COMMITTEE v. ROSS, H.L.

7. Superfluous lands—Land adjoining terminus—Negotiations by railway company to sell—Lease of portion—Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 19), s. 120.—The directors of a railway company, before the expiration of ten years from the time limited by the special Act for the completion of their works, considered proposals for the purchase from the company of land adjoining one of their terminal stations, and after the ten years had expired they also considered proposals, and eventually leased a portion for the building of a district post-office. The adjoining landowner claimed the land as "superfluous land" within the meaning of section 120 of the Lands Clauses (Scotland) Act, 1845.

Held, affirming the decision of the First Division of the Court of Session ([1897] 34 S. L. R. 828), that whether the land had become superfluous or not was a question of mixed law and fact; and that on the evidence the land had not become superfluous.

8. Traffic—Regulation—Charge for use of sidings—Right of action—Arbitration—Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 25)—Provisional Order.—By a Provisional Order, made by the Board of Trade under the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, and confirmed by statute, a railway company were empowered to charge, in addition to the tonnage rate, a reasonable sum for the service, if rendered to a trader at his request or for his convenience, of allowing him "the use or occupation of any accommodation before or after conveyance, beyond such period as shall be reasonably necessary for enabling the company to deal with the merchandize as carriers thereof, or the consignor or consignee to give or take delivery thereof, and services rendered in connection with such use and occupation," and "any difference arising under this section shall be determined by an arbitrator to be appointed by the Board of Trade at the instance of either party."

The company gave notice to the defendant, a trader, that they would allow him four days, free of charge, within which to unload goods consigned to him arriving at their station, and that after the expiration of the four days they would charge him 6d. per day siding rent for each wagon allowed to remain unloaded. In an action by the company to recover from the defendant siding rent at the rate of 6d. per day in respect of wagons which, after receiving that notice, he had allowed to remain unloaded after the four days, the defendant disputed his liability to pay the amount charged,

Held, that the jurisdiction of the court was ousted, because under section 5 of the statute an arbitrator appointed by the Board of Trade is the only tribunal for the settlement of any differences arising under that section.

Judgment of the Divisional Court ([1898] 1 Q. B. 748) reversed.—LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO. v. DONELLAN, C.A.

RIVER:—

1. Navigable river—Foreshore—Right to moor vessels—Public right.—The owner of the foreshore of a navigable river holds possession of the soil subject to the right of all persons navigating the river to use the waters in all ordinary navigable ways, including the right to moor their vessels by means of fixed moorings.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. WRIGHT, C.A., 85.

2. Rights of riparian owners—Curtailment of by statute—Arching over stream—Girder—"Building, erection, or thing over the bed"—Burnley Borough Improvement Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. cliv.), ss. 134, 135—Burnley Borough Improvement Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. lxxvii.), s. 46.—By section 135 of the Burnley Borough Improvement Act, 1871, "if any building, erection, or thing has been built, erected, or placed in or on the sides of either the Brun or Calder and within 15ft. from the centre thereof," the corporation can summon the owner or builder before the justices, who shall order the same to be removed and can inflict penalties. By section 135 "nothing in this Act contained shall prevent the owners of land adjoining the said streams from arching over the same, provided always that the span of such arch shall be not less than 30ft.," and a certain space was to be left under such arch.

By section 46 of the Burnley Borough Improvement Act, 1883, "notwithstanding anything in the Act of 1871 contained, every building, erection, or thing . . . built, erected, or placed above the bed . . . shall be so built, erected, or placed as to leave a clear space between such building, erection, or thing and any building, erection, or thing in or on the opposite side of such respective river of not less than 30ft.," and if this is not complied with the owner or person erecting can be summoned by the corporation.

The appellants, who were the owners of both sides of the river, placed across the river an iron girder, which was the first of several, on one half of which girders they proposed to make a carriageway. They were summoned for unlawfully erecting this girder and not leaving a space between such girder and a building on the side of the river of not less than 30ft.

The magistrates held that section 135 of the Act of 1871 was superseded, and that this was a building, erection, or thing placed above the head of the waterway.

Held (dissentiente Lawrance, J.), that the view of the magistrates was correct, and that this was in contravention of section 46 of the Act of 1883, section 135 not being applicable, but that so far as section 46 was inconsistent with section 135 it must be taken to override or limit the earlier section.

Also that the words "above the bed" meant "over the bed."

Per Wright, J.—It was very doubtful whether this was arching at all.—BURNLEY CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY v. PICKLES, Q.B.D.

3. Thames—Pollution — "Wilful suffering" — Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxxxvii.), s. 92.—By section 92 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894, "If any person without lawful excuse . . . wilfully causes or suffers any washing or other substance produced in making or supplying gas or any other offensive matter, whether solid or fluid, to flow or pass into the Thames or into any tributary . . . ," he shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding £20, and to a daily penalty not exceeding £10.

Held, that persons were not guilty of wilfully suffering offensive matter to pass into the Thames by an omission to do something which might have mitigated the evil.

SALE of GOODS:—

1. Bill of exchange—Dishonour by buyer—Passing of property—Indorsement—Possession—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 19 (3), 25 (2)—Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 2 (2).—Goods were sold and shipped to the buyer, to whom the seller forwarded the bill of lading, together with a bill of exchange for acceptance. The buyer did not accept the bill of exchange, but sold the goods, and indorsed the bill of lading to the plaintiff. The seller stopped the goods and indemnified the shipowner. In an action against the shipowner for non-delivery of the goods,

Held, that, as by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 19, sub-section 3, the buyer, not having accepted the bill of exchange, was bound to return the bill of lading, the property in the goods did not pass to him, and he could transfer no title to the plaintiff.

Held, also, that, as the consent of the seller to the possession of the goods by the buyer was conditional on the buyer's acceptance of the bill of exchange, the buyer had not obtained possession of the goods with the consent of the seller, within the meaning of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 25, sub-section 2, and could not transfer title under that clause and the Factors Act, 1889, s. 2, sub-section 2.

Held, therefore, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover as indorsee of the bill of lading.—CAHN v. POCKETT'S BRISTOL CHANNEL STEAM PACKET CO., Q.B.D.

2. Damages—Measure of—Breach of warranty—Difference in value—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 53, sub-sections 2, 3.—The plaintiff purchased at an auction for £21 an orchid described in the catalogue as "Cattleya Acklandiæ alba, only known plant." After cultivation for two years the plant flowered, and instead of being alba turned out purple, the value of such a plant being 7s. 6d.

In an action for breach of warranty the defendant admitted the breach, and paid into court the sum of £21, which the county court judge held to be sufficient.

The uncontradicted evidence of the plaintiff showed that the alba plant would be worth anything from 50 to 150 guineas, but such a plant would be unique.

The claim was reduced to £50, to give the county court jurisdiction.

Held, that the county court judge was wrong. Per Day, J.: That the plaintiff would certainly be entitled, in addition to what he paid, to the interest on the money, and what he had expended in rearing the flower. Per Lawrance, J.: That he would be entitled to the difference between the article with defect and without defect warranted against.—ASHWORTH v. WELLS, Q.B.D.

SCOTLAND, LAW of:—

1. Boundary wall—Mutual gable—Half cost of erection.—The proprietor of two adjoining building plots erected a house upon one of them, building the whole gable half upon one plot and half upon the other plot. He afterwards conveyed the plot with the house upon it to A. The mutual gable, resting partly on the two plots, was described in the conveyance as a mutual gable. He subsequently sold the other plot, and the purchaser proceeded to erect a house upon it, making use of the mutual gable, In the letters of sale to A. the vendor said: "The unused half of the gable and boundary walls is not included in the offer." In an action by A.'s successor against the purchaser of the second plot for half the cost of the mutual gable wall, the defendant relied upon the words of the letters as showing that A. had not acquired the claim for recompense for the unused half of the gable.

Held, affirming the decision of the Second Division of the Court of Session, that A.'s successor was entitled to claim from the purchaser of the second plot one-half of the value of the mutual gable, and that there was no inconsistency between the letters of sale and the words of the conveyance. —BAIRD v. BELL, H.L.

2. Sewers—Sewerage and drainage—Repair of drain—Substituting new drain—Glasgow Police Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. cclxxiii.), ss. 332, 335—Glasgow Police (Amendment) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. ccxxi.), s. 16—Judicature (Scotland) Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 120), s. 40.—In cases arising in the Sheriff Court and appealed to the Court of Session the interlocutor of the Court of Session must contain all the findings of facts; for, if a fact is not found by the interlocutor appealed against, the House of Lords must, unless the parties agree to the fact not found, remit the cause to the Court of Session to find the fact in question.

Section 16 of the Glasgow Police (Amendment) Act, 1890, enacts that if the drains of any house, &c., are found to be defective, the owner of the premises shall be bound, immediately on an "order to that effect being given by the Police Commissioners, to carry out all necessary operations for removing defects of structure, or doing such acts as may be requisite to prevent risk to health, and, failing compliance with such order, the Police Commissioners may execute the work and recover the expense thereof as damages from the owner."

The commissioners having found that the drains of a block of houses were defective issued an order to the owners to repair the same, and, they having failed, the commissioners proceeded to execute the work themselves; but, instead of repairing the old drain, they constructed a new drain on a different site and outfall into the main sewer. In an action for the expenses, the Court of Session assoilzied the owners upon the ground that section 16 of the Act of 1890 did not warrant the formation of a new system of drainage. This House having remitted the case to the Court of Session to find whether the commissioners had considered that the new drainage was necessary, that court found that part of the drainage had been considered necessary, but the rest had not.

Held, that the part considered necessary must be paid for by the owners, but not the rest.—GLASGOW CORPORATION v. MCOMISH, H.L.

SETTLED LAND:—

1. Appointment of trustees—Compound settlement—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 2, sub-section 1; s. 50, sub-section 3—Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 4, sub-section 1.—In order that a valid receipt for the purchase-moneys of land sold by tenants for life under the Settled Land Acts may be obtained, trustees for the purposes of the Acts may be appointed of all the deeds constituting a compound settlement.—TIBBITS' SETTLED ESTATES, RE, Ch.D. North, J., 3.

2. Capital money—Money in hands of trustees—No tenant for life—Investment as capital money under Settled Land Act—Married woman—Dispensing with examination—Settled Estates Act, 1877, s. 50—Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 33.—T., by his will, devised real estate to trustees upon trust to apply the whole, or such part as they should think fit, for the benefit of his son C. E. T. or his wife or children in the usual form of a discretionary trust to protect the son's interest against bankruptcy, with remainders over. The trustees had no power of sale. They presented a petition under the Settled Estates Act, 1877, for approval of a conditional contract for sale, and payment of the purchase-money to them, with leave to invest it as capital money arising under the Settled Land Act. The testator's son was living, and consented. His wife was made a consenting party to the petition in respect of the interest which she might have under the discretionary trust. Section 50 of the Settled Estates Act, 1877, requires all married women who consent to any application to be separately examined.

Held, that section 33 of the Settted Land Act applied, and the money might be invested as capital money under that Act, though there was no tenant for life to exercise the option given by that section; and that, though the words of section 50 of the Settled Estates Act are imperative, the court can dispense with the examination of a married woman whose interest is remote and represented by trustees.

In re Halliday, 12 Eq. 199, followed.—TESSYMAN'S TRUSTS, RE, Ch.D. North, J.

3. Compound settlement—Appointment of trustees of the compound settlement for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 2 (1), 20 (1) (2) (i.) (ii.) (iii.).—A vendor selling as tenant for life under the Settled Land Acts can convey the land free from any charges created by jointure deeds executed under a power contained in the deed creating the settlement. The purchaser will get a good title, and the trustees of the deed creating the settlement can give a good discharge to him for the purchase-money without being appointed in addition trustees of the jointure deeds for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts.—KECK AND HART'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 389.

4. Compound settlement—Charges—Sale—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 2 and 20.—By a deed of resettlement, made in exercise of a general power of appointment conferred by a disentailing assurance, A. B. and his eldest son C. D. appointed an estate to the use of A. B. during his life, with remainders over; but the life estate of A. B. was not expressed to be in continuation, restoration, or confirmation of any estate in him. On summons taken out under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874,

Held, that this was a new settlement and not a compound settlement; the tenant for life, therefore, could not sell under the Settled Land Acts free from a jointure and portions charged on the estate by previous settlements.

In re Lord Ailesbury and Lord Iveagh, [1893] 2 Ch. 345, distinguished.—MUNDY AND ROPER, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.

5. Compound settlement—Trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 13), ss. 2 (1) (5) (8), 3, 20, 38, 50 (3)—Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 4.—Where land is subject to a settlement created by an instrument, and there are trustees of that instrument for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts, it is not as a general rule necessary that they should be appointed trustees of every subsequent deed which affects the interests under the original settlement so that it is no longer the only instrument under which the land stands limited to persons by way of succession.

The effect of section 50 (3) of the Settled Land Act, 1882, is to impose on the tenant for life the obligation of obtaining the consent of his assignee for value whenever he exercises any power under the Act; but an assignment does not affect in any way the powers of trustees for the purposes of the Acts.

The object of section 4 of the Settled Land Act, 1890, is merely to exclude the operation of section 50 (3) of the Settled Land Act, 1882, in the case of assignments by way of family arrangement, and the instruments creating such assignments are not instruments creating the settlement for all the purposes of the Settled Land Acts.—DU CANE AND NETTLEFOLD'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 523.

6. Estates settled in strict settlement—Incumbered estates settled on identical limitations—Discharge of incumbrances by a mortgage of both estates—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 2, sub-section 1—Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 11.—Certain lands forming estate A. were settled in strict settlement. Later, by a separate instrument, the equity of redemption in estate B. was settled on similar trusts, and, owing to subsequent events, came, subject to the mortgage, to be settled in identically the same way as estate A.

Held, that, under the powers conferred by the Settled Land Acts, the tenant for life could pay off the mortgage on estate B. by money raised on a mortgage of estates A. and B., it being to the advantage of all persons interested in the estates to do so.

In re Mundy's Settled Estates, 39 W. R. 288, [1891] 1 Ch. 399, and In re Byng's Settled Estates, 40 W. R. 457, [1892] 2 Ch. 219, discussed.—MOSSON'S (LORD) SETTLED ESTATES, RE, Ch.D. Romer, J., 330.

recouping a tenant for life a sum of money paid by him to the holders of improvement rent-charges in order to obtain a transfer of the charges, by which a reduction of interest upon the charges was effected.

The replacing of thatch with galvanized iron roofing, and, Semble, the erection of new fences partly in place of old fences and partly to divide a park, are improvements with the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 25, sub-sections 6, 20, upon which capital money may be expended.—VERNEY'S SETTLED ESTATES, RE, *Ch.D. SETTLEMENT:—

1. Construction—Appointment of stock sufficient to raise net sum—Succession duty.—The donee of a power of appointment under a settlement appointed so much of the stock, &c., as should be sufficient to raise "the net sum of £2,000" to an object of the power.

Held, that the appointee was entitled to receive the full sum of £2,000 free from succession duty.

Decision of Stirling, J. (45 W. R. 456, [1897] 1 Ch. 888), reversed.

Banks v. Braithwaite, 32 L. J. Ch. 35, doubted. —SAUNDERS, RE, SAUNDERS v. GORE, C.A., 180.

2. Covenant to settle wife's after-acquired property—Husband's covenant only—Effect of.—By a marriage settlement the husband alone covenanted to settle any after-acquired property (real or personal) which the wife, or the husband in her right, should by any means acquire during the coverture. The wife did not enter into this covenant, but she was a party to and executed the settlement. During the coverture the wife became entitled under her father's will to certain real estate.

Held, that this real estate was bound by the covenant and was subject to the settlement.—HADEN, RE, COLING v. HADEN, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

3. Tenant for life and remainderman—Repairs.—Where by a settlement of personalty, real estate was directed to be bought and to be held as personalty,

Held, that necessary repairs on such real estate were chargable to capital.—FREMAN, RE, DIMOND v. NEWBURN, Ch.D. North, J.

4. Voluntary settlement—Construction—Estoppel.—By a post-nuptial settlement in 1892 the plaintiff, who was the only child of her parents, conveyed to the trustees property to which it was expressed she was entitled under her parents' settlement. At that time her only interest was a vested interest in reversion expectant on her mother's decease, liable to be divested by the exercise of her mother's power of appointment as the surviving life tenant under the parents' settlement.

In 1897 the mother exercised her power in favour of the plaintiff absolutely.

Held, that the property the plaintiff thus took was not bound by her post-nuptial settlement.—LOVETT v. LOVETT, Ch.D. Romer, J., 105.

SHIP:—

1. Advance notes to seamen—Assignment—Condition—Non-fulfilment—Payment of note by owner's agent—Liability of owner.—An advance note was given to A., a seaman, for a half-month's wages. The note was in this form: "Five days after the ship W. leaves P. pay to the order of A. (provided he sails in the said ship and is duly earning his wages, according to his agreement)," &c. It was directed to B. & Co., the shipowners' agents at P., and there was a note upon it that it should at once be presented to B. & Co. for acceptance. A. transferred the note to C., who presented it to B. & Co., by whom it was duly accepted. Four days after The W. left P. A. was discharged. The master of The W. informed B. & Co. that A. had been discharged within five days of sailing, and directed them not to pay the note. B. & Co. paid the note.

On action by B. & Co. against the shipowners for the amount of the note, Held, that as A. was not earning his wages at the end of five days after The W. left P., the condition of the note was not fulfilled, and that neither the shipowners nor B. & Co. as acceptors were liable upon it.—BELLAMY v. LUNN, Q.B.D.

2. Bill of lading—Damage to cargo by heat—Exemption—"Any other accidents of the seas"—Closing of ventilators during bad weather.—The owners of a steamship on board of which cargo is shipped under a bill of lading containing the following exemption: "Fire at sea, accidents from machinery, boilers, steam, or any other accidents of the seas," are not, if the steamship be seaworthy and the cargo properly stowed, liable for damage to the cargo caused during the voyage by heat proceeding from the bulkheads surrounding the engine and boiler space at a time when the ventilators provided for sufficiently ventilating such space had necessarily to be closed for the safety of the steamship.—"THRUNSCOE," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 175.

3. Bill of lading—Exception—Negligence of master—Ship navigated by owner—Liability of owner for negligence in navigation.—A bill of lading contained an exception of "the neglect and default of pilot, master, or crew in the navigation of the ship." The goods carried under the bill of lading were lost in consequence of the stranding of the ship, which was brought about by the negligence of the master, who was one of the owners of the ship.

Held, that the owner who was master was as much entitled as the other owners to rely on the exception.—WESTPORT COAL CO. v. MCPHAIL, C.A., 566.

4. Bill of lading—Exemption of shipowner from liability—"Defects latent on beginning voyage or otherwise."—A bill of lading contained among other exemptions one by which the shipowner was not to be liable for loss or damage arising from "defects latent on beginning voyage or otherwise."

Held, that, although this would cover latent defects which might either exist at the commencement of the voyage or occur during the course of the voyage, it would not cover defects which were obvious at the commencement of the voyage.—WAIKATO v. NEW ZEALAND SHIPPING CO., Q.B.D.

5. Bill of lading—Implied warranty—Fitness to carry particular cargo—Specie placed in bullion-room. —Gold was shipped under a bill of lading which contained exceptions from liability for loss by robbers or thieves, or from any act, neglect, or default of the master and crew. The parties entered into the contract upon the footing that the ship was provided with a bullion-room for the safe carriage of the gold. During the voyage the bullion-room was broken open and the gold was stolen.

Held, that there was an implied warranty in the bill of lading that the bullion-room was so constructed as to be reasonably fit to resist thieves.—QUEENSLAND NATIONAL BANK v. PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL CO., C.A., 324.

6. Bottomry—Necessaries—Bond on ship, freight, and cargo paid out of proceeds of ship and freight in priority to necessaries.—The master of an Italian vessel obtained in 1896 at an English port necessaries for the ship, and in 1897, being in distress for want of funds at a British Colonial port, there executed a valid bottomry bond on ship, freight, and cargo, binding himself personally by the bond. The vessel arrived in safety at her port of destination in England, but the bond not being paid, the assignees thereof instituted an action of bottomry against the vessel, her freight, and cargo, and an action of necessaries was on the same day instituted by the suppliers of the necessaries against the vessel and her freight in respect of the necessaries supplied as above mentioned. The proceeds of the ship and freight were insufficient to pay the wages of the crew, the master's wages, the bondholder's claim, and the claims in respect of necessaries.

Held, that, after payment of the sums due for the wages of the crew and master, the bondholder had a right to exhaust the proceeds of the ship and freight in paying his claim in priority to the claims of the suppliers of the necessaries, and that the latter could not require the ship, freight, and cargo to be marshalled for their benefit.—"CHIOGGIA," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 253.

7. Charter-party—Berth for loading—Order by charterers—Tides.—By a charter-party a ship was to proceed to a certain dock, or so near thereunto as she could safely get, and there load always afloat as and where ordered by the charterers a cargo of rails. The ship proceeded to the named dock, and was ordered by the charterers to a berth. The depth of the water in the dock was such that it was impossible, as the parties knew, for the ship to leave the dock, after being loaded, till the next spring tides, which would be in about a fortnight's time.

Held, that the order given by the charterers was not unreasonable and that they were not liable for the detention of the ship. Decision of the Court of Appeal (ante, p. 68) affirmed.—CARLTON STEAMSHIP CO. v. CASTLE MAIL PACKETS CO., H.L.

8. Charter-party—Bill of lading—Condition in charter-party not incorporated in bill of lading—"Freight and all other conditions as per charter-party."—Goods were shipped under a charter-party and bill of lading. The charter-party provided that the ship was to load and deliver a cargo including a deck cargo "at merchant's risk." Under the bill of lading the goods were to be delivered in good order and condition, "freight and all other conditions as per charter-party." On the voyage the deck cargo was damaged without negligence on the part of the shipowner.

Held, by A. L. Smith and Collins, L.JJ., affirming the Divisional Court (Rigby, L.J., dissenting), that the condition in the charter-party as to the carriage of the deck cargo at merchants' risk was not incorporated in the bill of lading, and that the shipowner was liable to the indorsees of the bill of lading for the damage to the deck cargo.—DIEDERICHSEN v. FARQUHARSON, C.A., 162.

9. Charter-party—Construction—Balance of freight—Construction of charty-party—"Consignee to effect the discharge of the cargo, steamer paying one franc per ton.—Case of construction of a charter-party where the words "consignee to effect the discharge of the cargo, steamer paying one franc per ton," were construed by the court as providing that the owners of the steamer—the consignees having elected, according to an option given them by a previous clause of the charter-party, to pay freight, not on the weight of cargo delivered, but on the bill of lading quantity less 2 per cent.—were to pay in respect of the cost of discharging, one franc per ton of the same conventional quantity—that is, one franc per ton of the bill of lading quantity less 2 per cent.—"HOLLINSIDE," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 639.

10. Charter-party—Exceptions—Delay—Lock-out—Accident to railway—Other clauses beyond charterer's control—Causes ejusdem generis with antecedent exceptions.—A ship was chartered to proceed to Batoum, and there load with oil from a named factory, and at a specified rate per day. The charter-party excepted, among other things, "strikes, lock-outs, accident to railway," and also "other causes beyond charterer's control." Oil is brought to Batoum by a railway, which was injured by floods so that no oil could be sent down, and the workmen of the factory were discharged, there being no employment for them. Subsequently to the arrival of the ship in port the railway was repaired, and oil arrived in sufficient quantity to load her; but there was delay in doing so, because the workmen who had been discharged could not be got together in sufficient numbers, and such men as were there were employed in loading other vessels according to the order of their arrival, as was the practice of shippers at that port. On a claim for damages for detention of the ship,

Held, that the general clause excepting "other causes beyond charterer's control" referred to matters ejusdem generis with the antecedent exceptions, and that the delay in loading the ship after the arrival of the oil could not be attributed to accident to the railway, or to anything ejusdem generis with a lock-out, which was confined to the dismissal of workmen arising out of a trade dispute.—RICHARDSONS AND SAMUELS' ARBITRATION, RE, C.A.

11. Charter-party—Freight payable in advance.—By a charter-party it was provided that the charterer should pay freight "at the rate of £709 per calendar month . . . and at and after the same rate for any part of a month, hire to continue until her re-delivery to the owner, payment for the said hire to be made in cash monthly in advance." It was also provided that the owner should have a lien upon cargoes and sub-freight for any amount due to him under the charter, and that the charterer should have a lien on the ship for all moneys paid in advance and not earned.

Held, that the charterer was bound to pay the full freight in advance at the beginning of each month, although it might be probable that the hire would not continue for the whole month.—TONNELIER v. SMITH, C.A.

12. Collision—Crossing vessels in rivers—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1884, art. 22.—Article 22 of the maritime rules, which relates to vessels "crossing so as to involve risk of collision," must be distinguished in its application, (1) as regards vessels navigating the open sea; (2) as regards vessels passing along the winding channels of rivers. In the latter case the vessels must follow, and must be known to intend to follow, the curves of the river bank.

Held, in this case, that the defendant vessel, though she ported her helm, kept the course prescribed by the nature of the locality; and that at the moment of porting the vessels were not crossing vessels within the meaning of article 22, since the reasonable inference, having regard to the locality and their previous courses, was that they would avoid collision.

13. Collision—Damage by—Loss of use of dredger Remoteness of damage—Mersey Harbour Trustees.—Owing to a collision with a ship (the ship being in fault) a steam dredger was injured and the owners were deprived of the use of it for some weeks and the dredging works were delayed. The dredger belonged to trustees charged with the duty of maintaining a harbour and waterway, deriving their funds from rates and not entitled to distribute profits. The trustees having brought a collision suit in the Admiralty against the shipowners, Held (Lord Morris dissenting), reversing the decision on this point of the Court of Appeal, [1896] P. 192, that though the trustees were not out of pocket in any definite sum they were entitled to recover damages for the loss of the use of the dredger.—"GRETA HOLME," THE, H.L.

14. Collision—Harbour—Damage—Duty of harbour authority—Tug—Ribble Navigation Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. cxv.).—By the Ribble Navigation Act, 1883, the mayor and corporation of Preston are constituted the port and harbour authority, and as such authority levy tolls in respect of all vessels using the port, and make a charge for towage, and licence tugs to tow within the port and harbour.

A ship of the respondents arrived at the mouth of the Ribble with a cargo for Preston, and was lightened under the direction of the harbour-master and then proceeded up the river in tow of a tug belonging to the appellants, in charge of a pilot, preceded by two other vessels each in tow of a tug, and in charge of a pilot, on the flood tide. One of the tugs preceding the respondents' ship went at such a slow rate of speed that the respondents' ship could not pass a shoal in the river before the tide turned, and sustained damage.

Held, that the corporation, as harbour authority, were liable for the damage so caused.

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1897] P. 118) affirmed.—PRESTON (MAYOR) v. BIORNSTAD, "RATATA," THE, H.L.

15. Collision—Incoming and outcoming ship—Order of harbour-master.—The T., a screw steamer, was approaching a lock leading from a basin into a dock at the time when two paddle tugs were coming out. The first tug passed out safely. The master of the second thought that there was not room to pass between The T. and the lock wall and stopped. The harbour-master, whose orders he was bound to obey, ordered him to go ahead, and at the same time ordered The T. to go astern. The T. reversed her engines, but only sufficiently to keep her stationary, as the wind and tide were drifting her towards the lock. A collision took place between the port sponson of the tug and the port bow of The T.

Held, that the tug was not to blame, because (1) an incoming ship should give way to an outgoing ship; (2) the master of the tug was bound to obey the order of the harbour-master to go ahead; (3) The T. had disobeyed the order to go astern.—TAYLOR v. BURGER, Q.B.D.

16. Dock rates—Goods imported from "parts beyond the seas"—Goods transhipped at English port—Mersey Dock Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. xcii.), s. 234; Schedule C.—Goods shipped from a foreign port under a through bill of lading to Liverpool, landed in London, and sent thence to Liverpool in another ship, are imported into Liverpool "from parts beyond the seas" within the meaning of section 234 of the Mersey Dock Act, 1858.—MERSEY DOCKS BOARD v. TWIGGE, Q.B.D.

17. Pilotage—Damage—Tyne Pilotage Order Confirmation Act, 1865 (28 Vict. c. 44), Schedule, ss. 16-22—Home trade passenger ship—Employment of pilot in Tyne Pilotage District—Compulsory pilotage—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 604, sub-section 1.—The master of a ship carrying passengers between any place in the British Islands and any other place so situate is, if neither he nor the mate of his ship has a pilotage certificate, bound by compulsion of law to employ a licensed pilot whilst navigating within the Tyne Pilotage District.—"WARSAW," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 638.

18. Pilotage—London district—Vessel navigating within her own port not having passengers on board—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 191, 192, 625—Distressed seamen not passengers.—The 625th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, provides (inter alia) that the following ships, when not carrying passengers, shall, without prejudice to any general exemption under this part of the Act, be exempted from compulsory pilotage in the London district (that is to say): "(5) Ships navigating within the limits of the port to which they belong."

The term "passengers" in this section does not include "distressed seamen" for whom a passage home has been required to be provided under the sections of the above Act relating to distressed seamen; and the master of a ship belonging to the port of London, when navigating within the limits of that port, and only carrying, in addition to himself, his officers, pilot, and crew, "distressed seamen" placed on board in accordance with the last-mentioned sections, is not bound by compulsion of law to employ a pilot.—"CLYMENE," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 109.

19. Pilotage—Recovery of agreed remuneration for services not contemplated by statute under which pilots appointed—Mersey Docks Acts Consolidation Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. xcii.).—There is nothing in the Mersey Docks Acts Consolidation Act, 1858—the existing Act regulating pilotage in the River Mersey—rendering it obligatory on a shipmaster to employ a pilot to pilot a ship when she is being navigated in the port of Liverpool when not outward or inward bound; but the pilots licensed by the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board may agree with shipmasters to perform for them within the port of Liverpool extra services in the nature of pilotage services which they are not bound to perform under the provisions of the above-mentioned Act. Among such extra services for which by agreement the pilots may so become entitled to be paid are the following: Navigating a ship from an anchorage in the River Mersey to and alongside a landing-stage for the purpose of embarking passengers, mails, or cargo to be carried by her on her intended voyage outwards. Navigating a ship, after she had been brought as far up the River Mersey as the dock where it was intended she should unload her cargo, to and alongside landing-stages farther up the river for the purposes of discharging cattle.

Observations as to whether, in case of a collision occurring to a ship at a time when the pilot was performing these extra services, the shipowners would be liable for damage occasioned by his sole fault or default.—"SERVIA," THE, AND "CARINTHIA," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 492.

20. Possession—Sale of ship by majority owners—Judgment by consent—Agreed damages—Meaning of "such deductions as the interveners may be able in law to establish as proper from the respective shares and interests of the plaintiffs."—The owners of fifty-two sixty-fourth shares in a ship—the ship having been arrested in an action in rem for master's wages and disbursements—put in bail in the action and paid the amount found due by the court.

They subsequently, without the consent of the owners or mortgagees of the remaining shares in the ship, entered into a contract for the sale of the whole ship to a foreign purchaser, and delivered her to him, receiving the total purchase-money. The mortgagees of eight of the remaining twelve sixty-fourth shares in the ship and the sequestrator of the mortgagee of those shares then arrested the ship in an action of possession, and the owners of the fifty-two sixty-fourth shares having intervened in that action, agreed to settle the suit by paying to the plaintiffs eight sixty-fourth parts of the purchase-money they had received for the ship, less such deductions as the interveners might be able to establish as proper from the respective shares and interests of the plaintiffs.

Held, that a sum paid by the interveners for brokerage at 2½ per cent. was a deduction to be allowed within these words, but that the amount paid for wages and disbursements, and sums paid for cancelling an onerous charter-party entered into for the ship and for repairs to her not required by the purchasers, were not allowable deductions.—"RIPON CITY," THE, OR "SILVIA" THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 586.

21. Salvage — Life salvage — Jurisdiction — Life salvage services "rendered to foreign vessel wholly or in part within British waters"—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 544.—An English vessel fell in with a Norwegian vessel in the North Sea, more than three miles from the coasts of the United Kingdom, flying signals of distress, water-logged and unmanageable, in want of immediate assistance for herself and her crew, and rendered life salvage services to the crew of the distressed vessel by taking them off their vessel and bringing them into an English port in safety.

Held, that the English court had jurisdiction under section 544 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, to make an award of life salvage remuneration to the owners, master, and crew of the salving vessel; such services having in fact been rendered in part within British waters.—"PACIFIC," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 686.

22. Salvage—Receiver of wreck—Arrest and detention of salved property before action—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 552.—The words "due under this Act" in section 552 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, refer to all cases of salvage which may become payable by the decree of any court having jurisdiction under the Act to determine salvage disputes; and the powers given by that section to receivers of wreck are not confined to those cases where the right to claim salvage is given by the Act.—"FULHAM," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.

23. Salvage—Service rendered by salvage vessels—Assessment of remuneration.—In assessing the amount payable for salvage services rendered by salvage steamers, the court can take into account, as enhancing the amount of the award, the fact that the salvage steamers are equipped and maintained at considerable expense for the sole purpose of rendering salvage services.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (ante, p. 308) affirmed.—"GLENGYLE," THE, H.L.

24. Towage—Construction of contract—Complete performance prevented by a misfortune beyond the control of either party—Subsequent salvage.—The plaintiffs, tug-owners, contracted to tow the defendant's vessel from Kingroad in the River Severn to Sharpness Dock for a fixed sum, but when near their destination, owing to a fog, and without anybody being in fault, the vessel stranded on a rock and could not be got off.

Held, by Jeune, P., that the contract was indivisible, and, not having been fulfilled, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover on a quantum meruit for any portion of the towage.

Appleby v. Myers, (1867) L. R. 2 C. P. 651, followed.

After the stranding and failure of the attempt to get the vessel off, the tugs were ordered by the master of the vessel to keep her where she was so as to prevent her drifting up the river and sinking in deep water or doing damage. These orders the tugs obeyed; and in the result the vessel was sold where she lay, but the greater part of the cargo of timber being taken off in lighters, the freight was earned by the shipowner.

Held, that this was a salvage service, and on a total value of £2,724 the owners, masters, and crews of the three tugs engaged were awarded £370.—"MADRAS," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.

SOLICITOR:—

1. Costs—Charging order—"Property recovered or preserved" — Bankruptcy — Criminal proceedings under the Debtors Act, 1869—Order to trustee to prosecute bankrupt—Money found on bankrupt at time of arrest—Solicitors Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 127), s. 28.—The words "property recovered or preserved" in section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860, means property recovered or preserved in a suit, matter, or proceeding in a court of justice.

The appellants acted as solicitors for a trustee in bankruptcy who, in the course of the bankruptcy proceedings, was directed by the court to prosecute the bankrupt for an offence under the Debtors Act, 1869. The bankrupt, who had left the country, taking with him a sum of money, was arrested abroad, and the money found upon him at the time of arrest was taken possession of by the police, and remitted to the appellants by virtue of a power of attorney prepared by them on behalf of the trustee in bankruptcy. The appellants claimed a charging order upon this sum under section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860, for their costs and expenses of and incidental to the recovery thereof, including the costs and expenses of procuring the arrest of the bankrupt and of the proceedings consequent thereon, as money recovered by them in the proceedings.

Held, that the appellants were not entitled to a charging order, as the money was not recovered in the proceedings in bankruptcy, but by virtue of the power of attorney.—HUMPHREYS, RE, LLOYD-GEORGE, EX PARTE, C.A., 322.

2. Costs—Country solicitor—Attendance at hearing in London—Originating summons—R. S. C., 1883, App. N., Nos. 173, 174.—The taxing officer has a discretion, in rare and exceptional cases, to allow the costs of the attendance of a country solicitor at the hearing of a cause tried in London even where all the evidence is taken by affidavit.

Per Byrne, J.—The principles upon which taxation should proceed in a district registry are the same as those acted upon in cases commenced in London.—DIXON, RE, TOUSEY v. SHEFFIELD, C.A., 677.

3. Costs—Security taken — Waiver of lien. — A solicitor who takes from his client a declaration charging the client's reversionary interest with payment of the solicitor's costs of negotiating a loan, is not entitled to a lien upon the client's documents in his possession for that purpose, in the absence of explanation to the client that he intended to assert his lien, notwithstanding the security given by the client.

4. Costs—Solicitors Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 68), s. 12.—In taxing a solicitor's bill of costs, items in respect of business done while the solicitor had no certificate should be disallowed.

In re Jones, 18 W. R. 159, L. R. 9 Eq. 63, is now obsolete, as the wording of 37 & 38 Vict. c. 68, s. 12, differs from that of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 26.—SWEETING, RE, Ch.D. North, J., 242.

5. Executor-trustee — Will — Power to solicitor to make professional charges — Insolvent estate — Creditors' action. — A professional trustee or executor is not entitled to charge profit-costs under a power in a will, if the testator's estate is insolvent.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 247, [1898] 1 Ch. 297), affirmed.—WHITE, RE, PENNELL v. FRANKLIN, C.A., 679.

6. Lien—Administration action—Lien acquired before action—Order for production of documents for purposes of action.—The existence of a solicitor's lien does not give the solicitor any greater right to refuse production of the documents subject thereto than his client would have. Where, therefore, in an action to which the client is a party, production of documents subject to a lien is necessary for the purpose of doing justice to parties other than the client, production will be ordered.

A solicitor had acquired a lien on papers of a client who afterwards died; the solicitor was employed by the client's executors to bring an action for administration of the client's estate; the conduct of the action was subsequently given to a creditor, but the executors still remained parties and still retained the solicitor.

Held, upon an interlocutory application made by the creditor, that the solicitor was bound to produce papers covered by the lien, their production being material for the conduct of the administration proceedings.—HAWKES, RE, ACKERMAN v. LOCKHART, C.A., 445.

6A. Misconduct—Striking off rolls—Non-pecuniary offence—Attempt at murder and suicide.—Where a solicitor lent sums of money belonging to his clients to a third person for speculative purposes, and in consequence of the loss of the money became so depressed that he attempted to murder his wife and to commit suicide, for which offences he was sentenced to penal servitude, Held, that he should be struck off the rolls.—COOPER, RE, Q.B.D.

7. Striking off rolls—Colonial court—Production of order of Colonial court—Sufficiency for striking off in this country.—The court will not strike a solicitor off the roll of solicitors in England merely upon the production before it, without more, of the order of a Colonial court striking off the same solicitor from the rolls in the colony, for professional misconduct in his practice as a solicitor in the colony.—INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY, EX PARTE, Q.B.D., 303.

8. Trustee—Mortgage—Breach of trust—Fiduciary relationship—Guarantee.— A sum of £6,000 was advanced jointly on the security of a mortgage by the trustees of a will and a firm of solicitors. The investment was a breach of trust on the part of the trustees, and the solicitors, who were their legal advisers, failed to advise them that this was the case. The mortgage was taken in the names of one of the firm of solicitors and one of the trustees, and a memorandum was executed by the mortgagees to the effect that £3,000 belonged to the trustees and £3,000, the residue of the £6,000, to the solicitors. The solicitors also gave the trustees a guarantee of the sufficiency of the security. The solicitors subsequently went bankrupt, and an action was brought by the trustees claiming to be paid their £3,000 out of the mortgage security in priority to the solicitors or to any persons claiming under them.

Held, that the trustees were not entitled to any priority upon the construction of either the memorandum or the guarantee; that the investment by the trustees was a breach of trust on the part of the trustees; and that the solicitors, by failing to advise their clients that this was so, were guilty of a breach of trust towards them. Though the law imposes considerable disabilities on solicitors in dealing with their clients, yet, in the present instance, the solicitors were not seeking any benefit which was not in contemplation at the time of the transaction, and their only breach of duty was that they permitted their clients to invest trust money on insufficient security. Under these circumstances, though the solicitors might be answerable in damages, the clients were not entitled to any priority of payment out of the solicitors' security.—STOKES v. PRANCE, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 183.

TOLLS:—

Prescriptive right—Extinguishment of old franchise by statute—Merger—Lost grant.—A municipal corporation had in the year 1734 a prescriptive right to take certain customary tolls for the passage of carriages, cattle, &c., over a bridge belonging to them. From one only of these tolls—namely, a toll in respect of hackney carriages, freemen of the borough were exempt. In 1734 the corporation obtained a local Act, which, after reciting the existence of their right to take the customary tolls and enumerating those tolls, provided that the said customary tolls should be and remain vested in them. The Act further provided that it should be lawful for the collectors appointed by the corporation to demand the respective tolls before mentioned from all persons other than freemen of the borough. In the year 1819 the corporation obtained another local Act, by which the former Act was repealed, and they were empowered to take down the old and build a new bridge, and to take tolls for passage over it which exceeded in amount the old tolls and included additional subject-matters. There was no exemption in this Act in favour of freemen. This last-mentioned Act was a temporary Act, and its provisions had been allowed to expire.

Held, that the prescriptive right of the corporation to take tolls had been extinguished, and a statutory right substituted for it, by the local Act of 1734, or, if not by that Act, then by the local Act of 1819.

By Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.—The Act of 1734 having given a statutory title to the tolls which had been previously taken by virtue of a prescriptive right, the title by prescription was merged in and extinguished by the statutory right.—TAYLOR v. NEW WINDSOR CORPORATION, C.A.

TRADE-MARK:—

1. False trade description — Oral statement — Description in invoice written at purchaser's request—Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), s. 2 (2).—Respondent asked a salesman in appellant's shop for a small English ham; the salesman pointed to some American hams on a shelf, and said, "These are Scotch hams"; the respondent chose one; an invoice which did not contain the word "Scotch" was handed to the respondent by another assistant, but the respondent asked that the word "Scotch" should be inserted as he had bought the ham as such, and the assistant accordingly inserted the word in the invoice.

Held, that the description in the invoice was a false trade description within section 2, sub-section 2, of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887.

Held, also, that where the description was entirely oral that section was not applicable.—COPPEN v. MOORE, Q.B.D.

2. Merchandise marks—False trade description—Application to goods—Goods supplied equal in quality to goods described—Absence of fraudulent intent—Offence—Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), ss. 2, 3.—By section 3 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, a false trade description is defined as "a trade description which is false in a material respect as regards the goods to which it is applied."

Held, that a trade description which is false in point of fact as a description of the goods is "false in a material respect as regards the goods to which it is applied," and is therefore a false trade description within the meaning of the section, although the goods supplied are of as good a quality as the goods described, and although there is no intention to deceive or defraud the buyer; and, consequently, that a person who sells cigarettes to which a label is attached describing them as hand-made when in fact they are machine-made, is guilty of an offence under the Act, although he shows that the cigarettes actually sold were of as good a quality in all respects as if they had been made by hand, and that he had no intention to deceive the buyer.—KIRSHENBOIM v. SALMON & GLUCKSTEIN, Q.B.D., 573.

3. Registration—Bonâ fide intention of user, necessity for—Non-user—Rectification.—If persons register new trade-marks which they say they intend to use, they must at the date of registration have a bonâ fide intention of using these trade-marks in respect of the goods for which they register them.

On motion to expunge two marks from the register, the court, finding as facts that there had been no real user before registration, and no real user since registration in respect of the articles in the class in which the applicants sought registration of an identical mark, and that at the date of the registration there was no bonâ fide intention to use these marks for any of the goods in that class.

Held, that the registration of the marks was wrong, and must be expunged.—BATT'S TRADE-MARK, Ch.D. Romer, J., 459.

4. Registration—Invented word—Similar sound to word which cannot be registered—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 50), s. 10 (1) (d) (e).—Where a particular word cannot be registered as a trade-mark, another word sounding exactly like it, but spelt differently, cannot be registered.—RIPLEY'S TRADE-MARK, RE, C.A.

TRADE NAME:—

1. Change of name—Injunction restraining use of name altogether in connection with a particular trade.—A person taking the name of another in order to pass off and sell goods under the name of that other will be absolutely restrained by injunction from using that name in carrying on a business similar to that other's business.—PINET ET CIE. v. MAISON LOUIS PINET, Ch.D. North, J., 506.

2. Common law right—Name indicating manufacturer—Injunction—Fraud.—The respondent had for years manufactured and sold under the name "Yorkshire Relish" a sauce made according to a secret recipe, and the term "Yorkshire" had come to mean that particular manufacture. The appellants began to make a sauce nearly resembling the respondent's sauce, which they sold as Yorkshire Relish so as to induce purchasers to believe that it was the respondent's "Yorkshire Relish," although the purchasers did not in fact know the name of the respondent in connection with the sauce.

Held, that the respondent was entitled to an injunction restraining the appellants from using the words "Yorkshire Relish" in connection with their sauce without clearly distinguishing it from the respondent's sauce.

The decision of the Court of Appeal ([1896] 2 Ch. 54) affirmed.—BIRMINGHAM BREWERY CO. v. POWELL, H.L.

3. Common law right—Similar name—True name—Tendency to deceive—Form of injunction.—L. M. Pinet (trading as Maison Pinet), who carried on a small and recently established business in boots and shoes made for a special purpose, sold that business to the defendant company. One of the objects of the company was, by its memorandum of association, stated to be "to carry on business in England and elsewhere as bootmakers and shoemakers." The plaintiffs had for over forty years carried on business in the manufacture and sale of boots and shoes, their goods being commonly known as "Pinet's."

They accordingly applied for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the defendant company from carrying on business as manufacturers or vendors of boots or shoes under the name of "Maison Pinet, Limited," or under any other name or description of which the name "Pinet" formed part, and which was so arranged or contrived as by colourable imitation of the plaintiffs' trading style or otherwise, to be calculated to represent or lead to the belief that the defendant company were carrying on plaintiffs' business, and from in any other manner representing or acting so as to lead to such belief as aforesaid.

Held, that, although the business of L. M. Pinet was not the same as the plaintiffs' yet the company formed to acquire it had no intention of restricting their operations in any way, and would probably develop that business as far as possible, and develop it at the expense of the plaintiffs; that, therefore, a case had been made out justifying the interference of the court at the present stage of the proceedings; but that the interlocutory injunction claimed went beyond what the plaintiffs required for their protection; and that it must be limited as in the form in Montgomery v. Thompson, [1891] A. C. 217.—PINET ET CIE. v. MAISON PINET (No. 2), C.A.

4. "Flaked Oatmeal"—Term of ordinary description—Identification of name with goods by user—Injunction.—Where the plaintiffs without relying on their registered trade-mark, which consisted in part of the term "Flaked Oatmeal," claimed that they had by user so intimately identified the term with their goods that the use of it by the defendants in their trade-mark had the effect of passing off their goods as the plaintiffs' goods,

Held, that the term being one of ordinary and not exclusive description, and being applicable to the defendants' goods as well as the plaintiffs', and the defendants' user thereof not having been proved to have had or to be calculated to have the above effect, the suit must be dismissed with damages resulting from the grant of an interim injunction.

5. Former concurrent user by two firms—Discontinuance of user by one for several years.—Where there has been a concurrent user of a trade name by A. and B., but the user thereof by B. has practically ceased for some years, and A. has in the meantime acquired a large sale for his goods and a reputation in the market under the trade name, so that the name has become associated solely with the goods of A., B. may not afterwards revive the use of the name in his business in such a way as to pass off his goods of those of A.—DANIEL & ARTER v. WHITEHOUSE, Ch.D. Barnes, J.

TRADE UNION:—

Strike—"Watching and besetting"—Conspiracy and Protection to Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), s. 71—Registered society—Conspiracy—Trade union funds.—Watching or besetting the works or place of business of an employer, for the purpose of persuading or otherwise preventing persons from working for him, or for any purpose except merely to obtain or communicate information, is illegal within the meaning of section 7 of the Conspiracy and Protection to Property Act, 1875, and will be restrained by injunction.

A trade union, although registered under the Trade Union Act, 1871, cannot be made a party to an action for an injunction against "watching and besetting."

The trustees of a registered trade union, made defendants in their capacity as trustees to an action against themselves and others for "watching and besetting" the premises of the plaintiff, will not be restrained from allowing the funds of the union to be employed for the furtherance of the wrongful acts against which an injunction is obtained.—LYONS v. WILKINS, *Ch.D. Held, that, as attention had not been directed to the circumstances which would afford relief under the Act, the trustee was not too late in making his application, and ought to be afforded an opportunity of producing any fresh evidence he might desire to put in.

A trustee seeking relief under the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, must show that he has acted, not only honestly, but also in a reasonable manner, and the burden of proof lies on the trustee.

A trustee who makes an unauthorized investment is not entitled to a return of the investment on making good the loss of the trust estate as against a cestui que trust incompetent to assent to such investment.—HEAD v. GOULD, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 597.

5. Breach of trust—Mortgage of trust estate along with trustee's own property.—The Court of Appeal in 1896 (45 W. R. 272) declared B. to have purchased certain Ceylon estates as a trustee for R..

subject to B.'s lien for the purchase-money and other advances for the purposes of the estates, and an account was directed of all sums of money received by B. in respect of any sale, mortgage, or other disposition of the estates or any of them. In July, 1876, B., who had previously obtained from C. & Co. two advances of £20,000 and £25,000 on the security of his own estates in Cumberland, had obtained from them £20,000 more, and signed this memorandum: "Messrs. C. & Co.,—You have now advanced to me £20,000, £25,000, and £20,000 on security of my Cumberland estates. If required by you at any time, I undertake by way of further security to execute to you a valid charge on my Ceylon estates." In July, 1879, by a memorandum indorsed on this memorandum, B. stated to C. & Co. that he had directed his agent to execute to them, in pursuance of the former memorandum, a formal charge on the D. and D. estates (two of the estates to which R. afterwards established his title) for £35,000, the balance then due from him to C. & Co. A mortgage in Ceylon was executed accordingly. C. & Co. never resorted to the D. and D. estates. The official referee in taking the accounts charged B. with £20,000 as money received by him in respect of a mortgage on part of the trust estate. Kekewich, J., struck out this sum altogether.

Held, on appeal, that as B. had received £20,000 on a charge on the Cumberland estates, and a promise to give a charge on the D. and D. estates, which promise was afterwards followed by an actual charge, he must be treated as having raised that sum rateably out of the Cumberland estates and the D. and D. estates according to their respective values after deducting the prior incumbrances upon them, and must be debited with the share attributable to the D. and D. estates.—ROCHEFOUCAULD v. BOUSTEAD, C.A.

6. Breach of trust—Sale of leaseholds—No power of sale—Court's power to excuse—Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 3.—Where leaseholds were held upon trust for certain persons for life, and after the death of the survivor of them upon trust for their children, and the trustees of the settlement, which did not contain a power of sale, acting bonâ fide, and, as they believed, in the best interests of the trust estate, sold the leaseholds, they were held to be entitled, under section 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, to be relieved from personal liability on the ground that they had acted "honestly and reasonably, and ought fairly to be excused for the breach of trust."

Section 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, discussed.—PERRINS v. BELLAMY, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 682.

7. Cestuis que trustent—Unnecessary or improper parties—Costs—Settlement—Void limitations—Action to set aside—Parties.—Where a settlement has been set aside by the court, and there is no property left out of which the trustees can claim their costs as a matter of right, nevertheless, if they have acted properly, the court has power to allow them their costs, and the strict rule based on the assumption that the fund is gone does not apply.

Accordingly, where the trustee in bankruptcy of a settlor has succeeded, in an action against the trustees of a settlement of the settlor's own property, in setting aside limitations providing for the determination of the settlor's life interest upon bankruptcy, the court, being of opinion that the trustees had acted properly, directed them to retain their costs out of the accrued income in their hands before handing it over to the plaintiff under the judgment.

The beneficiaries, however, under the discretionary trust arising on such determination of the settlor's life interest, who were added as defendants upon the application of the plaintiff at the suggestion of the trustees, and who appeared at the trial separately from their co-defendants, were not allowed their costs out of the fund recovered by the plaintiff, on the ground that they were unnecessary, though not improper, parties.—MERRY v. POWNALL, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 487.

8. Constructive trust—Trustee beneficiary for life—Improvements—Purchase of adjoining land under right of pre-emption—Addition to settled estate—Expenditure by tenant for life—Permanent improvements—Remaindermen—Recouping expenditure.—Where a constructive trustee of property in which he was also beneficially interested as life tenant has expended money thereon in permanent improvements, he is primâ facie entitled to be recouped his expenditure to the extent of the improved value; and the fact that he is beneficially entitled as tenant for life under the constructive trust does not displace his right to recoupment.—ROWLEY v. GINNEVER, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.

9. Executor—Appropriation of trust estate—Infant beneficiaries—No express power to appropriate.—Executors and trustees can, even where there is no express power enabling them to do so, make an effectual appropriation of a testator's estate, if such appropriation be made bonâ fide, though it is safer for them to make the appropriation only with the sanction of the court.—NICKELS, RE, NICKELS v. NICKELS, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 422.

10. Executor—Devise of real estate upon trust to trustees, their heirs and assigns—Power of sale to the "trustees for the time being" under a will—Executors of surviving trustee—Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 30.—A testator devised his real estate to certain trustees, their heirs and assigns, upon certain trusts, and the will contained a power of sale of real estate exercisable "by the trustees for the time being" under the will.

Held, that the power of sale was exercisable by the executors of the last surviving trustee.—PIXTON AND TONG'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 187

11. Factor—Curator bonis—Liability—Real or heritable security—Debenture—Municipal corporation rates—Harbour rates—Trusts (Scotland) Amendment Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 63), s. 3, sub-sections 10, 12—Judicial Factors Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 51), ss. 4, 13.—The accountant of court, Scotland, who, as to this matter, fills a similar position to that of a Master in Chancery under the Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, has no power to approve of an improper investment.

By section 3, sub-section 10, of the Trusts (Scotland) Amendment Act, 1884, trustees, including judicial factors and curators bonis, are authorised to lend trust money in loans on real or heritable security; and by sub-section 12, in loans on debentures secured on rates or taxes levied under statutory power by municipal corporations.

A curator bonis invested his ward's money on a bond of the Greenock Harbour Trustees, a corporation consisting of the magistrates, the council, and elected trustees. As security the trustees assigned to the curator bonis the "rates and duties and other revenues of the harbour," but no right of obtaining possession of the works on default of payment was given. The accounts of the curator bonis were audited by the accountant of court and passed without comment. The harbour trustees made default in payment of interest.

Held, (1) that the investment was not a real or heritable security; (2) that it was not a debenture created by a municipal corporation; (3) that, looking to the previous statement of accounts of the harbour trust, it was not a security a prudent trustee ought to have invested his ward's money in; and (4) that the annual audit of the accountant of the court did not exonerate the curator bonis from liability.—HUTTON v. ANNAN, H.L.

12. Judicial trustee—Sole executor—Reversioner—Judicial Trustee Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 1, sub-sections 2 and 4—Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, rr. 2, 4, and 5.—By the express terms of the Judicial Trustee Act, 1896, it is entirely in the discretion of the court whether a judicial trustee shall be appointed or not; in the absence of misconduct on the part of a sole executrix the court refused to appoint a judicial trustee on the application of the residuary legatee against the wish of the tenant for life and sole executrix, but remitted the summons to chambers to appoint an ordinary trustee under the Trustee Act, 1893, to act with the executrix, such trustee to be nominated by her.—RATCLIFF, RE, *Ch.D. VENDOR and PURCHASER:—

1. Building scheme—Restrictive condition—Implied negative covenant—Injunction.—The vendor sold by auction land in lots, and the contract described the lands as adapted for the erection of shops and business premises, and stipulated that the purchasers of certain specified lots should covenant with the vendors to erect on those lots shops and dwelling-houses of a given minimum value each. These specified lots, however, were not sold and the vendors afterwards began to erect a fire-house station on these unsold lots. A purchaser of one of the lots that were sold brought an action for an injunction against the vendors to restrain the erection of the fire-house station,

Held, that no negative stipulation ought to be implied that nothing but shops and dwelling-houses should be erected on the lots in question, and that consequently the application for an injunction failed.—HOLFORD v. ACTON LOCAL BOARD, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

2. Completion—Agreement to accept "best title the vendors can give"—Deeds deposited with mortgagees—Vendor's duty to hand over—Expense of obtaining—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 3, sub-section 6.—The Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 3, sub-section 6, concerns the expenses of "production and inspection" of documents, but does not affect the ordinary right of a purchaser on completion to have the title-deeds handed over to him.

A special contract that the purchaser is to accept the best title that the vendor can give does not take away this right, and the mere fact that obtaining the deeds for the purpose of handing them over on completion may cause the vendor trouble and expense is no answer to a requisition founded on this right.

Held, accordingly, that the vendors of a house under such a special contract were not in a position under such contract or otherwise to refuse compliance with a requisition that certain title-deeds in the possession of solicitors who had acted for the mortgagees of a former owner should be handed over to the purchaser on completion.—DUTHY AND JESSON'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. Romer, J., 300.

3. Conditions of sale—Notice to rescind—Misrepresentation—Leasehold described as freehold—Effect of commencing litigation.—Property was sold by auction under particulars of sale describing it as "freehold," but with an appended note and condition, in ambiguous terms, purporting to qualify the previous description by explaining that the title was "held on an underlease" which for certain reasons was probably void, and that "the purchaser would therefore probably acquire an absolute freehold title." Another condition provided that "if any objection or requisition not precluded by these conditions should be made and insisted on which the vendor shall be unable or (on the score of expense or otherwise) unwilling to remove or comply with, the vendor shall be at liberty, notwithstanding any intermediate negotiation in respect thereof or attempt to remove or comply with the same, by notice in writing to the purchaser . . . to rescind the sale, in which case the purchaser shall receive back his deposit without interest or costs." The abstract, delivered on the 5th of November, 1896, disclosed what, on the face of it, the purchaser contended was merely a title by way of underlease for the residue of a term of about thirty-seven years. Requisitions were put on the 11th of November to the effect that no freehold title had been shown, and that the purchaser had been misled by the misrepresentation in the particulars. After some negotiation and threats of litigation, the purchaser on the 30th of November issued a writ claiming rescission and the expenses of investigating the title. The vendor on the 3rd of December served on the purchaser a notice to rescind.

It appeared from the evidence that the alleged misrepresentation was established.

Held, that the vendor's notice to rescind was in time, and that the purchaser was only entitled to a return of the deposit without interest, and to costs of the action up to the date of the receipt by him of the vendor's notice to rescind; and that he must pay the vendor's costs of the action after that date.—ISAACS v. TOWELL, Ch.D. Byrne, J.

4. Conditions of sale—Right to rescind—Validity of vendor's notice to rescind—Matters of title—Matters of conveyance—Waiver of right to rescind.—A vendor who is unable to make a good title to the land sold because he cannot get in a small interest outstanding in a third person cannot be treated as having no title to the property. The rule in Bowman v. Hyland, 26 W. R. 877, 8 Ch. D. 588, does not, therefore, apply to such a case, and the vendor may exercise a power given to him by the conditions of sale to rescind the contract if the purchaser insists upon an objection or requisition which the vendor is unable or unwilling to comply with.

Matters of conveyance, as well as matters of title, are, for the purposes of such a condition, included in the words "any matter or thing relating or incidental to the sale."

A mere threat to take proceedings to enforce the contract, though made after the purchaser's requisitions have been sent in, does not necessarily amount to a waiver of the vendor's right to rescind.

5. Contract—Person contracted with—Agent—Mis- representation—Specific performance.—In 1895 the defendants, who were trustees of a Congregational chapel, put up for sale by public auction a building, which had formerly been used as their chapel. The conditions of sale imposed no restrictions on the user of the building. After the sale C. made an offer for the building, but the defendants declined to accept it, on the ground that it was made on behalf of a committee of Roman Catholics, who intended to use the building as a Roman Catholic place of worship, and the defendants objected to sell for that purpose. The committee then told the plaintiff, who was the manager of a mineral water company, that if he could get the property they would buy it of him at £100 profit. The plaintiff's solicitors wrote to the defendants' agent, making an offer for the property "on behalf of our client, the manager of the E. Mineral Water Co." After some negotiations, a contract was signed by the defendants for sale of the building to the plaintiff at £1,025, a price less than C.'s offer. No direct statement was made that the plaintiff was buying for the company, but it was admitted that the defendants, during the negotiations, believed that he was, and that the plaintiff knew it. The plaintiff signed the contract as principal without protest from the defendants' agent. The defendants refused to complete on the ground that the plaintiff was buying, as agent, for the Roman Catholic committee, to whom he knew they would not sell, and had obtained the contract by misrepresentation.

Held, on the evidence, that the plaintiff was not buying as agent for the Roman Catholic committee, but for himself with a view to resell to them at a profit; that the misrepresentation as to the mineral water company was immaterial because the vendors did not care whether they sold to the company or the plaintiff, and as between them no consideration of the person with whom they were contracting entered as an element into the contract.

Smith v. Wheatcroft (9 Ch. Div. 223, 230) followed. —NASH v. DIX, Ch.D. North, J.

6. Contract—Specific performance—Identity of parcels—Uncertainty—Statute of Frauds—Admissibility of extrinsic evidence.—By agreement in writing P. agreed to sell and B. to purchase "twenty-four acres of land freehold, and all appurtenances thereto, at T., in the parish of D., in the county of S." In an action for specific performance of the contract the plaintiff proposed to call evidence to show that the land intended to be sold was the land of that acreage belonging to the plaintiff at the place named.

Held (reversing Byrne, J., 45 W. R. 498), that, on the authority of Ogilvie v. Foljambe, 3 Mer. 53, and Shardlow v. Cotterell, 30 W. R. 143, 20 Ch. D. 90, parol evidence was admissible to show what land formed the subject-matter of the contract.—PLANT v. BOURNE, C.A., 59.

7. Interest on purchase-money—Conditions of sale—"Default" of vendor—Delay caused by trifling technical defect in title.—Where the conditions of sale provided that interest on the purchase-money should not be payable during delay caused by the vendor's "default," and delay resulted from a requisition made by the purchaser in respect of a very slight technical defect in the title, not known to the vendor, discoverable only by extraordinary care, and involving no real risk to a purchaser.

Held, that the existence of such a defect did not establish "default" on the vendor's part, and that interest was, notwithstanding, payable during the delay.

Decision of Romer, J. (ante, p. 373), affirmed.—WOODS AND LEWIS'S CONTRACT, RE, C.A., 643.

8. Mortgage—Sale by mortgagee under statutory power—Requisition by purchaser as to whether power exercisable—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 21), ss. 19, 20, 21 (2).—The protection conferred on a purchaser from a mortgagee selling under his statutory power of sale by section 21 (2) of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, is given only to a purchaser who has obtained a conveyance, and accrues only after a conveyance has been made. Consequently a purchaser is not precluded from requiring such a mortgagee-vendor to show that his power of sale is exercisable, and the vendor is bound to answer such a requisition.

Dicker v. Angerstein, 24 W. R. 844, 3 Ch. D. 600, distinguished.—LIFE INTERESTS CORPORATION v. HAND-IN-HAND LIFE INSURANCE SOCIETY, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 668.

9. Restrictive covenant—Conveyance of freehold—Restriction against user otherwise than as a private residence—Boarding-house.—The use of a house as a boarding-house where pupils attending a school in the neighbourhood may be taken in as paying boarders is—though such user is in no way advertised—a breach of a covenant not to use the premises otherwise than as a private residence.—HOBSON v. TULLOCH, Ch.D. Romer, J., 331.

10. Sale by purchaser under original contract subject "to the same terms as to title, &c.," as in such original contract—Time fixed for completion—Interest.—In May, 1897, B. contracted to sell to K. certain lands, the purchase to be completed on the 11th of October, and, failing completion on that date, interest to be paid by the purchaser at £5 per cent. on the balance of purchase-money then due.

In June, 1897, K. contracted to sell the same premises to S., subject "to the same terms as to title, &c.," as in the original contract. S. eventually refused to complete until January.

On a summons by K. asking for a declaration that the 11th of October was, by reference to the original contract, the time fixed for completion, and that the defendant might be ordered to pay interest from that date,

Held, that a clause of this kind which might possibly involve serious liability on the purchaser could not be read into the agreement of June, 1897, and that the contract was therefore an open one. But that, as interest was payable from the time when the purchaser could prudently have taken possession and the abstract was delivered on the 22nd of October, interest should run from the 1st of November, 1897.—KEEBLE FLETTON BRICK CO., RE, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

11. Soil of highway—Conveyance of adjacent land—Presumption of highway passing ad medium filium viae—Street in town—Rent-charge issuing out of—Liability—Charitable Trusts Recovery Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 17), s. 3.—The rule of construction—that where there is a conveyance of land (even although it is described by reference to a plan, and by colour, and by quantity), if it is said to be bounded by a public thoroughfare, half of the road passes in the absence of expressions or circumstances indicating a contrary intention—applies to conveyances of land adjacent to streets in towns.

Where the conveyance is of land belonging to the corporation of the town, the rights of the public over the highway are not a reason for presuming a contrary intention on the part of the corporation.

The rule applies, where the conveying party owns the soil beyond the medium filium viae (and, semble, where his ownership does not extend thereto), to pass whatever interest he has in the soil of the highway.

Dictum of Cockburn, C.J., in Leigh v. Jack, 28 W. R. 452, 5 Ex. D. 264, at p. 270, disapproved of. —WHITE'S CHARITIES, RE, CHARITY COMMISSIONERS v. LONDON CORPORATION, Ch.D. Romer, J., 479.

12. Specific performance—Contract—Agent—False representation as to principal.—If, in negotiations for a contract, an agent make a false representation as to the name of his principal, knowing that if he disclosed the true name the other party would not enter into the contract, the court will not order specific performance of the contract.

A. signed a contract for the sale of a house to B. Before signing, he asked, "Are you buying for C. or his nominees?" B. answered "No." He was, in fact, buying for nominees of C., to whom he afterwards assigned his contract. He and they brought an action for specific performance.

Held, that the contract could not be specifically performed.—ARCHER v. STONE, Ch.D. North, J.

13. Specific performance — Delay — Lien for deposit.—In 1886 a vendor contracted in writing to sell free from incumbrances a contingent reversionary interest in personalty to a purchaser who paid a deposit on the purchase-money. The reversion proved to be incumbered, and the purchaser insisted on a conveyance free from incumbrances but was told that the incumbrances would be paid off, which was never done. The vendor afterwards created further charges on the reversionary interest to persons who had notice of the contract, and was adjudicated a bankrupt in 1888. In the same year the bankruptcy was annulled, upon the acceptance of a composition by his creditors, and under the scheme of arrangement the whole of his property was sold by his trustee. In 1891 the purchaser became bankrupt, having previously assigned his interest under the contract to P., who subsequently assigned the same to B. No attempt having been made to enforce the contract, the reversion fell into possession in 1895, and B. shortly afterwards claimed specific performance, or in the alternative a lien for the deposit paid by the purchaser, Held, (1) that the delay was a bar to any claim for specific performance; (2) that the purchaser was a secured creditor of the vendor in respect of the deposit, and that the purchaser must under the circumstances be treated as having elected to rely on his security; and as no Statute of Limitations applied B. was entitled to enforce his lien.—LEVY v. STOGDON, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

14. Specific performance—Mistake—Condition precedent to complete contract—Repudiation by vendor—Wilful default — Interest — Form of order. — By certain heads of agreement it was agreed that thirty-six acres of land—to be measured, as the boundary on one side was unmarked—should be sold for £3,600, the purchase-money to bear interest at 4 per cent. from a fixed day until completion. A proviso was also inserted—"subject to approval of conditions and form of agreement by purchaser's solicitor." The vendors, by a mistake on their part, required the purchaser to take forty-two acres at £100 per acre. The purchaser refused, and brought an action to enforce specific performance of the contract for the sale of thirty-six acres, which contract the vendors repudiated.

Held, that the mistake did not go to the root of the contract; that the proviso was not a condition precedent to a complete contract; and that the purchaser was therefore entitled to the specific performance he asked.

Held, also, that the repudiation of the contract by the vendors did not amount to "wilful default" on their part so as to deprive them of interest on the purchase-money. — NORTH v. PERCIVAL, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 552.

15. Title—Notice to rescind—Validity of—Rescission.—A contract was entered into at an auction on the 7th of December, 1896, subject to particulars and conditions of sale.

The property passed under the will of M. A. R. in 1856 to J. J. W. and another, as tenants in common, in equal moieties, and the difficulty arose as to the moiety which passed to J. J. W. He by his will gave his property to trustees upon trust for sale and payment of debts, &c., and then to lay aside £12,000, which was to be invested for the benefit of his daughters and their children, and subject thereto to hold the residue for his son.

J. J. W. died in 1876, and in 1880 two deeds were executed by which part of the property was mortgaged to the amount of £12,000 to two persons who were not trustees of the will. Later one of these persons was appointed a trustee of the will. These two persons purported to sell the property. Objection was taken on the requisitions that they could not give a good title, and notice to rescind was given.

On a summons taken out by the purchaser claiming rescission,

Held, that the defect could only be removed (1) by procuring the trustees of the will to be parties; (2) by obtaining the sanction of the court; and (3) by showing that the £12,000 had been properly invested; that, as to (1) and (2), neither on the day of the notice to rescind, nor on that fixed for completion, were the vendors in a position to remove the defect; that, as to (3), there was no evidence that the £12,000 could be so invested; and that, in the absence of any such evidence, the notice to rescind must be deemed effectual.—COOKE AND HOLLAND'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

WATERMENS ACT, 1859:—

Thames navigation—Lightermen and watermen—Steamboat employed in towing barges — Bye-law requiring licensed waterman on steamboat—Validity of—Watermen and Lightermen Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. cxxxiii.), s. 80.—Bye-law 60 of the bye-laws made by the Company of Watermen and Lightermen of the River Thames provided that "every steamboat navigated on the river within the limits of the Act, in the towing of barges, lighters, vessels, and craft, shall have one licensed waterman on board such steamboat, for the purpose of assisting in the management and navigation thereof"; and the bye-law was made under section 80 of the Watermen and Lightermen Amendment Act, 1859, which gave power to make bye-laws "for the government of the company, and for the government and regulation of lightermen and watermen, and for carrying into effect the purposes of the Act and the several powers and authorities thereby vested in the company."

Held, that the bye-law was not one that could be made under section 80, as it was not a bye-law "for the government of the company," or "for the government and regulation of lightermen and watermen," or "for carrying into effect the purposes of the Act and the powers vested in the company"; that the bye-law was therefore ultra vires and bad, and that it was bad also as being unreasonable.—KENNAIRD v. CORY, Q.B.D.

WEIGHTS and MEASURES:—

Coal—Sale—Ticket—"Correct weight"—Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 22, sub-sections 1 and 2.—Section 22 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1889, provides that, where coal exceeding two-hundredweight is conveyed for delivery on sale in a vehicle not belonging to the purchaser, the "correct weight" of the vehicle and of the coal shall be inserted in the ticket which is to be given by the seller to the purchaser.

Held, that the "correct weight" means the correct weight as previously ascertained at the place from which the coal is brought, and not the weight at the time of the delivery of the coal.—KNOWLES v. SINCLAIR, Q.B.D., 188.

WILL:—

1. Absolute gift—Gift over of what is not disposed of—Construction—Repugnancy.—Testator gave his real and personal estate to his wife for her absolute use, "so that during her lifetime, for the purpose of her maintenance and support, she shall have the fullest power to sell and dispose of my said estate absolutely. After her death, as to such parts of my real and personal estate as she shall not have sold or disposed of as aforesaid, subject to the payment of my wife's funeral expenses," he gave the same to trustees upon trusts mentioned. The widow entered into possession of the estate, of which there was a considerable part undisposed of at her death. She left a will disposing of her property.

Held, that the widow took an absolute interest, and that the words following were not sufficient to cut it down to a life interest; and that the gift over of what was undisposed of was void.

In re Pounder, 35 W. R. 226, 56 L. J. Ch. 113, distinguished.—JONES, RE, RICHARDS v. JONES, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 313.

2. Absolute gift of share of personalty—Share settled by codicil "instead of" gift by will—No revocation.—A father by will gave his personal estate to his two daughters, S. and H., equally. By a codicil he directed that "instead of such bequests in the manner expressed in my said will to such daughter absolutely," his executors were to hold the income of the proceeds of his personal estate, after sale and conversion, on trust to pay one moiety to each daughter for life, and on their respective deaths to pay the respective moieties of the fund to their respective children as they should by deed or will appoint, and, in default, to such children equally. There was no gift over in the event of a daughter dying without issue. H. died without ever having had any issue, leaving a will by which she disposed of all her real and personal property.

Held, that there was no intestacy in the event which had happened as to the share in which H. took a life interest by the codicil, as there had been no revocation of the absolute gift in the will.

Doe d. Murch v. Marchant, 6 Man. & G. 813, discussed.—WILCOCK, RE, KAY v. DEWHIRST, Ch.D. Romer, J., 153.

3. Advancement clause—Power—Bonâ fide exercise of.—A testator bequeathed his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income to his children in equal shares. The will contained a proviso authorizing the trustees to apply a certain sum of each child's "presumptive share" towards the "advancement in life" of such child, the trustees to be sole judges of the advisability of such payment, and of what the term "advancement in life" might signify. After the share of one of the children, a married daughter, had become vested, the trustees advanced £250 to her at her request. This sum was intended, as the trustees knew, to be used in discharging a debt owed by the daughter's husband to one of the trustees.

Held, that the power to advance had not been exercised bonâ fide, and was a breach of trust.—MOLYNEUX v. FLETCHER, Q.B.D., 576.

4. Apportionment—Income or capital—Construction of will—Apportionment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 35), ss. 5, 7.—A bequest of shares in a limited company, coupled with a declaration that the shares so bequeathed shall carry the dividend accruing thereon at the testator's death, operates as an exclusion of the Apportionment Act.

A testator bequeathed certain shares in a limited company to trustees upon trust to sell, with a power of postponement, and stand possessed of the proceeds and the shares remaining unsold upon trust to receive the annual produce thereof and hold the same in trust for the testator's children and remoter issue in succession, and declared that every share bequeathed by his will should carry the dividend accruing thereon at his death. The dividends were payable annually.

Held, that the trustees took the whole of the dividend for the year in which the testator died without apportionment, and that such dividend was payable as income to the tenants for life under the will.—LYSAGHT v. LYSAGHT, C.A.

5. Apportionment—Gift of "the whole of the income" for life—Express stipulation against apportionment—Apportionment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 35), ss. 2, 5, 7.—A testator, who was in receipt of the balance of the income from shares in a public trading company which were comprised in a deed of separation, after his wife had been paid an annual sum out of such income, by his will made in 1895 directed that "the whole of the income derived under the said indenture" should after his decease be paid to his wife for life, and gave the residue of his estate to trustees upon trust for other beneficiaries. Upon an originating summons taken out by the trustees of the will,

Held, that the gift to the wife of "the whole of the income derived under the said indenture" amounted to an express stipulation that no apportionment should take place, within the meaning of section 7 of the Apportionment Act, 1870, and that she was entitled to the whole income without any apportionment.—MEREDITH, RE, STONE v. MEREDITH, Ch.D. North, J.

6. Charitable gift—Administration of estate—Mixed fund—Pure and impure personalty—Discretion of trustees—Mortmain—9 Geo. 2, c. 36.—P. by his will directed his trustees to apply one-tenth of his estate over and above £110,000 "to such charitable institutions and objects as my trustees may determine."

Held (affirming North, J.), that the gift extended not only to the pure personal estate, but also to the impure personal estate and to the proceeds of sale of the real estate.

Lewis v. Allenby, 18 W. R. 1127, L. R. 10 Eq. 668, approved.

The principle on which such gifts are construed by the court is correctly stated in Mayor and Aldermen of Faversham v. Ryder, 2 W. R. 573, 5 De G. M. & G. 350; University of London v. Yarrow, 5 W. R. 543, 1 De G. & J. 72; and Carter v. Green, 5 W. R. 856, 3 K. & J. 591.—PIERCY, RE, WHITWHAM v. PIERCY, C.A., 503.

7. Charitable gift—Conditional gift—Perpetuity.—G., by will, gave £10,000 to his trustees upon trust so soon as any land should at any time be given or obtained for the purpose, to employ the same in erecting almshouses for the poor of the parish of P., and in making weekly and other allowances to the inmates, and he gave all the residue of his personal estate to his trustees upon trust, so soon as any land should at any time be given or obtained for the purpose, to erect and maintain thereon an orphanage.

Held, that both gifts were void for remoteness, and not well given to charity.—GYDE, RE, WARD v. LITTLE, Ch.D. North, J.

8. Class gift—Mistake as to number—Practice—Costs—Ascertainment of persons entitled to legacy—Construction of will—Costs out of residue—Rules of Supreme Court, ord. 65, r. 14 (b).—A testator bequeathed the residue of his estate to his trustees, and directed that out of the proceeds they should pay his funeral and testamentary expenses, debts, and legacies. By a codicil he bequeathed £4,000 to his trustees, on trust to pay the annual income thereof to his son R., who was in his uncontrolled discretion to apply the same for the benefit of the testator's son W. and his two children by his late wife. And, after the death of W., the trustees were to stand possessed of the capital and income of the £4,000 in trust for "the said two children of W. in equal shares as tenants in common, to be paid to them on their respectively attaining the age of twenty-one years or marrying under that age." At the date of the codicil there were living four children of W. by his late wife. In an action by the trustees after W.'s death to determine which of his four children were entitled to the £4,000,

Held, that the four children were entitled to the £4,000 in equal shares:

Held, also, that the costs of the action ought to be paid out of the residue of the estate, and not out of the £4,000, and that, if rule 14 (b) of order 65, applied, a direction should be given for the payment of the costs out of the residue.—GROOM, RE, BOOTY v. GROOM, Ch.D. North, J.

9. Construction—Cross remainders implied—Undisposed-of income—Survivor.—A gift of property to take effect "After the death of my son C. and my daughters E. and S. A." as to one-third thereof to the children of C., another third to the children of E., and the remaining third to the children of S. A. must not be construed to mean upon their respective deaths or after the decease of each of them, according to the rule referred to in In re Hutchinson's Trusts, 21 Ch. D. 811, when the application of the rule (having regard to the context of the will) might have the effect of cutting down by one-third a clear gift of the income in favour of tenants in common for life manifest in the earlier part of the will.

Upon the death of a tenant for life of a share in income before the period of distribution, the accumulations of income of such share follow the destination of the corpus, provided the time prescribed by statute for accumulations of income is not exceeded.

A testator, after making certain provisions for his widow and children during their respective lives out of the income of his estate, continued his will as follows: "In case of the death of my son C. leaving children, then one-third . . . of such annual income to such children as hereinafter mentioned . . . and upon the death of my son C. and my said daughters E. and S. A." he gave one-third part of his property to the children of C. in equal shares, and as to the two remaining one-third parts respectively to the children of E. and S. A. respectively in equal shares, "Provided nevertheless that in case of the death of any of my said children without leaving lawful issue the share . . . so given . . . to his or her issue shall go and be divided by and between the issue of the survivor or survivors of my said children in the same manner and proportions, and under the same trusts as hereinbefore given and bequeathed per stirpes." E. died in 1879 leaving issue. The widow died in 1887. C. died in 1893 without issue.

Held, (1) that, "upon the death of my said son C. and my said daughters E. and S. A." must be construed to mean upon the death of the survivor of them; and (2) that the corpus was distributable as to one-third among the children of E. and as to two-thirds among the children of S. A., and, distinguishing In re Bowman, Whytehead v. Boulton, 41 Ch. D. 525, that the word "survivor" must be read in its natural sense.—RUBBINS, GILL v. WORRALL, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

10. Construction—Erroneous recital of indebtedness—Legacy "in addition to sums owing."—A testatrix, who was sole devisee and legatee of her husband, bequeathed to her grandniece "the sum of £300 in addition to the sums owing to her from my late husband's estate." In fact there were no "sums owing" by the husband other than two sums represented by an I O U and a promissory note, which, as the testatrix knew, he had given to the grandniece without consideration.

Held, that having regard to the fact that the testatrix was the universal legatee of her husband, the words of her will amounted to an additional bequest of those two sums.

Construction of wills containing an erroneous recital of indebtedness discussed.—ROWE, RE, PIKE v. HAMLYN, C.A., 357.

11. Construction—Estate pur autre vie—Special occupant.—A lessee of lands which had been demised to him, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns for lives and thirty-one years concurrently, by his will devised the same to trustees in trust for A. B. without any words of limitation in relation to either the legal or the equitable interest. A. B. died intestate. One of the lives in the lease was still in existence, but the thirty-one years had expired.

Held, that the heir-at-law and not the personal representative of A. B. was entitled to the estate pur autre vie.—KING v. KING, M.R. (Ir.).

12. Construction—Estate tail—Fee simple expectant on—Rule in Shelley's case.—The testator, W. Harris, by his will devised lands to trustees upon trust to allow his child to have the profits for her sole use and benefit for her life, and after her death to the use of the heirs of her body, "such freehold lands . . . and premises to be legally conveyed and assured unto such heirs of my child or children in equal shares as they shall severally and respectively attain the age of twenty-one years or be married, and to their several and respective heirs and assigns for ever."

W. Harris died in 1815 leaving one child, Mary, who in 1819 married W. Hartley, and by him had one son, W. H. H., who died in 1894 intestate without any heirs of his body.

The plaintiffs are the heirs of W. Harris and Mary H., and the defendant pleaded possession.

Held, that the fee simple expectant upon the estate tail given to Mary was disposed of by the will of W. Harris to W. H. H., whose heirs the plaintiffs were not.

Further, that W. H. H. did not take as heir, but as purchaser, for the rule in Shelley's case would not apply and vest his reversion in Mary H., because the devise was an executory devise, and not a remainder, for it was to take effect during the continuance of an estate tail, and also the beneficiaries under the devise were not the heirs of the body at large, but designated persons of that class.—FOXWELL v. VAN GRUTTEN (No. 2), Q.B.D.

13. Construction—Perpetuity—Gift of income to the children of A.—Gift over of capital to the children's children—Period of ascertaining class.—Under a bequest to the children of a person simpliciter, only those children in existence at the testator's death will take. Accordingly, where a testator directs the income of a fund to be paid to his sister's children during their lives, and after their death gives the capital of the fund equally between their children, the class of children to take the gift of income will be ascertained at the testator's death, and will consist of his sister's children then in existence; and therefore the gift over to their children will not be too remote.

In re Wenmoth's Estate, 36 W. R. 409, 37 Ch. D. 266, distinguished.—POWELL, RE, CROSLAND v. HOLLIDAY, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 231.

14. Contingent remainders—Infants—Intermediate rents—Equitable limitation.—A. by his will, dated in 1876, devised certain real property to the use of trustees in fee simple upon trust for B. for life, and after her death, in the events which had happened, for her children who should attain twenty-one, or, if daughters, should marry, as tenants in common. A. died in 1881. B. died in 1885, leaving six children, infants and unmarried. The eldest child, E., attained twenty-one in March, 1897; none of the other children had attained twenty-one or married.

Held, that E. was entitled, on attaining twenty-one, to the entirety of the rents until the next child attained a vested interest, and so on.—AVERILL, RE, SALSBURY v. BUCKLE, Ch.D. Romer, J., 460.

15. Election—Heir-at-law—Devise of real estate—Subsequent conveyance to testator—Revocation of devise by operation of law.—By a will, made in 1832, a testator, who died in 1835, devised certain freehold property which at the date of his will he had contracted to purchase but the purchase of which had not been completed, and all other his messuages and real estate whatsoever and wheresoever, to his three sons in manner therein mentioned; and directed that if the purchase had not been completed in his lifetime his executrix should complete same out of his personal estate, and cause such property to be assured and limited to the uses therein expressed concerning the same.

In 1834 the freehold property above mentioned was conveyed to the testator in fee to uses to bar dower.

Held, that the devise of the freehold property was revoked by the form of the conveyance of 1834.

Held also, that the heir-at-law of the testator (his eldest son) was not bound to elect between taking such property as heir and taking the benefits given to him by the will.

Rawlins v. Burgis, 2 V. & B. 382, and Plowden v. Hyde, 2 Sim. N. S. 171, 2 De G. M. & G. 687, followed.

Decision of Stirling, J., affirmed.—JACOB v. JACOB, C.A.

16. Hotchpot clause—Reversionary interest.—Where a testator directs by a hotchpot clause that a fund in which he himself has an interest is to be taken by a residuary legatee as part of his share of the residue under the will, the hotchpot clause operates as a gift to the legatee of the testator's interest in the fund.

A father on his son's marriage covenanted with the trustees of the marriage settlement that his executors should within six months after his death pay a sum to be held in trust for the son for life, with remainder to his wife for life, and after the death of the survivor for the issue of the marriage, and in default of issue in trust for himself absolutely. By his will he provided that all sums which he had given, or had covenanted to give, to a child on marriage should be taken in or towards satisfaction of that child's share under his will, and be brought into hotchpot accordingly. He left the residue of his estate to his son and daughter in equal shares. After his death the executors divided the residue equally, treating the sum settled as part of the son's share. The son died without issue.

Held, that subject to the widow's life interest the son's executors were entitled to the whole of the settled fund.

Decision of the Court of Appeal in In re Cosier, Humphreys v. Gadsden, [1897] 1 Ch. 335, affirmed.—WHEELER v. HUMPHREYS, H.L.

17. Lease—"Lessees or holders of the present leases."—A testator by his will left his real estate to the lessees or holders of the present leases in the quantities, dimensions, and measurements set forth in their respective leases."

Held that the words should not be confined to the original lessees, but included the assignees of the original leases.—KING v. RYMILL, P.C.

18. Leaseholds—Legal tenant for life—Remaindermen—Liability for rent and repairs.—The legal tenant for life of a leasehold house, which was bequeathed directly (without the intervention of trustees) to one for life and then over, is not, in the absence of further provision, liable to pay the rent reserved by or perform the covenants contained in the lease by which the house was demised to the testator.

19. Legacy, pecuniary—Charge on real estate if personalty not sufficient—Subsequent specific devise—Legal presumption rebutted.—A testator bequeathed pecuniary legacies to be charged in the first place upon his personalty and if the same should be insufficient to be charged upon his real estate. He then specifically devised certain lands. There was no residuary devise. The lands specifically devised formed the whole of the testator's realty. The personalty being insufficient, the pecuniary legatees claimed a charge upon the specifically-devised lands.

Held, that the testator had shown an intention to charge the specifically-devised lands with the pecuniary legacies, and that the presumption of law to the contrary was therefore rebutted.—BANK OF IRELAND v. MCCARTHY, H.L.

20. Legacy, pecuniary—Residue.—A testator bequeathed pecuniary legacies to four persons, and left the residue of his property to one of the four and another person and their children in equal shares. He added certain directions with reference to the legacies as to investment, accumulation, and survivorship.

Held, that the word "legacies" could not be extended so as to include the residue, and that, therefore, the directions as to accumulation, investment, and survivorship applied only to the pecuniary legacies.—BOLON v. GILLILAND, V.C. (Ir.).

21. Legacy in trust for A. for life, and afterwards, if he shall have two children who attain twenty-one, as to a moiety for his executors or administrators—Whether A. absolutely entitled to such moiety on two children attaining that age.—Where a testator bequeathed a legacy to trustees upon trust to pay the income to A. for life, and after his decease if A. should have three or more children who should attain twenty-one, for his executors or administrators; and if he should have two such children, as to a moiety for his executors or administrators, and as to the other moiety for the sister of A. and her children: it was Held, that A. having had two children he was absolutely entitled, on their attaining twenty-one years, to a moiety of the fund.—BOGLE v. YORSTOUN, Ch.D. North, J.

22. Portions—Uncertainty—Amount to be fixed by trustees.—Testator directed that the remainder of his farm and goods should be divided equally among his two sons subject to the payment of a portion to each of his five daughters, to be determined by his wife and executors according to the value of their portions of the farm and the services the daughters might have rendered to the family.

Held, that the gift of portions to the daughters was not void for uncertainty.—CONN v. BURNS, V.C. (Ir.).

23. Power of appointment — Exercise of general power—Wills Act, s. 27.—Section 27 of the Wills Act, while making a general gift of property operate as an execution of a power, is confined to property already in existence and does not operate to create the fund that is to be the object of the power of appointment.—WALLINGER'S ESTATE, RE, C.A. (Ir.).

24. Specific bequest—"Other articles of household or domestic use and ornament"—Words ejusdem generis—Cultivation and use for ornamentation.—A testator by his will bequeathed "All my household furniture, plate, linen, china, glass, printed books, musical instruments, wines, liquors, horses, carriages, and other articles of household or domestic use or ornament" to his widow; he gave the residue of his property to trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, and to hold the proceeds of sale upon trust to provide an annuity for his widow, and subject to such annuity to divide the same among certain children of his deceased sisters. The testator died possessed of a large and valuable collection of orchids, which were kept outside the curtilage of his dwelling-house. It was proved that from time to time some of the plants were brought into the dwelling-house for ornament, and such plants were from time to time replaced by others. The orchids were sold for £3,271.

Held, that an inquiry must be directed as to what plants were from time to time used for ornament, and that the testator's widow was entitled to the proceeds of the sale of such plants.—OWEN, RE, PEAT v. OWEN, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

25. Real estate—Devise—Rule in Shelley's case—Heirs taking by descent or purchase—Equitable or legal estate—Execution of disentailing deed by person afterwards found lunatic by inquisition.—A testator devised real estate to trustees in trust to receive the rents and profits to and for the use and benefit of such of his child or children as should be living at the time of his death, and to pay and apply such rents and profits, or so much thereof as the trustees should deem right and proper, in and about the maintenance and education of such child or children until majority or marriage, and in trust to permit such child or children, as they should severally attain the age of twenty-one or be married, to receive and take the rents and profits, if more than one, in equal shares and proportions, for her, his, and their own use and benefit, and for the term of her, his, and their life or lives; and if he left only one child, then to permit and suffer such one child to receive the rents and profits for her sole use and benefit for the term of her life. The testator declared that his will was that, from and after the death of such child or children, the trustees should stand seised of the lands devised to them in trust unto and to the use of the heirs of the body and bodies of such child or children, if more than one, to be equally divided among them, such lands to be legally conveyed and assured unto such heirs of any child or children, if more than one, to be equally divided among them, such lands be legally conveyed and assured unto such heirs of any child or children in equal shares, as they should severally and respectively attain the age of twenty-one years or be married, and to their several and respective heirs and assigns for ever. And the ultimate gift over was introduced in these terms: "And if it shall happen that I shall depart this life leaving no child or children, or issue of any child or children as I shall leave, and the issue of such child or children shall die before he, she, or they shall attain the age of twenty-one years or be married"; then over.

The testator died in 1815, leaving an only child, a daughter, who married and had an only child, a son, who survived her.

Held, that the legal estate remained in the trustees, and that the life estate of the testator's daughter, as well as the estate limited to the heirs of her body, were both equitable estates; that there was nothing in the context to indicate that the words "heirs of the body" were used in any sense different from their ordinary legal meaning of a line of descent; and that consequently the rule in Shelley's case applied, and the testator's daughter took an estate tail.

Harton v. Harton, 7 T. R. 652, approved.

The rule in Shelley's case considered.

A deed executed by a married woman, who was certified at the time to be of competent understanding, will not be invalidated because a jury some years afterwards find that her insanity dated from a time prior to the execution.—VAN GRUTTEN v. FOXWELL, H.L., 426.

26. Signature—Position of signature—15 Vict. c. 24.—Though certain pages of a testamentary document are materially subsequent to the signatures of the testator and witnesses, it may be held that the other pages of the document are substantially a part of the will and that they can be construed for purposes of probate as anterior to the signatures. —GILBERT, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.
